DOCTOR URGED AN OPERATION

Instead I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Was Cured.

Baltimore, Md.—"Nearly four years I suffered from organic troubles, nervousness and headaches and every month would have to stay in bed most of the time. Treatments would relieve me for a time but my doctor was always urging me to have an operation. My sister asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before consenting to an operation. I took five bottles of it and it has completely cured me and my work is a pleasure. I tell all my friends who have any trouble of this kind what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—NELLIE B. BRITTINGHAM, 609 Calverton Rd., Baltimore, Md.

It is only natural for any woman to dread the thought of an operation. So many women have been restored to health by this famous remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, after an operation has been advised that it will pay any woman who suffers from such ailments to consider trying it before submitting to such a trying ordeal.

INCREASE WEIGHT AND VITALITY WITH PHOSPHATE

Nothing Like Plain Bitro-Phosphate to Put on Firm, Healthy Flesh and to Increase Strength, Vigor and Nerve Force.

The average person is beginning to realize more and more that the lack of physical strength and nerve exhaustion (frequently evidenced by excessive thinness) are the direct cause not only of the failure to succeed in life's struggle for the necessities of existence, but also for the handicap in one's social aspirations. Compare the thin, sickly, angular frame with the well rounded form which is usually accompanied by the bloom of health and attractiveness.

That millions of people are conscious of this handicap is evident from the continued appearance in newspapers and magazines of many suggestions proposing various remedies in food or medicine or exercises, either of which might or might not be appropriate for a given case.

Authorities, however, agree that healthy nerve tissue is absolutely essential to a strong, robust body and mind. Weak nerves, while indicated by a multitude of different symptoms, more immediately and generally result in lack of energy, sleeplessness, irritability, depression, etc., which conditions gradually consume the healthy flesh, leaving ugly hollows, a flat chest, bony neck and scrawny arms and legs.

Our bodies need more phosphate than most of them are able to extract from the foods we eat nowadays, and many opinions affirm that there is nothing which may be taken into the human system that so effectively supplies this deficiency as the pure organic phosphate known as bitro-phosphate and sold by good druggists everywhere.

The essential phosphoric food elements in bitro-phosphate assimilated by the nerve cells should soon produce a pleasing change in nerve energy and hence increased vitality and strength. With the burdens of nervousness, sleeplessness, lack of energy, etc., lifted, normal weight with its attractive fullness and ruddy glow of health replaces the former picture of skin and bones.

CAUTION:—Although Bitro-Phosphate is unexcelled for the relief of nervousness and attendant disorders, owing to its tendency to increase weight, one should watch the scales while taking it unless it is the desire to put on flesh.

EUROPEAN CORN BORER IS BIG MENACE TO AMERICA'S LEADING CEREAL CROP

The Illustration Shows the Destructive Work of This New Pest.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The farmer's life sometimes seems to be just one insect pest after another. Just about the time he has learned how to combat all the insect pests in the United States and leans back to take things easy for a spell, somebody manages to import a few new varieties of crop trouble from foreign shores. This time it is the European corn borer that is going to cause the farmer to lose sleep.

The European corn borer probably is the most injurious insect pest that has yet been introduced into this country, according to entomologists of the United States department of agriculture in Farmer's Bulletin 1046. Unless immediate and effective measures are taken to exterminate this pest it seriously threatens the future of America's greatest cereal crop. Already it is known to exist in an area of 500 square miles in Massachusetts and 400 square miles in New York. Its rapid spread to the entire country is possible. It frequently destroys from one-fourth to one-half of the corn crop in infested fields in Massachusetts.

How Borer Injures Corn.

All parts of the corn plant, except the fibrous roots, are tunneled by the larvae or borers. Their most damaging work is done in the stalks and ears, which they partially or totally destroy. They usually enter the upper end of the stalk, near the base of the tassel, and tunnel upwards for a short distance before tunneling down the stalk. The tassel is so weakened by this damage that it breaks over before maturing. Much pollen is thus lost, and grains fail to form normally on the ears. These broken tassels, with outpourings of sawdust-like material at the breaks, are sure signs that the European corn borer is getting in its deadly work.

Many times the borers enter near the junction of the leaf and stalk. Any small hole with sawdust-like material coming out of it indicates the presence of borers. Several borers frequently work in one stalk, reducing it to a mere shell. The nutriment to the developing ear is cut off by this injury. The stalk is weakened, and eventually breaks.

Some of the borers leave the stalk and enter the ears through the husk and also through the stem and cob. Here they feed upon the immature grain and tunnel the cob. The injury to the ears and stalks is further increased by a soft rot which often follows the work of the borers and reduces the interior of infested plants to a decaying, putrid mass with an obnoxious odor.

Two Generations Each Year.

There are two generations of the European corn borer each year. They are continuously damaging the corn in infested fields from before tasseling time until winter stops their activities. They remain as nearly full-grown borers within their tunnels throughout the winter and resume feeding in the spring.

The chief danger to the nation's corn crop lies in the possibility of borer-infested plants being transported into sections where the borer does not already exist. To prevent this all plant quarantine laws must be strictly enforced with regard to plants likely to be infested.

Quarantine measures must be supplemented by careful clean-up operations in infested areas. Destroy all plant material likely to harbor borers.

Burning Most Effective.

In infested areas burning has proved the most effective means of destroying the borers. Burn all of the previous year's cornstalks, corn stubble, crop remnants, stalks of garden plants, weeds and grasses that may contain over-wintering borers. Do this in the late fall, winter or early spring, while the borers are within such material and the vegetation is dry enough to burn readily.

Under the most favorable circumstances the burning of infested plants will require considerable labor and expense, but it must be remembered that the insect seriously threatens the corn-growing industry of America, and that radical and effective measures must be adopted to control it.

To be prepared to combat the European corn borer successfully when it invades your corn field write the division of publications, U. S. department of agriculture, Washington, D. C., for Farmers' Bulletin 1046. "Forewarned Is Forearmed."

MANY PLANTS ATTACKED

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Not satisfied with threatening America's great corn crop, the European corn borer feeds on many other valuable crops as well as weeds. Department of Agriculture entomologists say further investigations probably will show that other plants are infested. Where corn is not grown, or in the vicinity of badly infested corn fields, the borers have been found feeding on the following plants:

Swiss chard	Redroot, pigweed
Oats	Lamb's quarter
Beets	Foxtail grass
Spinach	Lady's thumb
String beans	Apple of Peru
Potatoes	Thistle
Tomatoes	Dock
Beggars' ticks	Wild hemp
Purslane	Goldenrod
Scouring rush	Burdock
Dahlias	Turnips
Chrysanthemums	Ragweed
Gladiolus	Horseweed
Geraniums	Crab grass
Timothy	Panic grass
Barnyard grass

MAKE CONTAINERS UNIFORM

Cans, Jars and Other Receptacles Should Be Standardized—Advertisement in Itself.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the first essentials to satisfactory marketing arrangements is standardized products. Cans, jars, and other containers should be uniform in pack, appearance, quality, and condition. Every container which is fully up to the standard represented by the label or brand will then be an advertisement in itself and often a guaranty to further purchases.

GENERAL FARM NOTES

Better farming, better marketing mean better living on the farm.

Crops will not be fed by the plant-food that goes down the stream.

A rank growth of weeds becomes an asset when plowed under before they make seed.

A repair kit for mending breaks in harness will save many trips to town in rush times.

Too many plants to the foot of row is just as bad as weeds. Keep the plants thinned.

PUBLIC HIGHWAYS

STATE OFFICIALS WILL AID

Committee Named to Bring About Closest Co-operation in Construction of Highways.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

To bring about the most effective co-operation between the federal and state governments in the big program of highway construction now under way, A. R. Hirst, president of the American Association of State Highway Officials, has named, at the request of the secretary of agriculture, a committee to act with the department of agriculture's bureau of public roads in carrying into effect the federal aid road act and its amendments.

Following are the state representatives selected by Mr. Hirst:

George P. Coleman, state highway commissioner of Virginia; S. E. Bradt, state superintendent of highways of Illinois; Charles J. Bennett, state highway commissioner of Connecticut; W. S. Keller, state highway engineer of Alabama, and Ira R. Browning, state road engineer of Utah.

Stimulated by recent liberal amendments and added appropriations to the original federal aid road act, road-building plans in the states have received tremendous impetus. Many of the states have provided by large bond issues and otherwise, amounts much larger than will be required to match the federal appropriations.

Up to May of this year, 1,057 project statements for federal aid roads had been approved by the secretary of agriculture. They involve the improvement of 10,580 miles of roads at an estimated cost of $92,983,121.81, of which the federal aid requested was $36,576,857.48. The amount of federal funds available on March 1 for road building was more than $72,900,000, which, under the law must be matched by an equal amount from the states, making a total of $145,800,000, which includes approximately $9,800,000 from federal and state sources for roads in the national forests. Funds that will become available on July 1, with equal contributions from the states, will provide an additional $198,000,000 for federal road work, making an aggregate sum of $343,800,000 available for the calendar year. It is expected, however, that the states will defer taking up part of the available funds until 1920.

War conditions, which almost immediately followed the passage of the first federal aid act in July, 1916, brought scarcity of labor, materials and transportation, and restricted road-building projects to those absolutely essential to winning the war. Thus the road program was held back for more than a year at a time when demands for improved roads increased more rapidly than in any previous period. State and federal forces alike are working to get highway construction under way as rapidly as contracts can be let and as soon as road-building forces, somewhat disorganized during the war period, can again be placed on an efficient working basis.

Behind China on Highways.

America has developed its railroads far beyond those of Europe, but it is behind even China in the utilization of its wagon roads and waterways, those reliable avenues of cheap transportation. It is time we made an effort to catch up with China.

George Ade on Good Roads.

George Ade says. Good roads cost money, but show me a community which has invested in hard roads such as can be used at all times of the year and which now would be willing to go back to the mudholes for a cash consideration.

Good Roads Are Prerequisite.

Good roads are prerequisite to successful motortruck operation. It is believed that few motortruck operators realize the increased expense which results from travel on poor roads.

YOUNGSTER WAS A DIPLOMAT

After His Explanation, What Was There for the "Slender" Schoolmistress to Do?

The principal of a certain Indiana school is very thin. Also she is very sensitive about this quality. At her school no one mentions it.

Recently several of her boys had a long series of quarrels with the boys of the neighboring ward school. The principal talked and talked against fighting, but with no results. The fighting continued. Finally, one day, she announced that she would give the combatants at her school a thrashing if any more frays followed. A long time and all was quiet. Then one day came the usual fight and, of course, the inevitable lining up for the "lickin'."

"Before I punish you, I want you to tell me what you were fighting about this time," the principal told the recreant ones.

All were silent, but finally the least fighter spoke up. "Well, the boys up at that building teased up and said that we had the skinniest principal in town, and we told them you weren't skinny at all, but slender, and then they began fighting."

Needless to say no one got thrashed.

Ouch!

Renewal—Hello, old man! How's yourself an' family an' ever'thing?

Banker—How do.

Renewal—I'd like the favor of an extension of sixty or ninety days on my note.

Banker—Sign here.

Renewal—But you only made it thirty days!

Banker—You said sixty, and your old note's thirty past due.

True Difference.

"You never join in when they sing 'The Star-Spangled Banner,'" remarked the reproachful friend.

"Ever hear me try to sing?"

"No."

"Then you don't understand my position. I have too much respect for our national hymn to try to sing it."

Those Mad Wags.

"So you've quit carrying around a corkscrew?"

"Yes; it was such a bore."

There is a certain brand of charity that will give a man a crust of bread and then steal his coat.

HARD TO TRACE ITS DESCENT

Story of the Standard Yard and Its Origin Must Be Accepted With Some Reservation.

The picturesque story of the relation between the length of Henry I's arm and the standard yard which the lord chancellor will disinter from the walls of Westminster palace is one we should all like to accept, writes a correspondent of the Manchester Guardian. But the historical standards have changed so often that there must be many gaps in the chain of descent. If the yard and the pound are as described they must be exact copies of the less romantic standards of the board of trade, which date from no later than 1884. And why prosy Victorians should have buried them in a wall is hard to understand. The oldest standard in existence, so far as I know, is the yard of Henry VII, which should be in the Jewel house, but as it has only 35.983 inches it is no longer good measure. Parliament had a standard troy pound and a new yard constructed in 1760. They were deposited with the clerk to the House of commons, but in the fire of 1834 the pound was lost and the yard injured. This yard was then lost sight of until 1891, when it was placed in the lobby of the clerk's residence, together with a standard "stone" of 14 pounds.

Mirror History.

In the early part of the sixteenth century mirrors first became articles of household furniture and decoration. Previous to that time—from the twelfth to the end of the fifteenth century—pocket mirrors or small hand mirrors, carried at the girdle, were adjuncts to ladies' toilettes. The pocket mirrors consisted of small circular plaques of polished metal fixed in a shallow circular box covered with a lid.

First Time Reckoning.

Perhaps the first reference to attempts to reckon time by mechanical means is found in Isaiah, xxxviii, 8, written supposedly about 713 B. C., "the sun dial of Ahaz." Pliny says that Anaximander invented a sun dial about 550 B. C. The first sun dial at Rome was placed in the temple of Quirinus, about 293 B. C., when time was divided into hours. The clepsydra, or water clock, was the best time recorder invented.

Modern Greek Language.

The language spoken by the educated classes, that used in the newspapers and other modern literature of Greece, differs from the Romaic used by the lower classes. The former is distinguished by a greater resemblance to the Greek of antiquity, which renders it easy for anyone who has a satisfactory acquaintance with ancient Greek to read the literary Greek of the present day.

Needles Long in Use.

Steel needles were found among the Kaffirs in Africa, and elsewhere, so that they may have had early aboriginal invention in more than one country. The earliest European eyed needles were of bone and ivory, sometimes of bronze. In 1370 steel needles were certainly being made in Nuremburg, possibly in England also, though until 1563 the raw material came from Spain.

Business Poor in the Hamlets.

Tarnips—"I say, old chap, what sort of business did you do with your Shakespearan repertoire this season?" Carrots—"Rotten! 'Twelfth Night' didn't see the second night; 'As You Like It' wasn't as they liked it; 'A Winter's Tale' couldn't be continued; 'The Midsummer Night' was frosty; the 'Merchant' did no trade, and 'The Tempest' swamped us."—Cartoons Magazine.

How the Cricket Sings.

The wings of a cricket are folded horizontally and form when closed slender, thread-like tapering points beyond the wing covers. It is supposed to be by friction of the wing covers against each other and from a peculiarity of their structure, that the males produce the sound which makes these insects so well known.—Christian Herald.

Over Bones of Failures.

Epitaphs in the Cemetery of Failure: He lacked tact; worry killed him; he was too sensitive; he couldn't say "no"; he did not find his place; a little success paralyzed him; he did not care how he looked; he did not guard his weak point; he was too proud to take advice; he did not fall in love with his work.

For Bed, Board and Laundry.

Here is a perfect gem of misapplied English, from a woman answering an advertisement for a French governess "au pair": "I know a little English, and could give easy, at once, lessons in French, for which I will be nourished, lying down and bleached, who, I think, are the conditions 'au pair.'"—Boston Transcript.

Violin "Camouflage."

The word "fecit" is of Latin origin, and means made, or manufactured. It was in general use by the Cremona violin makers; and has been copied by modern makers, chiefly for deception. The modern imitators of old violins retained the old form of affixing the date.

To Clean a Ceiling.

To clean a blackened ceiling, apply a coating of starch and water, to the part that has been discolored by the gas with a piece of clean flannel. Let it dry, then brush lightly off with a brush, and no marks will remain.

Wise Provision of Nature.

Man always worships something; always he sees the infinite shadowed forth in something finite; and indeed can and must so see it in any finite thing, once tempt him well to fix his eyes thereon.—Carlyle.

Brightening the Carpet.

Ammonia and warm water used with a flannel cloth to give a proper brisk rub-over will help decidedly in freshing the colors. The carpet must be well swept, shaken, or vacuum cleaned first.

Counted 93,000 Ants.

Daily Thought.

In adversity it is easy to despise life; the truly brave man is he who can endure to be miserable.—Martial.

Let Action Follow Thought.

A philosopher once said that there is no value to any thought, no matter how fine or noble, unless it is transformed into action. If you feel uplifted by beautiful music, do something that will tally with your mood, and then the music has been worth while. If you read something that is inspiring, at once do something, no matter how small, that is a little different and a little superior to your routine. The theory applies with equal truth to the reading of books as more than a pastime.—Chicago American.

Sacrilege.

The Kansas Industrialist says skunk oil and rattlesnake oil are worthless as liniments for rheumatism and kindred ills. Just how far should college papers be allowed to go in interference with free beliefs founded on the traditions of centuries? Pretty soon these young whippersnappers will be telling us that asafoetida amulets ward off neither germs nor devils, and that red beads around the neck won't stop nosebleed.—Grit.

Labor-Saving Devices.

Water is used to transport the coal through pipes, and in Oregon a blast of air is used to load hay in freight cars. The hay is drawn up to a deck or float beside the car to be loaded, a crane then lifts the hay to this platform, and a blower, driven by a gasoline engine, hurls the hay forcibly into the car, packing it better than can be done with old-fashioned hand fork.

Substitutes for Hickory.

Specifications for handles for intrenching tools were prepared during the war by the forest products laboratory at Madison, allowing seven substitute species in place of hickory and also certain minor defects, thereby making possible greatly increased production for this class of material and at the same time giving satisfactory handles.—University Bulletin.

Look Decent.

Bobby's father was a photographer, and the little fellow had often seen him take pictures and heard him admonish the people to "Look pleasant, please." One day he obtained a small, wornout camera and pretended to take his little playmate's picture. Getting her to stand for a snapshot, he directed: "Now, Hazel, stand still and look decent, please."

In Bermuda small ground sharks are used for food and much appreciated by all classes. The fish average from eight to ten pounds and sell for 12 cents each. In Honolulu the hammerhead shark is frequently seen in the markets and its flesh is considered very nourishing and is extensively salted.

Lake With No Outlet.

Lake Chad, in the heart of East Africa, has no known outlet for the many rivers pouring into it. Its waters rise and fall with great rapidity. The Alexander expedition records that frequently spaces over which they had sailed in the morning had by evening become stretches of dried mud.

Be Master of Your Job.

Some folks peter out because they get cold feet. That's not elegant language, but you know what it means better than you do any other way of saying the same thing. And since this is written for your benefit you had better pocket any mock modesty and get ready to roll up your sleeves and clean up. There are too many of the delicate-fingered class who want to be at the manicurist's when they ought to be at the washtub and the work bench. We like to see well-kept hands, but we have learned that in most cases the chap who is contributing to progress has other jobs for his digits so beware of getting afraid of the job. You are supposed to be master of it. If the thing gets hard give it a few extra kinks and you will advance for the effort. In these days we must keep warmed up by the job and when the job is kept warm it works easier.—Grit.

An Early Newspaper.

In this day of the omnipresent newspaper an item of odd interest in a coming sale of rare literary survivals is a copy of one of the earliest newspapers issued, an Italian sheet of four pages printed in 1563. This was not many years after the custom started in Venice by which the news of a military victory or some other event of popular interest was circulated and sold for a "gazetta," the smallest Venetian coin. The sheets were reprinted in various towns and the system could hardly have been operated without paper-sellers like modern newsboys crying their wares. The price came down to 1/2 as with the newspaper title "Gazette," and the 1562 news sheet, which tells of the official visit of the papal nuncio Lipomani in Poland to establish the inquisition in that country, has survived the centuries with its pages uncut, as if unopened.—Christian Science Monitor.

Turkey Ranches.

Exclusive turkey ranches are found in the unsettled foothill regions of California and in parts of Arizona and other western states where 1,000 or more turkeys are raised each season. The establishments are located where the range is unlimited and the natural food of the turkey, such as grasshoppers and other insects, green vegetables and the seeds of various weeds and grasses, is abundant. Advantage also is taken on these ranches of the turkey's relish for acorns, and where these are plentiful but little grain need be used for fattening in the fall. The large flocks of turkeys are herded, during the day by men either on foot or on horseback, and by dogs especially trained for the work.

Color in Sound.

Tone color is part of the physical response of the voice to the play of feeling and, being physical, it is correspondingly hard to describe in writing. Every individual, nevertheless, has command of and unconsciously uses a certain form of tone color every day of his life. The ordinary man, he does not need to be a singer, can by the mere giving out of breath in a variety of sighs, express in color such varied emotions as contemplation, surprise, pleasure, horror, contentment and amusement. Tone color in singing is the vitalization of that breath before adding to it the spoken word. It, when fully acquired, follows the mood as unconsciously as the hand follows the eye or the slightest thought.

Silkworms of the Sea.

The mollusc plant, poetically known as the "silkworm of the sea," not only spins a very beautiful silk, which is utilized to some extent commercially, but produces a surprising abundance of jet black pearls. A scientist, making a study of this, collected large numbers of specimens and obtained an average of one pearl from every five of the mollusks. As many as ten were found in a single shell. The pearls of the pinna are usually spherical and highly polished, and are already used to a considerable extent in countries bordering on the Mediterranean for the adornment of brooches and other articles of jewelry.

Simplest Postoffice.

South America has the simplest postoffice in the world. Opposite Tierra del Fuego is a very high, rocky cliff overhanging the Strait of Magellan, and from one of the rocks is suspended by a long chain a barrel which receives mail. To be sure, there is no postmaster nor is there any regular letter carrier or collector, but every ship that goes through the strait stops and sends a boat to this curious little postoffice, looks over the letters that are in it to see if there are any for the men on board that particular ship, and places therein letters for seamen on board ships that are known to be headed for the strait.

Arms and Legs.

According to many measurements made at the anthropological laboratory in London the right arm in human beings is in a majority of cases longer than the left arm, while on the contrary the left leg is longer than the right leg. Sometimes, however, the relative proportions are exactly reversed, but seldom does perfect equality exist between the two sides. The tendency of the right arm to exceed the left in strength is sometimes greater in men than in women, while equality of strength in the two arms occurs almost twice as frequently with women as with men.

Magnificent Ferns.

The giant tree ferns of the Bontoc region of the Philippine islands are the tallest and most graceful tree ferns in the world, not excepting the South American tree ferns which grow to a majestic size. Most tree ferns have short trunks, but the Philippine ferns resemble palms, the older trees growing up into tall, slender trunks. They grow along the edge of the forest and quickly spring up in clearings, soon overtopping thickets of bamboo and other smaller growths. The seeds are minute and die almost instantly after they fall unless they find favorable soil. It is also practically impossible to transplant the young ferns. Various attempts have been made to transplant small plants of this beautiful fern to botanical gardens in the United States, but thus far without success. Probably the giant tree fern may remain solely a native of the Philippines, where it performs a great service in beautifying the landscape and is cherished by the natives.

Simplon Hospice.

The Simplon is a famous Alpine mountain in Switzerland, having a height of over 11,000 feet. The Simplon road, one of the greatest engineering feats of modern times, leads over a shoulder of this mountain (Simplon pass) at a height of 6,592 feet. This road was begun in 1800 by Napoleon, and was completed in 1806. It was from 25 to 30 feet wide, and nowhere has an incline greater than 1 in 12. It carries across 611 bridges, over numerous galleries cut out of natural rock, or built of solid masonry and through great tunnels. Close to the highest point is the "New Hospice," which is one of the 20 edifices on this route for shelter of travelers. It was once used as a prison for famous political prisoners of France and Italy. It is occupied by an order of monks whose life is devoted to giving succor to travelers in distress.

Cleopatra's Needle.

The two obelisks known as Cleopatra's needles, were set up at the entrance of the Temple of the Sun, in Heliopolis, in Egypt, by Tuthmes III, about 1831 B. C. They were cut from granite brought down the Nile. Two centuries after their erection Rameses III had the stones covered with carvings setting forth his own greatness. Twenty-three years before Christ, Augustus moved the monument to Alexandria. One obelisk was finally erected in London and placed upon the Thames embankment. Subsequently the other obelisk was presented to the United States. The one in the Thames embankment bears an inscription on the stone, over 68 feet high, tells about the conquests of the Egyptian king.

Evergreen Window Boxes.

A very beautiful outside window box trees of different species of evergreens or cedar trees in a substantial wooden or metal window box. The very small trees of different species of evergreens can be secured at a slight cost, and they will grow in an ordinary soil, and it is wonderful how little attention they require after they are once established. In many places these miniature trees are found growing among rocks and shrubs where there is little soil or moisture and this is why they do so well in outside window boxes where it is difficult to give them much attention. Large vases and boxes on the veranda or lawn can be filled with these evergreens and they will remain beautiful throughout the entire winter when it is almost impossible to have anything of beauty growing.

Coal on the Prairies.

According to estimates prepared by experts there is enough soft coal in the four western provinces of Canada to supply the world for a couple of centuries. The mines of Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia have scarcely been tapped, but have produced a total in one year of 6,000,000 tons, to the value of over $25,000,000. The coal is of a very good grade, and is equally serviceable for steam purposes and household heating. The Canadian commercial geological survey has estimated that the coal beds contain a total of 143,490,000,000 tons, covering an area of 87,000 square miles.

Mother Wasp's Good Work.

So far as known, only one small insect—a wasp of the sphex family—among the millions of creatures belonging to a lower order than man, has ever employed the aid of a tool to accomplish a desired result. The mother wasp of this family digs a tunnel in the ground, deposits her eggs in it, and after the wasp has made its tunnel and deposited the eggs, it finishes its task by ramming down pellets of earth, little stones, clay into the mouth of the tunnel. This is the race habit of these wasps. It is recorded as undoubted authority that one inventive mother, when the mouth of the tunnel was covered to a level with the rest of the ground about it, brought a quantity of the grains of dirt to the spot, and picking up a small pebble in her mandibles, used it as a hammer in pounding them down with rapid strokes, thus making the spot as firm and as hard as the surrounding surface. Then she departed, brought more dirt, picked up the pebble again and used it.

Mystery in Plant's Presence.

The Chilean provinces of Atacama, Tarapaca and Tacna are in the rainless region, or desert country, west of the Andes, and are entirely devoid of vegetation. The winds in all of this region are from the east, and in passing over the elevated perpetual snows of the Andes are stripped of their moisture and arrive on the coast perfectly dry. The last rain, a slight shower, which fell in Antofagasta, in Atacama province, was the first rain which had fallen in 16 years. The last rain which fell in Iquique, in Tarapaca province, was the first in 24 years. With both of these showers a notable phenomenon occurred. The hills back of these cities assumed a green tint from a little plant which sprang up almost in a night. The query is, "From where did this plant come?"

Mirrors.

Remove the silvering from the glass around the scratch so that the clear space will be about a quarter of an inch wide. Thoroughly clean the clear space with a clean cloth and alcohol. Near the edge of a broken piece of looking glass mark out a piece of silvering a little larger than the clear space on the mirror to be repaired. Now place a very minute drop of mercury on the center of the patch and allow it to remain for a few minutes, clear away the silvering around the patch, and slide the latter from the glass. Place it over the clear spot on the mirror, and gently press it down with a tuft of cotton. This is a difficult operation and some practice is necessary before trying it on a large mirror.

Forest Service Data.

More than 35,000 plant specimens, representing 4,800 species, have been collected in national forests and on purchase areas by forest service officers in connection with the extensive studies made of the distribution, natural habits and economic importance of the range flora. The data obtained has direct application to many phases of range management, such as intensive range utilization, especially with reference to the influence of different types of grazing animals, the determination of the important forage plants and the utilization of each type at the time and by the class of stock to which it is best adapted. Use of these data is also made in the detection, eradication and fencing of poisonous plants, in natural range reseeding and other range studies.

No End to Muskrats.

Millions of muskrats (?) meet demands for their fur are trapped from marshes and swamps that are, for the most part, unprotected, millions of skins being taken each year. So long as the natural breeding places remain undisturbed and reasonably close seasons are maintained there is little likelihood of the numbers of the animals being depleted, according to biologists of the United States department of agriculture. With adequate protection in the breeding season and with the present habitat available from 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 skins may be taken in North America annually without depletion of the supply.

Long and Short Pipe Lines.

The 36-mile oil pipes linking the Clyde and the Forth, one of the engineering works with which the war has endowed Britain, is proportionate in length to its island home. Continents have oil pipes of a length which completely dwarf the very respectable dimensions of the Clyde-to-Forth achievement. America has a petroleum pipe extending from Texas and California across the Isthmus of Panama, being in fact a double pipe, one line having been laid before the opening of the canal. Asia claims the longest oil pipe in the world, or at any rate one of the longest, in that conduit which runs between Baku and Batoum, a distance of 25 miles.

History Told by Fossils.

Many of the animals of the Jurassic period were of great size. In the chalk formations fossil remains have been found in many places. In the more recent times fossils are common. Fossils are the preserved remains, impressions or traces of animals or plants of past ages. The study of fossils adds to the history of the earth to scientists who know how to interpret the records. Sometimes fossils occur in vast numbers, crowded together in the rock. Sometimes the animal or plant was complete when it was imbedded in the rock, or was originally composed of, the remains or minute organisms, tiny shells and spicules (needle-like bodies) that Father of Chemistry.

The first great original investigator in the realm of modern chemistry, and the father of that science, was Dr. Joseph Black, who was born of Scotch parentage in France in 1728, and died in Edinburgh 119 years ago. His work as a scientific discoverer revolutionized chemistry and disproved scores of theories that were relics of the superstitious dark ages. By proving that a gas not identical with atmospheric air was found in alkalies, he made it plain that various dissimilar gases might exist, and thus laid the foundation for pneumatic chemistry. He introduced the name and theory of latent heat, and this discovery suggested to Watt, his pupil, his improvements in the steam engine. After a long and useful life Black died while sitting at a table, and so gently that he did not drop the glass of milk which he held at the moment in his hand, but rested it upon his knee, and was at first thought to have fallen asleep. Doctor Black's original theories inspired many of the most wonderful and useful inventions of the last century.

Balloting Abroad.

The sign of the cross on the ballot paper indicates the voter's choice in this country, but in some foreign lands the "method of voting is different." In Belgium, for instance, on the voting paper a black square with a white spot in the center is printed after each candidate's name. The elector votes by blackening out as many white spots as he is entitled to. In Greece leaden balls are substituted for voting papers. The ballot boxes are so constructed that the voter can drop one of the balls secretly into a chosen receptacle. In some districts of the United States ballot papers have been supplanted by voting machines, which indicate the state of the poll throughout the day of the election. In one or two countries, in order to obtain greater secrecy, the voting papers are inclosed in envelopes before being dropped into the ballot boxes.

Timely Thoughts.

Every first of January that we arrive at is an imaginary milestone on the turnpike track of human life; at once a resting place for thought and reflection, and a starting point for fresh exertion in the performance of our journey. The man who does not at least propose to himself to be better this year than he was last, must be either very good or very bad, indeed! And only to propose to be better is something, if nothing else it is an acknowledgment of our need to be so, which is the first step towards amendment. But in fact, to propose is one thing, to do well is some sort to do well, positively, for there is no such thing as a stationary point in human endeavors; he who is not worse today than he was yesterday, is better; and he who is not better, is worse!—Charles Lamb.

Monarch Feared Death.

Versailles is a little more than 14 miles from Paris. Its palace was built by Louis XIV. This king of brilliant personality and compelling magnetism had a palace at St. Germain, a favorite summer residence of his ancestors, but Louis Quatorze disliked it because from its windows he could see the tower of St. Denis, a church in which slept in vaults and mausoleums the royalty of France. Louis was enjoying the full richness of life and he hated to be reminded that the time would come when inexorable Atropos would snip the thread of his life. And yet it is interesting to note in this connection that when the king actually came face to face with death he remarked, "It is not so hard to die as I thought it would be."

Appendicitis and Tuberculosis.

A French physician has made a report of some observations made by him on patients in whom there were to be noted the presence of congestion and other symptoms of pulmonary tuberculosis existing along with chronic appendicitis and which disappeared completely after the removal of the appendix. The pathologic condition of the appendix was discovered accidentally in one case. In three of the cases consultants did not accept his diagnosis until two of the apparently doomed patients regained their health after the removal of the appendix. The third still rejects an operation.

May Remove Spots.

One of our readers writes that she has moved into a new apartment that is in perfect condition except for several grease spots that are very prominent from the dining room wall paper. She wonders if they can be removed. If milady calls a little patience to her aid she should be able to remove grease spots from wall paper without much trouble. Let her rub upon the spot powdered chalk, allow it to remain about half an hour and then rub it on again with a soft brush or cloth. The disfiguring spots should entirely disappear after several treatments of this sort.

Fighting Off.

Jack and Jim had not kept their New Year's resolutions. They were afraid to do so. They were at it hammer and tongs. Jack backed up to Jim, but Jim did not retreat. "You," he said, "you're afraid to fight." "No," said Jack, "I'm not afraid." "You are," said Jim, edging away. "You're afraid to fight by yourself." "By myself?" gasped Jack. "I am by myself." "No, you're not," said Jim, edging away. "You're with Half Shoes for Women in the Black and the Brown Kid.

Women are wearing half shoes this spring, both because the new oxfords are so attractive in appearance, and because the season has been favorable for the very general wearing of low shoes.

Those who do not buy their shoes by chance, but use discrimination in making a selection, enjoy exercising their choice among the several new styles at Lawrence's. These show distinctive character, assured style, correct fitting quality, fine leathers, high quality shoemaking. They set properly, without gaping at side and heel. All so made to keep their shape in service, and to wear well.

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies. This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucus or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic cuts this slime and mucus and removes it. A nauceated feeling is sometimes experienced when the mucus is breaking loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appet te return and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Ford
THE UNIVERSAL CAR

Worldwide distribution and the continually growing demand for Ford cars are the best proofs of Ford value. Ford cars are utilities. They are positive necessities—for they have revolutionized modern business, brought country and city together, and opened up new life to the family. The Ford car has become a necessary part of everyday life.

Ford cars are not an experiment. Years of concentration on a single model have produced a motor car of proved value. It is as important in modern life as the mail service or telephone. Behind the Ford car is genuine Ford service, by competent mechanics using genuine Ford parts—with regular standard Ford prices. That is the service given by this agency.

WILSON GIVES PEACE TREATY TO SENATORS

Makes Strong Plea for the Adoption of the Document Without Changes.

MUST MAINTAIN NEW ORDER

All Conferees, the President Says, Were Agreed That League of Free Nations Was an Absolute Necessity for World's Peace.

Washington, July 10.—President Wilson in presenting the peace treaty and the League of Nations to the senate today in an epochal session explained to the senators and to the American people his reasons for asking ratification without change or reservation. He spoke as follows:

Gentlemen of the Senate:

The treaty of peace with Germany was signed at Versailles on the 28th of June. I avail myself of the earliest opportunity to lay the treaty before you for ratification and to inform you with regard to the work of the conference by which that treaty was formulated.

The treaty constitutes nothing less than a world settlement. It would not be possible for me even to summarize of to construe its manifold provisions in an address which must of necessity be something less than a treatise. My services and all the information I possess will be at your disposal and at the disposal of your committee on foreign relations at any time, either informally or in session, as you may prefer; and I hope that you will not hesitate to make use of them.

I shall at this time, prior to your own study of the document, attempt only a general characterization of its scope and purpose.

Cognizant of Paris Moves.

In one sense, no doubt, there is no need that I should report to you what was attempted and done at Paris. You have been daily cognizant of what was going on there—of the problems with which the peace conference had to deal and of the difficulty of laying down straight lines of settlement anywhere on a field on which the old lines of international relationship, and the new alike, followed so intricate a pattern and were for the most part cut so deep by historical circumstances which dominated action where it would have been best to ignore or reverse them.

The cross currents of politics and of interest must have been evident to you. It would be presuming in me to attempt to explain the questions which arose or the many diverse elements that entered into them. I shall attempt something less ambitious than that and more clearly suggested by my duty to report to the congress the part it seemed necessary for my colleagues and me to play as the representatives of the government of the United States.

That part was dictated by the role America has played in the war and by the expectations that had been created in the minds of the peoples with whom we had associated ourselves in that great struggle.

Reason for Entering War.

The United States entered the war upon a different footing from every other nation except our associates on this side the sea. We entered it, not because our material interests were directly threatened or because any special treaty obligations to which we were parties had been violated, but only because we saw the supremacy, and even the validity, of right everywhere put in jeopardy and free government likely to be everywhere imperiled by the intolerable aggression of a power which respected neither right nor obligation and whose very system of government flouted the rights of the citizens as against the autocratic authority of his governors.

And in the settlements of the pence we have sought no special reparation for ourselves, but only the restoration of right and the assurance of liberty everywhere that the effects of the settlement were to be felt. We entered the war as the disinterested champions of right and we interested ourselves in the terms of the peace in no other capacity.

Allies' Hopes at Low Ebb.

The hopes of the nations allied against the central powers were at a very low ebb when our soldiers began to pour across the sea. There was everywhere amongst them, except in their stoutest spirits, a somber foreboding of disaster. The war ended in November eight months ago, but you have only to recall what was feared in midsummer last, only four short months before the armistice, to realize what it was that our timely aid accomplished alike for their morale and their physical safety.

The first, never-to-be-forgotten action at Chateau Thierry had already taken place. Our redoubtable soldiers and marines had already closed the gap the enemy had succeeded in opening for their advance upon Paris—had already turned the tide of battle back toward the frontiers of France and begun the rout that was to save Europe and the world. Thereafter the Germans were to be always forced back, back, were never to thrust successfully forward again. And yet there was no confident hope.

Put New Heart Into Allies.

The mere sight of our men—of their vigor, of the confidence that showed itself in every movement of their stalwart figures and every turn of their swinging march, in their steady comprehending eyes and easy discipline, in the indomitable air that added spirit to everything they did—made everyone who saw them that memorable day realize that something had happened that was much more than a mere incident in the fighting, something very different from the mere arrival of fresh troops.

They were recognized as crusaders, and as their thousands swelled to millions their strength was seen to mean salvation. And they were fit men to carry such a hope and make good the assurance it forecast. Finer men never went into battle; and their officers were worthy of them.

Comrades in Great Cause.

This is not the occasion upon which to utter a eulogy of the armies America sent to France, but perhaps, since I am speaking of their mission, I may speak also of the pride I shared with every American who saw or dealt with them there. They were the sort of men America would wish to be represented by, the sort of men every American would wish to claim as fellow countrymen and comrades in a great cause.

They were terrible in battle, and gentle and helpful out of it, remembering the mothers and the sisters, the wives and the little children at home. They were free men under arms, not forgetting their ideals of duty in the midst of tasks of violence. I am proud to have had the privilege of being associated with them and of calling myself their leader.

Hard Task at Peace Table.

And the compulsion of what they stood for was upon us who represented America at the peace table. It was our duty to see to it that every decision we took part in contributed, so far as we were able to influence it, to quiet the fears and realize the hopes of the peoples who had been living in that shadow, the nations that had come by our assistance to their freedom. It was our duty to do everything that it was within our power to do to make the triumph of freedom and of right a lasting triumph in the assurance of which men might everywhere live without fear.

Difficulties Hard to Adjust.

These were not tasks which the conference looked about to find and went out of its way to perform. They were inseparable from the settlements of peace. They were thrust upon it by circumstances which could not be overlooked. The war had created them. In all quarters of the world old established relationships had been disturbed or broken and affairs were at loose ends, needing to be mended or united again, but could not be made what they were before. They had to be set right by applying some uniform principle of justice or enlightened expediency. And they could not be adjusted by merely prescribing in a treaty what should be done.

New states were to be set up which could not hope to live through their first period of weakness without assured support by the great nations that had consented to their creation and won for them their independence.

Future international conventions with regard to the control of waterways, with regard to illicit traffic of many kinds, in arms or in deadly drugs, or with regard to the adjustment of many varying international administrative arrangements could not be assured if the treaty were to provide no permanent common international agency, if its execution in such matters was to be left to the slow and uncertain processes of cooperation by ordinary methods of negotiation.

Common Tribunal Necessary.

If the peace conference itself was to be the end of co-operative authority and common counsel among the governments to which the world was looking to enforce justice and give pledges of an enduring settlement, regions like the Saar basin could not be put under a temporary administrative regime which did not involve a transfer of political sovereignty and which contemplated a final determination of its political connections by popular vote to be taken at a distant date; no free city like Danzig could be created which was under elaborate international guaranties to accept exceptional obligations with regard to the use of its port and exceptional relations with a state of which it was not to form a part; properly safeguarded plebiscites could not be provided for, where populations were at some future date to make choice what sovereignty they would live under; no certain and uniform method of arbitration could be secured for the settlement of anticipated difficulties of final decision, with regard to many matters dealt with in the treaty itself; the long-continued supervision of the task of reparation which Germany was to undertake to complete within the next generation might entirely break down; the reconsideration and revision of administrative arrangements and restrictions which the treaty prescribed, but which it was recognized might not prove of lasting advantage or entirely fair if too long enforced, would be impracticable.

A league of free nations had become a practical necessity. Examine the treaty of peace, and you will find that everywhere throughout its manifold provisions its framers have felt obliged to turn to the League of Nations as an indispensable instrumentality for the maintenance of the new order it has been their purpose to set up in the world, the world of civilized men.

That there should be a League of Nations to study the counsels and maintain the peaceful understanding of the world, to make, not treaties alone, but the accepted principles of international law as well, the actual rule of conduct among the governments of the world, has been one of the agreements accepted from the first as the basis of peace with the central powers.

Saw Necessity for League.

The statesmen of all the belligerent countries were agreed that such a league must be created to sustain the settlements that were to be effected. But at first I think there was a feeling among some of them that, while it must be attempted, the formation of such a league was perhaps a counsel of perfection which practical men, long experience in the world of affairs, must agree to very cautiously and with many misgivings.

It was only as the difficult work of arranging an all but universal adjustment of the world's affairs advanced from day to day, from one stage of conference to another, that it became evident to them that what they were seeking would be little more than something written upon paper, to be interpreted and applied by such methods as the chances of politics might make available, if they did not provide a means of common counsel which all were obliged to accept, a common authority whose decisions would be recognized as decisions which all must respect.

Skeptical Turn to League.

And so the most practical, the most skeptical among them turned more and more to the league as the authority through which international action was to be secured, the authority without which, as they had come to see it, it would be difficult to give assured effect to this treaty or to any other international understanding upon which they were to depend for the maintenance of peace.

The most practical of the conferees were at last the most ready to refer to the league of nations the superintendance of all interests which did not admit of immediate determination of all administrative problems which were to require a continuing oversight. What had seemed a counsel of perfection had come to seem a plain counsel of necessity. The league of nations was the practical statesman's hope of success in many of the most difficult things he was attempting.

And it had validated itself in the thought of every member of the conference as something much bigger, much greater every way than a mere instrument for carrying out the provisions of a particular treaty. It was universally recognized that all the peoples of the world demanded of the conference that it should create such a continuing concert of free nations as would make wars of aggression and spoliation, such as this that has just ended, forever impossible. A cry had gone out from every home in every stricken land from which sons and brothers and fathers had gone forth to the great sacrifice that such a sacrifice should never again be exacted.

It was manifest why it had been exacted. It had been exacted because one nation desired dominion and other nations had known no means of defense except armaments and alliances.

People Now Know Truth.

War had lain at the heart of every arrangement of Europe—of every arrangement of the world—that preceded the war. Restive peoples had been told that fleets and armies, which they toiled to sustain, meant peace; and they now know that they had been lied to; that fleets and armies had been maintained to promote national ambitions and meant war. They knew that no old policy meant anything else but force, force—always force. And they knew that it was intolerable.

TALK OF MOVE IN HUNGARY

Allies Aroused Over Action of Bela Kun in Stopping the Forwarding of Supplies.

Paris. — Premier Clemenceau appeared suddenly at the session of the supreme council, whereupon the French minister of foreign affairs, M. Pichon, withdrew.

Mr. Hoover repeated his statement that the revictualling of Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, the Russian provinces, and Roumania was practically crippled by Bela Kun's refusal to permit communication through Budapest, whence all the railway lines radiate.

Under Clemenceau's urging, the council requested its military advisers to investigate Bela Kun's military strength and the number of allied troops which could be thrown against him.

There are small French forces near Vienna, and Serbian and Roumanian forces to the southward. It is understood the allied military intelligence bureau reports that Bela Kun's strength is spreading.

Bela Kun has artillery available, but no means of communication. It is asserted that he has been maintaining himself largely with allied supplies stolen from Hoover's relief trains which he seized.

Italian cavalry might be rushed against Bela Kun by rail, but it is understood the Italians would expect compensation for interfering with Bela Kun, which America would not agree to.

Hoosier State Happenings

Brazil.—The Clay county board of review has raised the assessed valuation of the county from $15,000,000 to $30,000,000.

Marion.—The chinch bug, said to be one of the most destructive of crop pests, has been found in a cornfield near here.

Sullivan.—With the awarding of seven road contracts by the county commissioners, road building promises to be pushed with all speed during the remainder of the summer.

Vincennes.—The case of the city of Washington against the public service commission of Indiana, in which the plaintiff attempted to get a reduction in the rental cost of fire hydrants, tried in the Knox circuit court several weeks ago, was decided in favor of the defendants.

Jeffersonville.—The board of trustees of the Indiana reformatory granted paroles to 17 out of 22 inmates examined, and eight others who have been transferred to the state prison, making 25 out of 30 considered. Last month every inmate considered received a parole, and one of the number has since escaped.

Evansville.—Thousands of gallons of blackberries in the "pocket" are being wasted for lack of pickers. In many surrounding towns pickers are selling the berries of 25 cents a gallon, but in this city the price is $1 a gallon. The price of No. 8 wheat has dropped 40 cents a bushel at local mills, the decline being due to large quantities of new grain that have been delivered.

Indianapolis.—Jesse E. Eschbach, chief examiner for the state board of accounts, declined to approve a Gibson county appropriation of $4,000 for a welcome-home celebration for soldiers. The chief examiner held that $2,500 ought to be sufficient, and said that counties conferring with him have appropriated less than $2,000 for the celebrations. The Gibson county event is to be held the first week of September in connection with a county fair.

Indianapolis.—The board of park commissioners of Indianapolis was authorized by the state tax commission to issue bonds aggregating $262,000 for the immediate purchase of park lands and to make improvements at Garfield and Brookside parks. The state board also authorized the issuance of $400,000 bonds by the Indianapolis sanitary district. Seven petitions for bond issues by municipalities over the state were denied; 23 were approved.

New Albany.—The Floyd county board of review has completed its valuation of corporations, and nearly all have been doubled and, in some instances, the figures of former years have been tripled. The valuation on merchandise stocks have been increased 150 per cent in some cases. It is estimated that the total valuation in the county, which formerly was about $12,000,000, will be increased to between $18,000,000 and $20,000,000.

Crown Point.—Efforts are being made to save from death Thomas Batchelor and Albert Batchelor, brothers, who are under sentence to be executed in the electric chair at the state prison at Michigan City before sunrise November 1. They and two other men pleaded guilty in the criminal court here on a charge of murder, following the shooting and killing of Herman Uecker, cashier of the First State bank at Tolleston, in an attempted robbery of the institution.

Lafayette.—Wheat fields in Porter, Laporte and Tippecanoe counties, known to be infected with the Australian take-all disease, will be placed under quarantine immediately by the state authorities and a strong effort will be made to prevent a federal quarantine of Indiana's entire 1919 crop. Whether the embargo will be placed on the entire yield by the department of agriculture will be decided at a meeting of the federal horticultural board to be held in Washington.

Indianapolis.—The National Council, World War Veterans, with headquarters at Aurora, Ill., has started a membership drive in Indiana. Headquarters for the department of Indiana, have been opened in the courthouse at Indianapolis, with Capt. Louis Lefko, national executive committeeman, and Private Joseph A. Wise, department inspector, in charge. Charters for posts are being issued throughout the state. A mobilization meeting will be held at Moose Temple, Indianapolis, Wednesday night, August 6. Private Hugh B. Donnelly of Chicago, national commander in chief, will be present with his staff. A two-day state convention will be opened at Indianapolis, on Tuesday, September 2. Governor James P. Goodrich and former Gov. Samuel M. Ralston will address the convention.

Anderson.—Threshing of wheat will be completed by July 15. The acreage was the largest for many years and, although a heavy yield is expected in some localities, farmers say scab will cause a large shrinkage in total production.

Connersville.—The city of Connersville, in its semi-annual settlement paid Fayette county $1,380, the money collected in fines for the half year. Of this sum all but $420 was paid in by violators of the liquor laws. The sum is larger than the total of such finest collected here in the last fifteen years.

Evansville.—Evansville millers are paying $2.13 for No. 1 wheat at Evansville and $2.11 at the stations; No. 2, $2.10; No. 3, $2.06.

Lebanon.—The largest wheat crop ever raised in Boone county is in the shock. It is believed the crop will average 30 bushels to the acre.

Lawrenceburg.—Wheat testing 62 pounds to the bushel was threshed on the farm of Omer T. Ludlow in Lawrenceburg township, on the bottom land. The wheat is yielding an average of 33 bushels an acre.

Plymouth.—An importation of forty calves from the Island of Guernsey, off the coast of England, were sold to as many boys and girls in this county. They were received by the Northern Indiana Guernsey Breeders' association.

Decatur. — Adams county farmers have begun their wheat harvest. Instead of the 40 bushels an acre yield expected, only ten bushels are forthcoming. The dry weather, which failed to fill out the heads, is believed to be the cause.

Huntington.—Fly, smut, weevil and scab have done much damage to wheat here, but it is expected the yield will be larger than usual. At a meeting of Shorthorn breeders arrangements were made for a series of pure-bred cattle sales. The first will be held October 12.

Indianapolis. — Announcement was made here that Indoanapolis has been chosen for the headquarters of the regional secretary of the National Tuberculosis association, representing the Mississippi Valley association. The announcement also said that Arthur J. Strawson of Washington had been named regional secretary.

Salem.—There is one of the largest crops of wild blackberries ever known throughout Washington county, but it will be lost through want of pickers. Wild berries are selling at the local markets for 50 cents a gallon, yet at that few farmers are found who are willing to take the time to pick them. Cultivated blackberries are selling at 80 cents a gallon.

Indianapolis.—Following a discussion of the plan of inspection and certification of canned goods by the National Canners' association, 30 members of the Indiana Canners' association signed an agreement to establish a state branch of the national bureau and appointed an advisory board to work out details of organization and to appoint inspectors.

Indianapolis.—Demands for harvest laborers in the Kansas wheat fields have been supplied and there is no longer any reason why an Indiana leave the state, according to advices workman desiring such work should leave the state, according to advices received by Hays H. Buskirk, federal labor director and chairman of the Indiana free employment commission.

Greencastle. — Twenty-eight suits were filed in the Putnam circuit court here against the Farmers' State bank at Bainbridge by men and women who lost Liberty bonds when the vault of the institution was blown open and robbed December 2, 1918. The total sum lost was about $35,000 and the amount asked in the complaints totals about $6,000, ranging from $50 to $1,834. Not all the losers filed suits.

Indianapolis.—Vouchers apportioning June state school tax fund were sent to the 92 counties by the auditor of state. The total amount distributed on the basis of enumeration was $1,900,237, and the apportionment is $2.44 per capita, compared with $2.41 in June last year. Among the amounts are: Grant county, $35,965.60; Huntington county, $20,327.64; Lake county, $97,170.56; Laporte county, $35,106.72; Cass county, $21,684.28.

Indianapolis.—J. W. Paul, mining engineer of the United States bureau of mines, read a paper on "A Method of Humidifying Coal Mines to Prevent Coal Dust Explosions" before the Mine Inspectors' Institute of the United States. Mr. Paul discussed the technical problems involved in making mines safe against explosions. A resolution was adopted by the bureau of mines to investigate the causes and number of explosions in coal mines due to the presence of coal dust.

Indianapolis. — Governor Goodrich announced the appointment of the four members of the bipartisan live stock sanitary board, two members representing veterinarians and two representing the live stock industry. The members of the board are: Dr. John L. Kinmiller, Democrat, of Logansport, a veterinarian; Dr. Haskell Lett, Republican, of Seymour, a veterinarian; Dan C. Reed, Democrat, of Attica, a live stock breeder; Edward Chambers, Republican, of Rushville, a stock breeder.

Marion.—The Grant County Agricultural association has named a committee on good roads to co-operate with a similar committee from the Marion Association of Commerce, the purpose being to agree on the recommendations which should be made to the state highway commission for Grant county's roads. A committee of Grant county citizens appeared before the highway commission and urged that the Wabash pike from Marion to Wabash, be made a part of the Hoosier-Dixie highway.

Richmond.—The Wayne county board of tax review, following a meeting with the state tax commissioners, ordered a flat increase on virtually all taxable property in the county, ranging by townships from 5 to 200 per cent. Personal property assessments in Richmond were increased 50 per cent. Farm improvements in Washington and Harrison townships were increased 200 per cent. Farm lands in Boston township were decreased 5 per cent and other townships were increased so that the average value of farm land an acre in the county will reach $102.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR JULY 20

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

LESSON TEXTS.—Mat. 26:26-30; I Cor. 11:23-34.

GOLDEN TEXT—For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come.—I Cor. 11:26.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Mark 14:22-26; Luke 22:14-20; I Cor. 10:14-21.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Remembering Jesus (Luke 22:19).

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Lord's Supper reminds us of Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—The meaning of the Lord's Supper.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—Communion with Christ and with one another.

I. The Institution of the Lord's Supper (Matt. 26:26; 1 Cor. 11:23).

1. Time: It was on the night of the betrayal of Jesus, just after the betrayer had been announced.

2. The circumstances: In connection with the eating of the Passover. At the command of Jesus the disciples made ready the Passover, and while they were eating, Jesus took bread, blessed it and gave it to the disciples.

3. Elements: (1) The bread. This doubtless was the common bread of the Passover feast. (2) The cup. This cup consisted of the fruit of the vine.

II. The Significance of the Lord's Supper (Matt. 26:26-28; I Co. 11:24-26).

Jesus took natural and literal elements and made them to be symbols of his own body and blood. Just as our bread and drink are assimilated into brain and brawn, becoming an integral part of our body, so by means of these symbols the communicant partakes of Christ. He becomes a part of us and we are in him. It is both a memorial and a prophecy.

1. A memorial of the Lord (Luke 22:19). When he went away he left the bread and the cup for the disciples by which to remember him. Those who love him will desire to keep sacred this memorial.

2. To show the Lord's sacrificial death (I Cor. 11:26). He did not die as a hero or as an example of unselfish devotion, but as a substitutionary ransom. On the cross he made expiation for our sins.

3. It is a guaranty that our sins are forgiven (Rom. 4:25). When the believer partakes of these elements his faith is confirmed. "It is a signet of the Son of God attached to redemption."

4. Through them the believer received Christ (I Cor. 10:16). He there by participates in the body and blood of Christ, becoming a member of his body. Christ liveth in the believer (Gal. 2:26). The Holy Spirit communicates the life of Christ to believers, making them one body, joined together (Eph. 4:16). This union is illustrated by the figure of the human organism (I Cor. 12:12-27); the vine and branches (John 15:1-8); the husband and wife (Eph. 5:25, 26); we are one bread and one body (I Cor. 10:17).

5. A forward look to a completed redemption (I Cor. 10:26). When faith is exercised in Christ, redemption begins, and its completion will take place at the coming of Jesus Christ (I Thess. 4:16, 17). The bread and the cup constitute the keepsake of the Lord until he returns. These elements possess an immense psychological value both as a memorial and a prospect.

III. Qualifications for Participation in the Lord's Supper (I Cor. 11:27-34).

1. A proper apprehension of its meaning (v. 27). Eating and drinking "unworthily" does not refer to the demerit of the communicant, but to the failure of the communicant to grasp its meaning and importance. Therefore, to thoughtlessly engage in this service is to do it "unworthily." Only a regenerated person can discern the Lord's body (v. 29, cf. 2:14). Faith in the integrity of Christ's person and work is essential. Anyone who does not believe in the absolute deity of Christ and his vicarious atonement is an unworthy communicant.

2. Church membership (I Cor. 11:18-22). The Lord's body is the church which is composed of regenerated men and women, united to Jesus Christ as head and to each other as members of that body by the Holy Spirit.

3. Orderly walk. The disorderly should be debarred from the Lord's table, examples of which are the following: (1) Immoral conduct (I Cor. 5:1-13). It is perilous to the individual who is guilty of immorality to approach the Lord's table (v. 30). Sickness and death are oftentimes visited upon such. This explains why some are mysteriously taken away in death. (2) Heresy (Titus 3:10; John 4:2, 3). (3) Schismatics (Rom. 16:17). Those who are causing divisions in the church should be debarred.

Our habitual thoughts and actions determine our characters and they are made moment by moment. If at the center we are stayed on God the circumstances must be right.—Samuel Fallows.

Would You?

Would you remain always young and would you carry all the joy and buoyancy of youth into your maturer years? Then have care concerning but one thing—how you live in your thought world.—Ralph Waldo Trine.

WOLVES OF THE SEA

By RANDALL PARRISH

Copyright, by A. C. McClurg & Co.

Haines was evidently reluctant, but sailor enough to follow as I lowered myself to the deck, clinging hard to keep my footing on the wet incline. A light spar had lodged here, and by making this a species of bridge, we crept as far as the companion, the door of which was open, and gained a view of the scene below. It was a dismal hole in the dim light, but presented no obstacle to our entrance, and I led the way down the stairs, gripping the rail to keep from falling.

The door of the captain's room gave, but it required our combined efforts to press it open against the volume of water, slushing about within. For a moment my eyes could scarcely recognise the various objects as I clung to the frame of the door and stared blindly about in the gloom. Then slowly they assumed shape and substance. Screwed to the deck, the furniture retained its place, but everything else was jammed in a mass of wreckage, or else floating about in a foot of water, deepening toward the stern. There were two chests in the room, one of which I instantly recognized as that of Roger Fairfax. The sight of this made me oblivious to all else.

"There's the chest we want, Haines," I cried, pointing it out. "Have the lads back the boat up to this port; then come down and help me handle it."

"Yes, sir," his voice trembling, "but—but isn't that a man over there—in the bunk? Good God, sir; look at him!"

The white, ghastly face stared at us, looking like nothing human in that awful twilight. I actually thought it a ghost, until with desperate effort the man lifted himself, clinging with gaunt fingers to the edge of the bunk. Then I knew.

"Sanchez! You! those cowards left you here to die!"

"No one came for me," he answered, choking so the words were scarcely intelligible. "Who are you, and what brought you here?"

"I'll tell you frankly, Captain Sanchez," and I stepped closer. "We risked coming aboard to save that chest—Roger Fairfax's chest—before it went down. This vessel has its back broken, and may slide off into deep water at any minute. We must get you out of here first."

"Get me out!" he laughed hideously. "To hell with your help. I want none of it. I am a dead man now, and the easiest way to end all will be to go down with the ship—'twill be a fit coffin for Black Sanchez. By God! I know you now—Geoffry Carlyle?"

"Yes, but an enemy no longer."

"That is for me to say. I hate your race, your breed. The very sound of your name drives me mad. I accept no rescue from you! Damn you, take your gold and go."

"But why?" I insisted, shocked at the man's violence. "Is it because I interfered between you and Dorothy Fairfax?"

"That chit; bah, what do I care for her but as a plaything. No, my hate runs deeper than that. How came you here—in the boat stolen from the Namur?"

"No, Captain Sanchez. The day after we left the ship we boarded a schooner, found adrift, the crew stricken with cholera, with not a man left alive on deck, or below. She lies yonder now, the Santa Marie—a slaver."

"Merciful God!" and his eyes fairly blazed into mine as he suddenly forced his body upward in the bunk. "The Santa Marie adrift! the crew dead from cholera? And the captain—Paradilla, Francis Paradilla—what of him?"

"He lay alone on a divan in the cabin—dead also."

He tried to speak, but failed, his fingers clawing at his throat. When he finally gained utterance once more it was but a whisper.

"Tell me," he begged, "there was no woman with him?"

"There was no woman," I said gravely, "on deck or in the cabin."

"What mean you by saying that? There was one on board! Don't lie to me! In an hour I am dead—but first tell me the truth. Does the woman live?"

"No, she died before. We found her body in a chest, preserved by some devilish Indian art, richly dressed and decked with jewels."

"English?"

"I judged her so, but with dark hair and eyes. You knew her?"

"In the name of all the fiends, yes. And I knew her end. He killed her—Paradilla killed her—because she was as false to him as she had been to me. Hell! but it is strange you should be the one to find her—to bring me this tale, Geoffry Carlyle!"

"Why? What is it to me?"

"You go back to England and tell the duke of Beccleugh how his precious sister died."

"His sister! Good God, you cannot mean that woman was Lady Sara Carlyle?"

"Who should know better than I?" sneeringly. "Once I was called in England Sir John Collinswood."

He sank back exhausted, struggling for breath, but with eyes glowing hatred. I knew it all now, the dimly remembered story coming vividly back to memory. Here then was the ending of the one black stain on the family honor of our race. On this strange coast, three thousand miles from its beginning, the final curtain was being rung down, the drama finished. The story had come to me in whispers from others, never even spoken about by those of our race—a wild, headstrong girl, a secret marriage, a duel in the park, her brother desperately wounded, and then the disappearance of the pair. Ten days later it was known that Sir John Collinswood had defaulted in a large sum—but from that hour England knew him no more. As though the sea had swallowed them both, man and woman disappeared, leaving no trace behind.

The face I gazed dumbly into was drawn and white with pain, yet the thin lips grinned back at me in savage derision.

"You remember, I see," he snarled. "Then out of here, Geoffry Carlyle. Leave me to die in peace. The gold is there; take it, and my curse upon it. Hurry now—do you hear the bark grate on the rocks; it's near the end."

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Before the Governor.

The sound startled me; I imagined I heard the keel slipping, yet before we had reached the door opening on deck the slight movement ceased. My hand gripped the frightened Haines.

"Tell them in the boat to do as I said; then come back here."

"My God, sir, she's a goin' down."

"Not for some minutes yet. There are thousands of pounds in that chest; you've risked life for less many a time. Jump, my man!"

The boat lay in close, bobbing up and down dangerously, yet held firmly beneath the opened port. The box was heavy enough to tax the strength of two men to handle it, but of a size and shape permitting its passage. Sanchez had raised himself again, and clung there to the edge of the bunk watching us.

"Now let down easy, lads," I called. "No, place it amidships; get it even, or you go over. Fix it to ride steady, and stand by—we'll pass a wounded man out to you!"

I stepped across to Sanchez. He saw me coming, and drew back, his ghastly face like a mask.

"No you don't, Carlyle!" he snapped angrily. "Keep your hands off me. So you want me to die with my neck in a noose, do you? I was born a gentleman, and, by God! I'll die like one—and go down with my ship. Get out of here now! You won't? You will, or else die here with me! I'll give you a minute to make your choice."

He left no doubt as to his meaning. From beneath the blanket, the black muzzle of a pistol looked straight into my eyes. The hand holding it was firm, the face fronting me savagely sardonic.

"I'd like to kill you, Carlyle," he hissed hatefully. "By God, I don't know why I shouldn't. Every time I look at you I see her face. If you take a step nearer I pull the trigger—go!"

It was a hard pull back to the Santa Marie. Dorothy greeted me first, and we stood close together at the rail as the men hoisted the chest on deck. She said nothing, asked nothing, but her hands clung to my arm, and whenever I turned toward her our eyes met.

There was a sudden cry forward, and a voice shouted:

"There she goes, buckies! That's the last o' the Namur!"

I turned swiftly, my hand grasping her fingers as they clung to the rail. The battered hulk slid downward, the deck breaking amidships as the stern splashed into the depths; then that also toppled over, leaving nothing above water except the blunt end of a broken bowsprit, and a tangle of wreckage tossed about on the crest of the waves. I watched breathlessly, unable to utter a sound; I could only think of that stricken man in the cabin, those wild eyes which had threatened me. He was gone now—gone!

I yet held Dorothy's hand tightly clasped in my own, and the depths of her uplifted eyes questioned me.

"We will go aft, dear, and I will tell you the whole story," I said gently, "for now we are homeward bound."

* * * * * * * *

I write these few closing lines a year later in the cabin of the Ocean Spray, a three master, full to the hatches with a cargo of tobacco, bound for London, and a market. Dorothy is on deck, eagerly watching for the first glimpse of the chalk cliffs of old England. I must join her presently, yet linger below to add these final sentences.

There is, after all, little which needs to be said. The voyage of the Santa Marie north proved uneventful, and, after that first night of storm, the weather held pleasant and the sea fairly smooth. I had some trouble with the men, but nothing serious, as Watkins and Haines held as I did, and the pledge of Dorothy's influence brought courage. I refused to open the chest, believing our safety, and chance of pardon, would depend largely on our handing this over in good faith to the authorities. Watkins and I guarded it night and day until the schooner rounded the cape and came into the Chesapeake. No attempt was made to find quarters below, the entire crew sleeping on deck, Dorothy comfortable on the flag locker.

It was scarcely sunrise, on the fifth day, when we dropped anchor against the current of the James, our sails furled and the red English colors flying from the peak. Two hours later the entire company were in the presence of the governor, where I told my story, gravely listened to, supplemented by the earnest plea of the young woman. I shall never forget that scene, or how breathlessly we awaited the decision of the great man, who so closely watched our faces. They were surely a strange, rough group as they stood thus, hats in hand, waiting to learn their fate, shaggy-haired, unshaven, largely scum of the sea, never before in such presence, shuffling uneasily before his glance, feeling to the full the peril of their position. Their eyes turned to me questioningly.

Opposite us, behind a long table, sat the governor, dignified, austere, his hair powdered and face smoothly shaven; while on either side of him were those of his council, many of the faces stern and unforgiving. But for their gracious reception of Dorothy and their careful attention to her words I should have lost heart. They questioned me shrewdly, although the governor spoke but seldom, and then in a kindly tone of sympathy and understanding. One by one the men were called forward, each in turn compelled to tell briefly the story of his life; and when all was done the eyes of the governor sought those of the council.

"You have all alike heard the tale, gentlemen," he said. "Nothing like it hath ever before been brought before this colony. Would you leave decision to me?"

There was a murmur of assent, as though they were thus gladly relieved of responsibility in so serious a matter. The governor smiled, his kindly eyes surveying us once more; then, with extended hand he bade Dorothy be seated.

"The story is seemingly an honest one," he said slowly, "and these seamen have done a great service to the colony. They deserve reward rather than punishment. The fair lady who pleads for them is known to us all, and to even question her word is impossible. Unfortunately I have not the power of pardon in cases of piracy, nor authority to free bond slaves, without the approval of the home government; yet will exercise in this case whatsoever of power I possess. For gallant services rendered to the colony, and unselfish devotion to Mistress Dorothy Fairfax, I release Geoffry Carlyle from servitude pending advices from England; I also grant parole to these seamen, on condition they remain within our jurisdiction until this judgment can be confirmed and full pardons issued. Is this judgment satisfactory, gentlemen?"

The members of the council bowed gravely, without speaking.

"The chest of treasure recovered from the sunken pirate ship," he went on soberly, "will remain unopened until final decision is made. As I understand, Master Carlyle, no one among you has yet seen its contents, or estimated its value?"

"No, your excellency. Beyond doubt it contains the gold stolen from Roger Fairfax; and possibly the result of other robberies at sea.

"The law of England is that a certain percentage of such recovered treasure belongs to the crown, the remainder, its true ownership undetermined, to be fairly divided among those recovering it."

"Yet," spoke up Dorothy quickly, "it must surely be possible to waive all claim in such cases?"

"Certainly; as private property it can be disposed of in any way desired. Was that your thought?"

"A Fairfax always pays his debt," she said proudly, "and this is mine."

There was a moment's silence as though each one present hesitated to speak. She had risen, and yet stood, but with eyes lowered to the floor. Then they were lifted and met mine in all frank honesty.

"There is another debt I owe," she said clearly, "and would pay, your excellency."

"What is that, fair mistress?"

She crossed to me, her hand upon my arm.

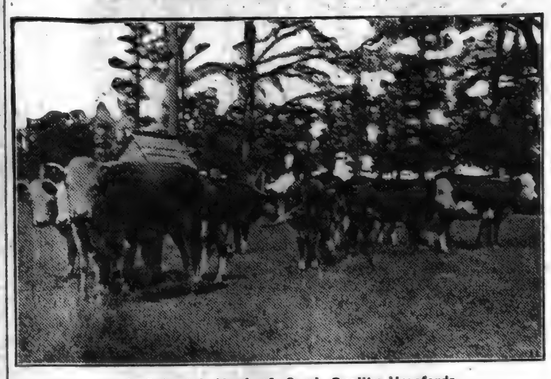
"To become the wife of Geoffry Carlyle."

THE END.

Orioles.

As for myself I am turned contractor of hammock netting for the orioles, taking my pay in notes. I throw strings out of the window and they snap them up at once. They sit in the cherry trees hard by and warble, "Hurry up! hurry up!" I never found out before just what they said. But if you will listen you will find that this is what they first say. A vulgarism, I admit, but native.—Lowell.

CATTLE IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE MUST BE SHOWN FREE FROM TUBERCULOSIS



A Splendid Herd of Good Quality Herefords.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Beginning July 1, 1919, the shipment of cattle interstate without having them properly tuberculin tested will be prohibited—with a few exceptions—by a regulation issued by the secretary of agriculture. The enforcement of this new regulation will, if is believed, be of great assistance in preventing the further spread of tuberculosis among live stock, and having the work practically under state and federal supervision at all times will serve to bring about uniformity.

The department of agriculture, through its bureau of animal industry, is now actively co-operating with the state live stock sanitary officials and cattle owners of 42 states in the eradication of tuberculosis from live stock.

Recent legislation in several of the states has made it possible to proceed with the work where heretofore it has been impossible to do so. Federal funds available for the work are insufficient to meet present demands, and now that the cattle owners are finding the work to be of such advantage and importance the demands will increase rapidly.

Most activities are in the "accredited-herd" work with the owners and breeders of pure-bred herds of cattle who wish to free their herds from tuberculosis and have them placed on the list as "accredited."

Full Co-operation Essential.

Some "area work" is being conducted. Under this plan a community or county or some other unit decides to have all the cattle in the area tuberculin tested with a view of completely eradicating the disease as soon as possible. In order that the "area work" may be successfully carried on, the fullest co-operation of the cattle owners in the territory must be obtained, and any attempt to proceed with the work without the good will and hearty co-operation of the people will fail.

Appropriations by the states for the coming fiscal year for live stock tuberculosis eradication aggregate about two million dollars. Part of this sum will be used to indemnify partially the owners of cattle found to be tuberculous. Most of the states now have laws permitting the payment of indemnity and the federal department also pays some indemnity when funds are available. With the exception of valuable breeding animals, it is found most advisable to consign the tuberculous cattle for slaughter and thereby dispose of them to the best advantage. In the greater portion of "reactors" the disease is found to exist to but a slight extent, making the meat fit for food—thereby causing a great saving. The carcasses of such cattle, after being passed for food by trained inspectors, usually bring about the market price, which sum, deducted from the appraised value of the live animal, leaves the amount of loss. Under the most recent laws, this loss is divided between the owner, the state and the United States—each standing one-third—except that in most cases the state is limited in the amount that it can pay and the United States is always limited to the payment of $50 for a pure-bred animal and $25 for a grade.

Healthy Cattle Worth More.

Owners realize that these slightly diseased cattle may at any time become a source of danger to the healthy animals of the herd and that they themselves may break down from the disease and die or become of little or no value. The value of healthy cattle in any herd, after the tuberculous ones are taken out, always increases, and it is a source of great satisfaction to the owner that he has a healthy herd or that he is doing everything in his power to make it so. Cattle from accredited herds are commanding increased prices over those that are not, and those from herds that are in the process of being accredited are also being sold at advanced prices.

The second list of accredited herds and those that have successfully passed one tuberculin test in preparation for the accredited list is expected to be ready for distribution July 1. Requests now received indicate that 100,000 copies will be required to meet demands. This pamphlet of about 100 pages will contain the names and addresses of about 4,000 cattle owners, representing about 91,000 cattle, whose herds have passed one or more successful official tuberculin tests applied under the co-operative plan for accrediting herds of tuberculosis-free cattle.

Up to April 1, 1919, the total number of herds under supervision for the eradication of tuberculosis was about 9,800, containing about 200,000 cattle, and since that time a large number have been added to the list.

These cattle owners have realized the great importance of trying to maintain a healthy herd, and have pledged themselves to co-operate with the state and federal officials in every possible way to free their cattle from the disease.

Must Guard Against Infection.

Experience covering a period of several years has proved beyond a doubt that a herd can be freed of tuberculosis and kept free, and that the procedure is entirely practical and within the power of a large percentage of cattle owners. But to accomplish the desired results everyone connected with the project must do his best to follow plans, in every detail, that will bring it about. The fullest co-operation on the part of the herd owner is very important. A herd of cattle may be declared to be free from tuberculosis by the officials in charge of the work, and then, through some oversight or by carelessness, diseased animals may be added to the herd or members of the herd may be allowed to associate with tuberculous cattle. In such case, infection may again be introduced and cause further losses and much trouble.

Since the inauguration of co-operative tuberculosis eradication work the number of cattle tested with tuberculin each month has increased. A total of 252,114 cattle were tested from July 1, 1918, to May 1, 1919. Minnesota leads among the northern states with about 25,000. Virginia leads the southern states with 15,796, followed closely by Alabama with 15,604.

BLAZES IN COTTON GINS PREVENTABLE

Static Electricity, Chief Cause, Combated by Grounding.

Conclusively Shown in Recent Investigations by United States Department of Agriculture—Sparks Easy to Prevent.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The main cause of the frequent and destructive fires in the cotton gins of the South is static or frictional electricity—an element easily controlled by simple methods. That was shown conclusively in recent investigations by the United States department of agriculture, through its bureau of chemistry, which now has issued a circular telling how to prevent blazes from static electricity, and also giving suggestions for the prevention of fires from matches or other foreign material in cotton, from friction, from cotton hanging to ribs in the gin, or from other possible causes of less importance.

So frequent were the mysterious gin fires in 1917—the losses in Texas alone that year being estimated at a million dollars—that rumors of alien enemy activity spread through the country, and Uncle Sam sent several experts to Texas to determine the cause and the preventive. The experts found that most of the fires were caused by sparks of static electricity, but that it was easy enough to prevent the sparks from doing damage by the simple expedient of running wires from the gin machinery to the ground.

How to "ground" gin machinery is the chief thing that the experts have to tell in the new circular, "Cotton Gin Fires," numbered 28, which may be obtained free by application to the bureau of chemistry of the department.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Pure water is as necessary for a horse as it is for a man.

For cheapest gains pigs should be on pasture all the time.

Too many farmers are raising hogs at a loss because of expensive feeding methods.

See that your work horses have pasture regularly, in addition to the grain ration.

The calf should nurse its mother for the first few days, after which it should be removed and fed by hand.

Practically all experiments with oats for hogs indicate that it takes about two bushels of oats to equal in feeding value one bushel of corn.

BIG POTATO YIELD

Western Canada Man Raised 600 Bushels on Two Acres.

He Thinks He Did Pretty Well, but There Were Even Larger Crops in the Neighborhood—Live Stock Men Prosper.

As a by-product the yield of potatoes on the farm of Ben Pawson of Coaldale, Alberta, was somewhat of a paying proposition. Coaldale is in the Medicine Hat district of Alberta. Medicine Hat is a place, pictured in the mind of many Americans, where the weather man holds high carnival, and when he wants to put a little life or spirit into the people just moves the mercury down a few notches. The rascal has thus given Medicine Hat a rather unenviable place on the map. But it isn't half as bad as it is pictured. Anyway, Ben Pawson likes it. Last year he grew six hundred bushels of potatoes on two acres of land that had no special preparation, and only the usual precipitation, or rain, as the less cultured would call it. When he couldn't work at his hay or grain, because of the damp mornings, he gave them some attention. And then evenings between supper and chores and bedtime he gave them some work. Anyway his yield was six hundred bushels, and he sold the whole lot for $285. Ben is satisfied. Still there were larger yields than this in the neighborhood.

If one might speak of hogs in the same breath in which you speak of potatoes, there is nothing in the ethics of literature that would create a debarment. Taking advantage of this license it will not be out of place to state that large potato yields are not the only feature of interest in this new and interesting country. Amongst others hogs are having a good deal of attention. Not long ago, hogs reached the $23.00 mark on the Calgary market. It doesn't cost much to raise a hog and very little to bring him to a weight of 200 pounds. Don't cost much! Certainly not. But what about the man who recently paid $350 for a Duroc Jersey Boar? That was all right. That man knew what he was doing. He was doing what a great many other farmers in Western Canada are doing today. He is acting on the old "saw," that "it costs no more to raise a good critter than a poor one." That is the reason that Western Canada is looming large in the live stock world. The best is none too good. The same may be said of horses, cattle, yes, and sheep, too. The very best sires and dams of the best breeds are purchased. And while big prices are paid, it is felt that the demand for pure-bred stock at home and abroad will bring returns which will warrant any reasonable price that may be asked.—Advertisement.

Expressing Thoughts.

We have a right to say what we think only when we are thinking that which is right to say. Many thoughts are too warped by selfishness and unkindness to stand that test.

TO CROWN YOUTHFUL HEADS

Picturesque is the word best describing the lovely millinery with which this year's debutante is destined to crown her youthful head. Everything in beautiful millinery materials is available for her—ribbons, flowers, braids, laces—and all fabrics in flowerlike colors. How effectively they are used may be gathered from the hats pictured here. At the top there is a lovely hat of tuscan and piping braid trimmed with a wreath of wheat and field flowers that is like a song of summer. Below it a pretty hat of taffeta, with frayed flounces about the brim, is lovely in marine with a band of bright embroidery in the crown. The last hat is of hair braid overlaid with bands of narrow ribbon joined by stitches of embroidery silk.

ELEGANCE IN SPRING SUITS

The youthful and chic suit shown here will interest those who are looking for novelty. Taking advantage of several privileges offered by spring styles, it has assembled straight lines, flaring sleeves, crisscross tucks and rows of buttons in a charming model made of beige-colored, smooth-faced cloth. Except for diagonal, slit pockets, set in at each side, the skirt is quite plain, bearing out the elegance which the designer had in mind and executed so well. The coat has slashed seams forming five panels, two at the front, one at each side and one at the back. Each front panel is decorated with a row of buttons, and the side panels have beautifully crow-bar tucks as a finish at the bottom.

CAPE AND COAT IN ONE

The grace of capes and the convenience of coats are joined in many wraps this spring. A happy combination is shown in the picture above where a short shoulder cape supports a long, loose coat, which falls in box-plaits from it. Beige colored velours is the material used, and the flat buttons set along the edge of the cape portion are covered with it. This coat has no collar, but a silk scarf is worn with it when needed. The coat is eight inches shorter than the dress skirt. There is a greater difference in length between coats and skirts this year than last owing to the arrival of skirts considerably longer than they have been.

OF FOULARD AND GEORGETTE

Figured foulard and plain georgette noon frocks. Sometimes an underskirt of plain silk makes a foundation, as in the frock pictured here.

CHARMING UTILITY FROCK

To translate his idea of charm and utility combined in a frock, some gifted designer has used such simple means as tricot, satin and bone buttons. They have been put together most skillfully in a dress that will appeal to the young woman who requires serviceable clothes and insists upon good style in them.

NEW THREE-PIECE SUIT

Here is one of those three-piece suits in which a satin middy blouse, that matches it in color takes the place of the usual shirtwaist. This blouse has a loose, narrow girdle of satin and is turned up at the bottom, forming pockets. The coat is a new model and insists upon disclosing its satin companion.

IN THE MILLINER'S WINDOW

This spring's hats are wonderfully becoming, and here are three of them designed for the younger woman. At the top a dress hat of braid and georgette; at the bottom a street hat of satin and beads, and between them a semidress hat brightened by ribbon and flowers.

John Bennett Leighty

John Bennett Leighty, son of Fred B. and Lora Hull Leighty, was born January 20, 1914, and after a brief life of five and one-half years, went back to the God who gave him, July 18, 1919.

John Bennett, as he was familiarly known in the community, was a favorite with both young and old. Because of his sunny disposition and manly ways he won his way into the hearts of the business associates of his father. Being the only child of his parents, he was idolized by them and in him they found their greatest joy and pride, and only God knows how to comfort them in their hours of grief. His grandparents and other relatives were planning great things for him but God has planned greater ones and His claim has come first and we can only say, "His, will be done."

There is no death! The stars go down
To rise upon some fairer shore,
And bright in heavens Jeweled crown
They shine forever more.

There is no death! An angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread;
He bears our best loved thing away
And then we call them dead.

He leaves our hearts all desolate;
He plucks our fairest, sweetest flowers;
Transplanted into bliss, they now
Adorn immortal bowers.

INDIANA State News

Nashville.—The blackberry crop in this county is the largest ever known. A few have been placed on the market at 35 cents a gallon.

Rushville.—Between 100 and 125 Indiana telephone men will be here Friday, July 25, for the annual convention of the Central Indiana Independent Telephone association.

Jeffersonville.—Reports continue to indicate the poorest quality of wheat in years. The average is about fifty-five pounds to the bushel. The yield an acre will be 15 to 17 bushels.

Terre Haute.—After passing a resolution to petition congress to enact legislation preventing federal courts from issuing injunctions in labor troubles, district No. 11, United Mine Workers of America, ended its convention here.

Plymouth.—Wheat threshing is well under way in Marshall county. The yield is 12 to 16 bushels an acre, about 60 per cent of last year's crop, or 500,000 bushels against 750,000 last year. A larger area was sown this year. The bulk of wheat grades No. 2 or lower.

Rushville.—Two hundred wheat fields in Rush county have been inspected by the county agricultural agent, and only four have been found to have less than 3 per cent of disease common to wheat. These four fields have been recommended for seed wheat next year.

Shoals.—Wheat threshing is progressing rapidly. The wheat in the river bottom is of poor quality and about one-third the average crop. On the ridge lands the wheat is better. Corn is growing well and may be one of the largest crops ever harvested in the county. Much of it was planted late.

Huntington.—Indiana's constitutional elm is a widely known tree, and to Huntington goes the honor of having the largest shade tree in the United states. The Forestry association urges the citizens of Huntington to turn the plot into a memorial park, thus having the unique distinction of having a "park" with only one tree.

Indianapolis.—The Indiana Federation of Farmers' Associations will conduct a home economics school in the new woman's building at the state fair grounds August 28 to September 6. The school is to be attended by one girl from each county. The selection of the girls will be made by contests in the local farmers' association.

Lafayette.—Tippecanoe county has increased its appraisement of farm lands from an average of $40 an acre to $138.38 an acre, a 355 per cent advance. In the city of Lafayette personal property has been increased 292 per cent and real estate 156 per cent. The highest value placed on any farm land in the county is $200 an acre, and the township having the highest average is Randolph with $162 an acre.

Hammond.—Hammond's largest industry, the Standard Steel Car plant, which during war times employed 5,000 men in its freight car and ordnance departments, has been idle following a walkout of practically all employees. Carpenters employed on car building and the hydraulic press operators went out a few days ago. Following the posting of notices in the plant in which the company announced it would grant no wage increases the strike became general.

Washington, D. C.—A National Guard of not more than 3,000 for the state of Indiana has been authorized by the war department for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1920, under the general divisional plan of organizing the National Guard determined on some time ago. The strength of the Indiana Guard will be made up follows, according to the war department orders: One regiment of infantry, one squadron of cavalry, one regiment of field artillery, one battalion of engineers, one radio company, one ambulance company and one field hospital.

Indianapolis.—A state-wide campaign to raise money for a guaranty fund of $200,000 was started by the Indiana Federation of Farmers' Associations. Delegates in attendance opened the campaign by signing pledges for several hundred dollars. The fund will be in addition to money raised by membership dues and will be used to maintain an organization of powerful influence for at least three years to make certain that interests of the farmer receive proper consideration from the state assembly, the meat packers and at the stock yards. The federation adopted a number of resolutions, among them one favoring the repeal of the daylight saving law by the congress and another in favor of the three-mile road law as in effect prior to the last session of the state assembly.

Terre Haute.—The report of internal revenue collections for the month of June show that about $131,000 was collected in the Seventh Indiana district for that month in luxury taxes. Of this amount approximately $30,000 was from the tax on the sale of ice cream at retail.

Terre Haute.—Milk prices were advanced here from 12 cents to 14 cents a quart retail, with a wholesale price of $3.31 a hundred pounds for 4 per cent milk. The reason advanced for the increase is that the dairy producers demand higher prices to cover the cost of the government test.

Elwood.—Heavy rains have aided tomato growers who have the largest acreage ever known here.

Owensville.—Grasshoppers are destroying crops on a more extensive scale in Wabash township than army worms did a few weeks ago.

Anderson.—Local elevator men say Madison county farmers would have profited more had they not cut wheat and threshed too soon. A large quantity of wheat delivered recently graded No. 3 to No. 5 because of shriveled grain and moisture.

Indianapolis.—The administration of highway laws and county road building are topics which will be considered at the annual convention of the County Commissioners' association of Indiana when it meets in Indianapolis September 24 and 25.

Princeton.—The Gibson county commissioners, acting on a petition of 1,600 signatures, agreed to a memorial coliseum for the county in memory of soldiers of all wars. It is expected the structure, which will be built in Princeton, the county seat, will cost approximately $150,000.

Columbus.—The Bartholomew County Farmers' association has sent telegrams to Senators Watson and New and Congressman Benham, urging a further attempt to repeal the daylight saving law. The Indiana State Brotherhood of Threshermen also sent similar messages to all Indiana members of the congress.

Indianapolis.—The state live stock sanitary board selected edward J. Chambers of Rushville as chairman of the body. The board selected Dr. L. E. Northrup as its secretary. The law provides that the secretary of the board shall be the state veterinarian. Doctor Northup has been veterinarian for the last two years.

Elkhart.—The Elkhart Central Labor union has petitioned the school board to provide segregated classes for 60 negro children, now enrolled as public school pupils. The board promised to investigate the matter. The negro population of Elkhart has greatly increased since the beginning of the world war, most of the newcomers being from Kentucky and Tennessee.

Indianapolis.—Among the 850 high schools in Indiana there are 50 rural high schools organized on the six-year plan. A law passed by the last legislature makes provision for the extension of work along this line that has been carried on for several years in the state. The six-year rural high schools were first tried in Tippecanoe county. Every township high school in Huntington county is organized on the six-year plan.

Noblesville.—The annual meeting of the Mary Association of the United States will be held in this city Thursday, August 14. This was decided by a special committee which met here. This organization was formed in Noblesville four years ago and the beginning was very small. More than 1,000 Marys from the Central states were present at the meeting a year ago. All answering to the name of Mary are invited to the meeting.

Terre Haute.—The board of review of Vigo county has completed its assessment of corporations, and the total shows approximately $19,000,000, an increase of about $12,000,000 over the 1918 assessment. About 100 appeals will be taken from the assessments fixed by the board, several of which will be taken by the state board's representative. The importance the coal industry assumes in this county is shown by the assessment made on coal corporations.

Muncie.—Open violations of Indiana's prohibition law in this city were alleged in the Delaware county circuit court here. Alfred Davis, a negro, who was one of the relators, described himself as "the bartender" of a Muncie cigar store. "Oh, we sell whisky mostly, but sometimes blackberry wine," replied Davis, in answer to the judge's query. "Ever see any police in there?" "Yep, lots of them. But, judge, there ain't no secret about our place. We jest runs it; that's all," the bartender stated.

Washington, D. C.—The formal order of the federal horticultural board entered after the hearing of the cases of Indiana and Illinois on the proposed quarantine of grains from the two states on account of the spread of what was thought to be the Australian "take-all" provides that there will be no quarantine and that the state authorities will be left to work out the situation for themselves, a thing which the board feels confident the Indiana authorities can do without any federal aid whatever.

Indianapolis.—The constitutionality of section 18 of the workmen's compensation act as amended by the Indiana legislature in 1919, which has the effect of compelling coal mining companies to come in under the compensation act, was upheld by Judge A. B. Anderson, in federal court here, who decided in favor of the Indiana state industrial board in a suit brought against the board by the coal companies to test the law. Section 18 of the law was obtained largely through the influence of the coal miners' organization.

Shoals.—Martin county will resume its program of road building at once. Contracts were let by the county commissioners for two new macadam roads and a contract was let for resurfacing another. In addition viewers were appointed to estimate the cost of a fourth road.

Fort Wayne.—The Lutheran church conference here has elected the following officers: President, Rev. Philip Wambsganss of Fort Wayne; vice president, Rev. F. Hersberger, St. Louis, Mo.; secretary, Rev. R. L. Bauman, Redwing, Minn., and treasurer, August Freese, Fort Wayn

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.

LESSON TEXT—Phil. 4:10-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.—I John 1:7.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Psalms 133: 1-3; Mal. 3:16; John 17:20, 21; I Cor. 12:12; Romans 12:15, 16; I John 4:7-13.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Loving Jesus and one another (Acts 12:1-17; John 13:34).

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—Our Christian friendships (John 15:12-15).

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—Basis and benefits of Christian fellowship.

The Epistle to the Philippians furnishes us with a beautiful example of fellowship between Paul and the church at Philippi. This church on several occasions sent Paul money for his support. The particular ministry of this sort at the hands of Epaphroditus while Paul was a prisoner at Rome was the occasion for this epistle. His words of thanksgiving for this gift is the text of our lesson.

I. Paul's Expression of Appreciation (4:10).

The Philippians had on several occasions expressed their sympathy and love for Paul by their gifts, but considerable time had elapsed since any gifts had reached him. When their care for him again flourished he was made to greatly rejoice. He recognized that the Lord was ministering to him through these people, therefore he rejoiced in the Lord. This was a very tactful way of saying "I thank you." This gift was gladly received because he was in need and also because it assured him that his old friends still loved him.

II. Paul's Manly Independence (vv. 11-13).

Though sincerely appreciating the gift, he would have them know:

1. He was independent of circumstances (v. 11). Through discipline of the Lord he had learned to be content with his lot. He knew that all things work together for good (Rom. 8:28), so whatever he was experiencing at the moment was from the hand of the loving Father. Happy, indeed, is the man who has learned this secret. Paul was willing to take poverty or prosperity, whatever came.

2. Willing to take what God sent (v. 12). If it be prosperity, he would rejoice and praise God; if it be adversity, he would patiently suffer it, knowing that it was permitted by the Heavenly Father because it was needful for his best interests. This is a fine example of self-mastery. If a thing desired was not forthcoming he would not allow his heart to desire it.

3. His faith was in Christ (v. 13). The soul-poise which Paul possessed was not of himself, but because Christ indwelt him. Such composure is only possible as Christ lives in and becomes the dynamic of one's life. When the life is thus surcharged with the energy of Christ, he is absolutely independent of circumstances. Such poise is possible to all who will unreservedly yield themselves to God.

III. The Fellowship of Paul and the Philippian Saints (vv. 14-19).

1. The gift of this church to Paul is an outstanding example of Christian sympathy (vv. 14-16). No other church had remembered Paul at all in his great need, but this one rendered pecuniary aid again and again, affording a fine example of mutual love between a minister and the people supporting him.

2. The gift a spiritual blessing to the church (v. 17). Paul was pleased with their gift not primarily for its value to him, but because of the blessing which the people derived from giving it. It was fruit which abounded to their account. "It is more blessed to give than to receive" (Acts 20:35).

3. Their gift was an acceptable act of worship—"an odor of a sweet smell, well-pleasing to God" (v. 18). True Christian giving is an act of worship to God.

4. Their gift would be rewarded by the Heavenly Father (v. 19). True Christian giving is not on the basis of prudence, but by faith in the living God who will make recompense according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus.

THE PUMA PAIR.

"I'm the puma; or Mr. Mountain Lion," said the puma.

"And I'm Mrs. Mountain Lion or your puma mate," said his mate.

"Now, we both know who we are and we both know who each other is," said Mr. Mountain Lion.

"We know so many things," said Mrs. Mountain Lion.

"That's so," agreed her mate.

"I am not just sure what all we do know," said Mrs. Mountain Lion.

"Neither am I," said her mate, "but I don't suppose it makes much difference."

"It might, of course, if anyone came up to us and said,

"'What do you know?'

"Do you suppose," said Mr. Mountain Lion, "that anyone would be so rude as to come up to two perfectly nice creatures and ask such a question?"

"They might," said Mrs. Mountain Lion, or Mrs. Puma, known by either name.

"Horrors," said Mr. Mountain Lion.

"Horrors indeed, but it might be true," said Mrs. Mountain Lion.

"I don't think it would be fair," said Mr. Mountain Lion. "It would not be nice to go up to anyone and say,

"'How much do you know, or, 'what do you know?' It would be very rude, and also unkind. No one wants to show how little he knows, but everyone wants to show how much he knows and when asked how much it might appear very little."

"You talk as though you didn't know much," said Mrs. Mountain Lion.

"But I know a good deal," said Mr Mountain Lion.

"My dear puma mate," said Mrs. Mountain Lion, "what would you do if anyone did ask you how much you knew?"

"I Would Pretend I Was Asleep."

"I would pretend I was asleep," said Mr. Mountain Lion.

"That's a bright idea," said Mrs. Mountain Lion, "but suppose your ribs were tickled and you laughed, what then?"

"I'd pretend I was laughing and talking in my sleep," said Mr. Mountain Lion.

"You are bright, there is no mistake about it," said his mate. "Let's talk about what we do know, eh?"

"Yes," said Mr. Mountain Lion, "we can commence by saying we know who each other is!"

"Of course we knew it before we said it," smiled Mrs. Mountain Lion.

"Well, it does no harm that I sometimes repeat what we know," said Mr. Mountain Lion.

"Ah yes," said Mrs. Mountain Lion, "it is quite harmless to do so, and, too, it is nice. It is pleasant to talk over our ways and habits and it is just like big people talk over their business plans and children over their school or their games.

"We're the Puma family, the nice family of handsome mountain lions."

"We are," agreed Mr. Mountain Lion, "and we are quick and spry and clever. We can run and move easily and we can climb wonderfully.

"Oh, we're such good climbers! We're the best climbers in the world—that is we're the best climbers of the great cat family—especially of the big members of the family."

"Yes, that's right," said Mrs. Mountain Lion, "and not only can we climb but we can swim. Oh, how we can swim. We aren't going to be senseless creatures when we come to a piece of water—we're going to swim."

"That's right," said Mr. Mountain Lion, "but water doesn't come in pieces, my love, it comes in ponds and lakes and streams and brooks and rivers and oceans."

"Well," said Mrs. Mountain Lion, "I meant, of course that when we came to any pond or brook or lake or river we would be able to swim in the water therein!"

"Ah, that's the way to say it," said Mr. Mountain Lion, "and that word 'therein' made a particularly fine ending, yes, a particularly fine one."

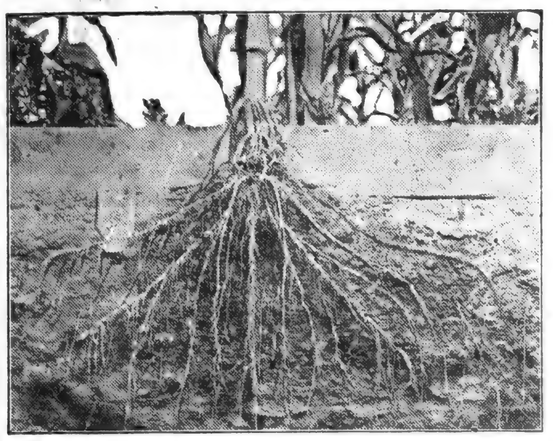
MORE CORN PER ACRE RATHER THAN MORE ACRES WILL DECIDE PROFIT FROM CROP



Natural Distribution of Corn Roots at Tasseling Time. Cultivator Shovel Shows That Only by Shallow Cultivation Will the Roots Escape Injury. Board Rests on Soil Surface.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Corn is sometimes injured more than aided by cultivation, say specialists in the United States department of agriculture.

Plow deep while sluggards sleep;
And you shall have corn to sell and to keep.

is excellent advice when preparing the soil for planting, but is bad practice after the plants have attained any considerable size. Some successful growers, who have averaged 100 bushels of shelled corn to the acre on hundreds of acres, say the best single cultivation they can give their corn is one eight or ten inches deep—just before planting. But after the corn is up, each succeeding cultivation should be shallower than the last.

Methods of cultivation in one section of the country differ greatly from those in another section. Farmers should not cease trying to learn better methods because of these differences. The most valuable information can be obtained from unprejudiced observant corn growers of many years' experience.

Purposes of Cultivation.

The main purposes of cultivation are to prevent weed growth, surface run off and the loss of moisture by evaporation. Proper cultivation should secure these results regardless of the specific means used. Some of the most successful corn growers practice frequent early cultivation. Early cultivations will stimulate the growth of the young corn plants by aerating and warming the soil. They will also check injury from worms, insects and moles. Harrows or weeders should be used before the corn is up or while it is small enough to permit their use. While the plants are small, narrow shovels that do not throw much soil, or disk cultivators set to throw the soil from the corn should be used. Fenders are desirable to prevent covering or injuring the small plants.

Many tests of deep and shallow cultivation have been made and results are decidedly in favor of shallow cultivation. Occasions when deep cultivation is preferable are few. The roots of the plants must not be broken. They will produce other roots, but at the expense of vitality and food supply.

After the corn is two or three feet high, the soil even in the middle of the rows should not be cultivated deeper than four inches, and usually a shallower cultivation will prove better. Maintain a loose soil mulch two or three inches thick. This prevents the escape of moisture already in the soil and soaks up the rainfall rather than letting it run off.

Proper Cultivation.

Cultivate often enough to keep down weeds and to maintain constantly a loose soil mulch until the corn has reached its growth. More cultivations will be needed if rains are frequent. The crust which forms after every rain must be broken and pulverized or excessive run-off or evaporation will soon rob the soil of its moisture.

It is a mistake to think that the longer the dry spell the more frequent should be the cultivations. After the mulch has been produced, its frequent stirring is not necessary unless weeds become troublesome. Many crops are cut short by stopping cultivation because the corn is too tall to use a double cultivator without breaking down the stalks. If conditions demand it, continue shallow cultivation even though the corn is tasseling. It is sometimes profitable to remove weeds even by the costly process of hand labor at as late a date as the silking of the corn.

Under some conditions six or eight cultivations are advisable, while under other conditions three may be sufficient. The maximum yield is not obtained by the number of cultivations, but by keeping the soil in the proper condition.

LABOR SITUATION IS HELPED BY SOLDIERS

Men Returning From Overseas Are Going Back to Farms.

Department of Agriculture Makes Careful Survey in Army Camps—Shows That Majority of Farmers Will Resume Work.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The majority of soldiers who entered the army from the farms are returning to them immediately after receiving their discharges from military duty. This furnishes the brightest spot in a situation that is not yet entirely satisfactory, but that promises steady improvement, although there is still no indication of a decided movement back to the farm by men who were attracted from food-production work by high wages in industrial pursuits.

Careful surveys made in army camps by the department's farm help specialists of the department of agriculture furnish ample proof to refute statements that have appeared in the press that from 75 per cent to 90 per cent of the men who were called by the army from the farms are not returning to them. In a Virginia camp the specialists found that during the first three weeks in April 98.2 per cent of such men discharged actually returned to the farms. During the week ending April 5 the specialists interviewed 2,021 men at this camp. It was found that 933 were from farms and all but 15 of that number intended to return. During the following week 2,108 men were interviewed. It was found that 691 were from farms and all but 14 intended to return. The next week 716 men were interviewed. Of this number 364 had formerly been employed on farms, and all but 5 intended to return.

These figures are the actual result of personal interviews with each man. It was found also that a number of those who had previously been engaged in other occupations expressed a desire to take up farming. During the three weeks mentioned 2 per cent of the men discharged and who were not farming when they entered the army intended to take up farming.

Of the 1.8 per cent of the soldiers who had been on farms previous to entering the army, and who did not intend to return, the reason given by 1 per cent was that the men were disabled and therefore unable to do heavy farm work. At least half of this number are taking up vocational courses in agriculture which will fit them for a class of farm work which does not require hard physical effort. Practically the entire remaining eight-tenths per cent had been farming with their parents or were tenants and considered it too late to farm this year, as other help had been secured.

A similar report from the farm help specialist in charge of the work at Camp Gordon, Ga., shows that during 4 weeks in April 3,291 farmers were discharged from that camp. Of that number 83 were directed to situations on the farms in Georgia, while 2,342 said they were returning to their jobs or homes on the farms, and the remaining 866 did not desire to go back to farm work.

At another camp 30 farmers were personally interviewed and 29 stated that they were going back to the farm immediately on receipt of their discharges.

PIECES OF EIGHT

By Richard Le Gallienne

Being the Authentic Narrative of a Treasure Discovered in the Bahama Islands in the Year 1903. Now First Given to the Public.

Copyright by Doubleday, Page & Company.

LOVE AND ADVENTURE

"Pieces of Eight!" Immediately the imagination begins its magic work. Thoughts fly to the old pirate days of the West Indies—the days of the buccaneers, of fighting, adventure and treasure. "Pieces of Eight"—Spanish dollars bearing the figure 8—mean to the imagination great, dark, steel-bound chests, with their puzzle-locks and mysterious riches of gold and gems. They mean pirate loot buried and lost to their pirate owners—and still waiting through the years a lucky finder.

They mean, too, tropic climes where it is always green and frost is a thing unthinkable—where fruit is ready to the hand and clothing is an ornament and the sun "comes up like thunder," and blue skies and crystal waters run the gamut of all that is lovely in color.

Richard Le Gallienne is a literary craftsman. Poetry and prose come equally to his pen.

So, in addition to interest of plot, we have in "Pieces of Eight" the charm of the written word.

Love, adventure, mystery, buried treasure amid scenes far from the ordinary—what more can the reader ask in entertainment?

Book I.

CHAPTER I.

—1—

Introduces the Secretary of the Treasury of His Britannic Majesty's Government at Nassau, New Providence, Bahama Islands.

During the summer of 1903 I was paying what must have seemed like an interminable visit to my old friend John Saunders, who at that time filled with becoming dignity the high-sounding office of secretary of the treasury of his majesty's government, in the quaint little town of Nassau, in the island of New Providence, one of those Bahama islands that lie half lost to the world to the southeast of the Caribbean sea and form a somewhat neglected portion of the British West Indies.

Time was when they had a sounding name for themselves in the world; when the now sleepy little harbor gave shelter to rousing freebooters and tarry pirates, tearing in there under full sail with their loot from the Spanish Main.

But those heroic days are gone, and Nassau is given up to a sleepy trade in sponges and tortoise shell, and peace is no name for the drowsy tenor of the days under the palm trees and the scarlet poinciannas.

Here a handful of Englishmen, clothed in the white linen suits of the tropics, carry on the government after the traditional manner of British colonies from time immemorial, each of them, like my friend, not without an English smile at the humor of the thing, supporting the dignity of offices with impressive names—lord chief justice, attorney general, speaker of the house, lord high admiral, colonial secretary and so forth.

My friend the secretary of the treasury is a man possessing in an uncommon degree that rare and most attractive of human qualities, companionableness. As we sit together in the hush of his snuggery of an evening, surrounded by guns, fishing lines and old prints, there are times when we scarcely exchange a dozen words between dinner and bedtime, and yet we have all the time a keen and satisfying sense of companionship. It is John Saunders' gift. Companionship seems quietly to ooze out of him, without the need of words.

And occasionally we have as third in those evening conclaves a big, slow-smiling, broad-faced young merchant of the same kidney. In he drops with a nod and a smile, and takes his place in the smoke cloud of our meditations, radiating without the effort of speech that good thing—humanity; though one must not forget the one subject on which now and again the good Charlie Webster achieves eloquence in spite of himself—duck shooting.

John Saunders' subject is shark fishing. Duck shooting and shark fishing. It is enough. Here, for sensible men, is a sufficient basis for lifelong friendship, and unwearying, inexhaustible companionship.

It was in this peace of John Saunders' snuggery one July evening in 1903, the three of us being duly met and ensconced in our respective armchairs, that we got onto the subject of buried treasure. It was I who started us off by asking John what he knew about buried treasure.

At this John laughed his funny little quiet laugh. "Buried treasure!" he said; "well, I have little doubt that the islands are full of it—if one only knew how to get at it."

"Seriously?" I asked.

"Certainly. Why not? Weren't these islands for nearly three centuries the stamping ground of all the pirates of the Spanish Main? Morgan was here. Blackbeard was here. The very governors themselves were little better than pirates. This room we are sitting in was the den of one of the biggest rogues of them all—John Tinker—the governor when Bruce was here building Fort Montague at the east end yonder; building it against pirates, and little else but pirates at the Government house all the time. A great old time Tinker gave the poor fellow. You can read all about it in his 'Memoirs.' Nassau was the rendezvous for all the cutthroats of the Caribbean sea. Here they came in with their loot, their doubloons and pieces of eight;" and John's eyes twinkled with enjoyment of the rich old romantic words, as though they were old port.

"Here they squandered much of it, no doubt, but they couldn't squander it all. Some of them were thrifty knaves, too, and these, looking around for some place of safety, would naturally think of the bush. The niggers keep their little hoards there to this day."

"It is their form of stocking," put in Charlie Webster.

"Precisely. Well, as I was saying, those old fellows would bury their hoards in some cave or other, and then go off—and get hanged. Their ghosts perhaps came back. But their money is still here, lots of it, you bet your life."

"Do they ever make any finds?" I asked.

"Nothing big that I know of. A jug full of old coins now and then. I found one a year or two ago in my garden here—buried down among the roots of that old fig tree."

"Then," put in Charlie, "there was that mysterious stranger over at North Cay. He's supposed to have got away with quite a pile."

"Tell me about him," said I.

"Well, there used to be an old eccentric character in the town here—a halfbreed by the name of Andrews. John will remember him—"

John nodded.

"He used to go around all the time with a big umbrella, and muttering to himself. We used to think him half crazy. Gone so brooding over this very subject of buried treasure. Better look out, young man!"—smiling at me. "He used to be always grubbing about in the bush. Well, several years ago there came a visitor from New York, and he got thick with the old fellow. They used to go about a lot together, and were often off on so-called fishing trips for days on end. Actually, it is believed, they were after something on North Cay. At all events some months afterward the New Yorker disappeared as he had come and has not been heard from since. But since then they have found a sort of brick vault over there which has evidently been excavated. I have seen it myself. A sort of walled chamber. There, it's supposed the New Yorker found something or other. That's the story for what it's worth."

"Those Old Fellows Would Bury Their Hoards."

As Charlie finished John slapped his knee.

"The very thing for you!" he said; "why have I never thought of it before?"

"What do you mean, John?" we both asked.

"Why down at the office I've got the very thing. A pity I haven't got it here. You must come in and see it tomorrow."

"What on earth is it? Why do you keep us guessing?"

"Why, it's an old manuscript that came into my hands a short time ago. Charlie, you remember old Wicks—old Billy Wicks—'Wrecker' Wicks, they called him—"

"I should say I do. A wonderful old villain—"

"But the document, for heaven's sake," I said. "The document first; the story will keep."

"Well, they were pulling down Wicks' own house just lately, and out of the rafters there fell a roll of paper—now I'm coming to it—a roll of paper, purporting to be the account of the burying of a certain treasure, telling the place where it is buried, and giving directions for finding it—"

Charlie and I exclaimed together; and John continued, with tantalizing deliberation:

"It's a statement purporting to be made by some fellow on his deathbed—some fellow dying out in Texas—a quondam pirate, anxious to make his peace at the end and to give his friends the benefit of his knowledge."

"Oh, John!" said I, "I shan't sleep a wink tonight."

"I don't take much stock in it," said John. "I'm inclined to think it's a hoax. Someone trying to fool the old fellow. . . . But, boys, it's bedtime, anyhow. Come down to the office in the morning and we'll look it over."

So our meeting broke up for the time being, and taking my candle I went upstairs, to dream of caves overflowing with goldpieces, and John Tinker, fierce and mustachioed, standing over me, a cutlass between his teeth and a revolver in each hand.

CHAPTER II.

The Narrative of Henry P. Tobias, ex-Pirate, as Dictated on His Deathbed, in the Year of Our Lord 1859.

The good John had scarcely made his leisurely, distinguished appearance at his desk on the morrow when I too entered by one door and Charlie Webster by the other.

"Now for the document," we both exclaimed in a breath.

"Here it is," he said, taking up a rather grimy-looking roll of foolscap from in front of him, which, as he pointed out, was evidently the work of a person of very little education, and began to read as follows:

County of Travas, State of Texas.
December 1859.

Feeling my end is near, I make the following statement of my own free will and without solicitation. In full exercise of all my faculties, and feel that I am doing my duty by so doing.

I was born in the city of Liverpool, England (on the 6th day of December 1784). My father was a seaman and when I was young I followed the same occupation. And it happened, that when, on a passage from Spain to the West Indies, our ship was attacked by free-traders, as they called themselves, but they were pirates.

We all did our best, but were overpowered, and the whole crew, except three, were killed. I was one of the three they did not kill. They carried us on board their ship and kept us until next day when they asked us to join them. They tried to get us to join them willingly, but we would not, when they became enraged and loaded three cannon and lashed each one of us before the mouth of each cannon and told us to take our choice to join them, as they would touch the guns and that damn quick. It is useless to say we accepted everything before death, so we came one of the pirates' crew. Both of my companions were killed in less time than six months, but I was with them for more than two years, in which time we collected a vast quantity of money from different ships we captured and we buried a great amount in two different lots. I helped to bury it with my own hands. The location of which it is my purpose to point out, so that it can be found without trouble in the Bahama islands. After I had been with them for more than two years, we were attacked by a large warship and our commander told us to fight for our lives, as it would be death if we were taken. But the guns of our ship were too small for the warship, so our ship soon began to sink, when the man-of-war ran alongside of our vessels and tried to board us, but we were sinking too fast, so she had to haul off again, when our vessel sank with everything on board, and I escaped by swimming under the stern of the ship, as ours sank, without being seen, and holding on to the ship until dark, when I swam to a portion of the wrecked vessel floating not far away. And on that I floated. The next morning the ship was not seen. I was picked up by a passing vessel the next day as a shipwrecked seaman.

And let me say here, I know that no one escaped alive from our vessel except myself and those that were taken by the man-of-war. And those were all executed as pirates—so I know that no other man knows of this treasure except myself and it must be and is where we buried it until today and unless you get it through this statement it will remain there always and do no one any good.

Therefore, it is your duty to trace it up and get it for your own benefit, as well as others, so delay not, but act as soon as possible.

I will now describe the places, locations, marks, etc., etc., so plainly that it can be found, without any trouble.

The first is a sum of one million and a half dollars ($1,500,000)—

At this point John paused. We all took a long breath, and Charlie Webster gave a soft whistle and smacked his lips.

"A million and a half dollars. What ho!"

Then I, happening to cast my eye through the open door, caught sight of a face gazing through the ironwork of the outer office with a fixed and glittering expression, a face anything but prepossessing, the face of a halfbreed, deeply pockmarked, with a coarse hook nose and evil-looking eyes, unnaturally close together. It was evident from his expression that he had not missed a word of the reading.

"There is someone in the outer office," I said, and John rose and went out.

"Good morning, Mr. Saunders," said an unpleasantly soft and cringing voice.

"Good morning," said John, somewhat grumpily, "what is it you want?"

It was some detail of account, which being dispatched, the man shuffled off, with evident reluctance, casting a long, inquisitive look at us seated at the desk, and John, taking up the manuscript once more, resumed:

. . . . a sum of one million and one half dollars—buried at a cay known as Dead Men's Shoes, near Nassau, in the Bahama islands. About fifty feet (50 ft.) south of this Dead Men's Shoes is a rock, on which we cut the form of a compass. And twenty feet (20 ft.) East from the cay is another rock on which we cut a cross (X). Under this rock it is buried four feet (4 ft.) deep.

The other is a sum of one million dollars ($1,000,000). It is buried on what was known as Short Shrift Island; on the highest point of this Short Shrift island is a large cabbage wood stump and twenty feet (20 ft.) south of that stump is the treasure, buried five feet (5 ft.) deep and can be found without difficulty. Short Shrift island is a place where passing vessels stop to get fresh water. No great distance from Nassau, so it can be easily found.

The first pod was taken from a Spanish merchant and it is in Spanish silver dollars.

The other on Short Shrift island is in different kinds of money, taken from different ships of different nations—it is all good money.

Now friends, I have told you all that is necessary for you to know to recover these treasures and I leave it in your hands and it is my request that when you read this, you will at once take steps to recover it, and when you get it, it is my wish that you use it in a way most good to yourself and others. This is all I ask.

I am, truly your friend,
HENRY P. TOBIAS.

"Henry P. Tobias?" said Charlie Webster. "Never heard of him. Did you, John?"

"Never!"

And then there was a stir in the outer office. Someone was asking for

"Who Is That Fellow?" I Asked Charlie.

the secretary of the treasury. So John rose.

"I must get to work now, boys. We can talk it over tonight." And then, handing me the manuscript: "Take it home with you, if you like, and look it over at your leisure."

As Charlie Webster and I passed out into the street I noticed the fellow of the sinister pockmarked visage standing near the window of the inner office. The window was open, and anyone standing outside could easily have heard everything that passed inside. As the fellow caught my eye he smiled unpleasantly and slunk off down the street.

"Who is that fellow?" I asked Charlie. "He's a queer-looking specimen."

"Yes! he's no good. Yet he's more half-witted than bad, perhaps. His face is against him, poor devil."

And we went our ways till the evening, I to post home to the further study of the narrative. There, seated on the pleasant veranda, I went over it carefully, sentence by sentence. While I was reading, someone called me indoors. I put down the manuscript on the little bamboo table at my side and went in. When I returned a few moments afterward the manuscript was gone!

Wanted Masculine Touch.

Bobby was a small boy, but he objected vigorously to a little waist that had a big collar and cuffs with a narrow ruffle around the edge. When asked the reason he said he didn't like the "girl" on it.

Georgette Is In Favor With All

What did we wear before georgette crepe was invented? Experiment as we will with every other material, we come back to this with joy and comfort, recognizing the service and beauty few other fabrics offer, notes a prominent fashion correspondent.

Of more than usual loveliness are the gorgeous frocks being displayed for more or less elaborate occasions. While many seem to have tired somewhat of the heavily beaded dresses so long esteemed, others seek them out assiduously, seeming to prefer the chemise type with its beading to all other gowns of thin material.

Now that the blue dyes are of such uncertain quality, and few of the manufacturers will sell them with a guarantee of their lasting attributes, the dark blues are harder to find, and therefore we notice many variations of the blue shades which have not been often seen. For instance, the exquisite horizon blue of the French uniforms developed in georgette makes ideal dresses for country club wear.

One just from France has an apron effect across the front made by placing row after row of blond footing one above the other from the hem of the skirt almost to the waist. This skirt, by the way, deviates somewhat from the straight up and down effect of the majority and seems to be cut after the circular fashion of several seasons ago. The rows of the footing which form the apron, line on the front end at the sides of the skirt just as an apron would do. The extra fullness of the skirt is gathered at the back, where a handsome sash of blue satin of the exact shade of the georgette is tied in a large bow with long loops and ends.

The waist has a plastron in front bordered at each side with a bit of the narrow footing. The collar falls away from the throat at the front in a becoming depth and is a shallow bit of the blue bordered with the footing at the back of the neck.

The sleeves are longer than the French, which persistently reveal the elbow at just the most awkward length. The footing also trims these in a straight around band at the cuff over the elbow.

Footing Used Extensively.

Footing is extensively used this season. There are many varieties. The finest is called French blond, and has a narrow edge like French seaming braid as a finish. The texture of this is extremely fine, like the threads in real lace. All footing is narrow, seldom over two inches wide. The point d'esprit, the plain white or the black, is introduced on every part of the frock. Some of the prettiest collars one can find are made of bands of footing gathered into a puff and placed between rows of fine valenciennes lace. But to return to our georgettes, a companion dress to the blue beauty I have been describing repeats the skirt except for the bands of footing. The waist is of the plainest shirtwaist type, relieved by bands of the fashionable Margot lace placed in perpendicular manner so as to form an entire jacket effect, the ends of which appear below the wide sash of blue satin.

A printed navy georgette in slender, graceful lines. It is a cool costume, appropriate for house, street and semiformal wear.

The printed georgettes are greatly in demand. A lovely Dresden flower design with a white background and little blossoms of blue and pink thickly scattered all over its surface has wee ruffles of white organdie at intervals across the front in the popular apron effect noticed upon almost every other gown.

These tiny ruffles are scarcely half an inch wide, but because they are fluted and so stiff they stand out effectively and make a delightful trimming. The drapery of this skirt is graceful in the extreme, hardly possible to describe, however, except to say that it falls in long loops from under the sash of rose pink satin.

The bodice has a fold of the flowered georgette draped across the front in a monk's collar fashion, seemingly one of the most popular ways of finishing this sort of frock at the neck. The organdie frills border this, too, and the short sleeves are likewise edged with the frills.

The blue and white printed georgettes are among the most successful gowns of the summer. They are made in almost every fashion, with straight slips of dark blue satin or silk underneath as a foundation, while the printed fabric is draped in straight tunic with unbroken lines from shoulders almost to hem. A wide sash of dark blue satin is tied loosely about the waist and left to hang somewhat lower in the back to give the sort of overhanging lines and long waist effect so much sought. This way of making the printed georgettes is excellent for the dark blues or black and white, and in the sort of afternoon dress one is always needing during the summer.

This "town blouse" is of white georgette flowered in daffodil yellow and soft green, decorated with wooden beads in green and blue.

Chemise Dress a Boon.

The chemise dress is a boon to almost every woman, for it requires a sash, and sashes, wide or narrow belts and the drooping waistline cover a multitude of faulty figures which are revealed with unsparing frankness in separate waist and skirt. The thick waist appears almost slim when the wide sash and belt are cleverly arranged so as not to accentuate, while a waist and skirt seem to point only to the added girth.

Few women who have attained this undesirable thickness through the waist realize apparently what a top-heavy look they have with a light shirtwaist above a dark skirt—if they did all would abandon this fashion and at least have skirt and waist of the same color, all white, for instance, or all blue.

It is not safe always to follow one's neighbor's choice in the matter of clothes, however lovely they appear on that neighbor. We can all, the thick and the thin, hail happily the summer sash and cling to it as long as the designers of women's clothes will let us.

Dainty for Summer Wear.

Contrasting with these rather awkward dresses are the charming things of pale georgette and tinted lace. They are as delicate and dainty as summer clouds, refined and "ladylike," an old fashioned word which has been lost in a maze of uniforms and tight skirts and other sartorial diversities until we seldom see this sort of dress.

The tinted lace is really enchanting. A silvery gray chiffon frock made over a tight slip of gray taffeta lets this slip show below the upper draperies of the soft chiffon and the pale gray lace tinted to match the exact shade. Along the edge of the silken petticoat there is a quilted ruffle of the taffeta which holds the petticoat in in a slightly bobbled effect about the ankles.

The lace used for this is the all-over shadow lace with its cobweb fineness. It is wide enough to drape one side entirely and falls over the georgette in soft, graceful lines. The gray lace appears also almost entirely covering the waist, draping in front in the sort of monk's collar I mentioned above. A sash of soft, silvery gray satin confines the waist and hangs at just the right angle at one side. Lavender chiffon with entre deux of the softly tinted lace is not only lovely but has an added charm in being different from ordinary things.

The frock as to line follows the draped designs of this type of dress; the charm, however, lies in the beauty and the novelty of the tinted lace combined so cleverly.

Velvet Ribbon Girdles.

Black velvet ribbon about one inch to one and one-half inches wide is used as girdles on some of the most attractive summer dresses of voile and organdie.

BETTER CHICKENS IN SOUTH

Propitious Climate Enables Owner to Produce Eggs to Better Advantage—Some Obstacles.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Increased interest in poultry raising in the general farming sections of the South, with purchase of much better stock, is reported by a specialist of the United States department of agriculture who recently investigated the status and activities of Old Mother Hen in Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas. Producers are working not only to supply the home market but eggs are also being shipped from Mississippi, Alabama and Texas to Memphis, St. Louis, New York and other marketing centers.

The advantages of the South for poultry keeping are manifold, and include a propitious climate, which enables the flock owner to produce eggs to better advantage during the winter season, while he also can make use of simpler and cheaper houses than can his northern associates. Furthermore the favorable weather conditions in the South promote the feeding of green stuff to the hens practically the year around.

There are certain disadvantages, too, such as prevalence of insect pests, including mites, lice, and in some sections mosquitoes and stick-tight fleas, as well as the blue bug in parts of Texas. Furthermore southern markets are not high-paying consumers of locally produced eggs. This is particularly true in the resort section of Florida, where for many years the trade has been accustomed to import its eggs from the North and West. It does not readily transfer this business to local producers. In addition the southern market for eggs is usually "spotted," due to fluctuations in the tourist traffic.

During the heat of summer egg losses in the South aggregate a considerable sum, largely due to the development of fertile eggs. It is essential that southern producers exert every effort to produce and market only infertile eggs in order to control this source of loss. A common opinion prevails that the leghorns are particularly adapted to southern conditions, but according to the experience of the specialists of the United States department of agriculture southern poultrymen realize just as satisfactory results—and in many instances more favorable returns—from the maintenance of the heavier, general-purpose birds.

A number of failures in the poultry business on the part of newcomers in Florida, who embarked in specialized production of poultry products, are explained by the fact that most of them were unfamiliar with local conditions and started on too extensive a scale. A beginner in chicken raising in a new locality should always start on a small scale and expand his operations as he learns more about local conditions and as his returns from the business justify. For the man who is experienced in poultry raising and who will adapt himself to new conditions readily and not take excessive risks, and who is supplied with plenty of working capital the southern states apparently offer a fair opportunity.

WHITE-SHELLED EGG LAYERS

Fowls of Mediterranean Breeds Best Suited for This Purpose—Classed as Nonsitters.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Poultry of the Mediterranean or egg breeds are best suited for the production of white-shelled eggs. Representatives of this class are bred largely for the production of eggs rather than for meat production. Among the popular breeds of this class are: Leghorn, Minorca, Ancona, and Andalusian. One of the outstanding characteristics of the egg breeds is the fact that they are classed as nonsitters. That is, as a rule, they do not become broody and hatch their eggs. When fowls of this class are kept artificial incubation and brooding are usually employed.

CLEMENCEAU IN GREAT BATTLE

French Premier Starts His Fight for a Vote of Confidence.

DEBATE ON FOOD SITUATION

Chamber Is Crowded, With All the Ministers on the Government Bench—France Gripped With All Kinds of Troubles.

Paris, July 23.—Premier Clemenceau's fight for a vote of confidence opened in the chamber of deputies with a statement by Deputy Francois-Fournier, who discussed the general policies of the government.

M. Clemenceau and all the ministers were on the government bench. The chamber was crowded.

M. Francois-Fournier, opening the debate, recalled the meeting on Friday when a vote on the food policy showed the government to have a minority. He said M. Boret, food minister, who resigned, was abandoned by his colleagues, who left him to struggle alone, but that it was the government's economic policy that led to M. Boret's resignation. He said the economic situation was serious and that the country considers the government's announced program to be insufficient.

Closer Alliance With Italy.

After criticizing in detail the economic policy of the government M. Francois-Fournier took up the foreign policy. He advocated a more intimate alliance with Italy and concluded by asking the chamber to say if it indorsed the government's errors, which he declared compromised the fruits of victory.

M. Joseph J. B. E. Noulens, the new food minister, in reply outlined the government's economic policy. He told of measures taken to increase the supply of wheat and sugar and asserted the government could not be taxed with lack of foresight. In conclusion he said he would oppose food speculators implacably and would prosecute all offenders.

M. Clementel, minister of commerce, emphasized the necessity of maintaining control of wheat and sugar throughout the world and announced that the allied governments had decided to organize conferences, in which neutral nations should take part, to reach conclusions on the critical economic situation throughout the world and to submit these findings to all governments.

Wheat Famine Threatens.

France, gripped by political economic and industrial troubles, is now threatened with a meat and wheat famine.

The nation suddenly has awakened to the possible necessity of greater food restrictions than were enforced even during the war.

The emergency has caused it to dispatch to London M. Vilgrain, who will endeavor to get from the allied economic council certain concessions in ships, wheat and meat.

There is barely sufficient wheat now procurable to fill the needs until August 31. In addition, the coming harvest will be so far under normal that the 1919-20 crop will show a shortage of at least 80,000,000 bushels.

SCOUTS SHANTUNG BUGABOO

Harvard President Says Treaty Opponents Lack Knowledge of the Situation.

New York, July 23.—Dr. A. Lawrence, president of Harvard university, declared in a statement to the executive committee of the League to Enforce Peace here, that the objections to the peace treaty based on the Shantung provision "is a bugaboo founded on insufficient popular knowledge of the facts."

"Germany cedes to Japan only the rights that she acquired from China by the treaty of March 6, 1898," he said. "This gives certain industrial concessions in regard to railroads, etc., in the province of Shantung, but the only territory ceded is a strip of land 30 miles wide around the Bay of Kiaochow, and this only by a lease for 99 years, China expressly retaining the sovereignty, though not exercising it during the period of the lease."

Thumb-Bells.

Sailors used to wear a little contrivance on their thumbs; they called them first thumb-bells, then later thimbles. It is claimed that they were used in the days of Herculaneum. It takes 20 men and a great deal of expensive machinery to make a thimble. They were introduced into Great Britain from Holland in 1695 by one John Softing, who thus brought also a new and important industry into England.

FORTY MILLIONS FOR AIR SERVICE

CONGRESS GRANTS ENOUGH TO KEEP UP EQUIPMENT AND RECRUIT PERSONNEL.

NOT ALL AIRMEN ASKED FOR

Vast Sum Was Needed to Put Aircraft Manufacturing Industry on Production Basis, but America Was Ready When Armistice Came.

By EDWARD B. CLARK.

Washington.—Congress has appropriated $40,000,000 through the army supply bill for the use of the air service. This is not as much money as the airmen asked, but it will enable the service to keep up its equipment and a fairly strong personnel, and will enable the United States probably to have airplanes enough for an ordinary emergency.

People have been wondering what became of all the money that was voted for the air service in war time. It seems likely that some of it was wasted, but there has been perhaps no proper appreciation of the enormous initial cost which the government had to stand in order to get the great aircraft manufacturing industry started on the basis of production that seemingly was necessary.

Brig. Gen. William Mitchell, who is in charge of aviation operations in the war department, was in command of the American aviation service in the St. Mihiel drive. He has just testified that when the drive was started more airships were concentrated in the immediate vicinity than ever had been brought together within a like area since the war began. During the drive 1,500 planes were sent into action. General Mitchell was the first American officer to fly over the Hun line.

It is said to be necessary that the airplane service of the United States should be reconstructed. As General Mitchell put it:

"The personnel which has been trained as a result of this war is largely scattered throughout the country. We have a wonderful basis of personnel returning from Europe, but they had to go home. A great majority of them would not stay in the service because it looked like a hopeless future for them, as very little encouragement for an air service of any importance in the near future was held out."

Air Forces Were About Ready.

It is pretty generally agreed that when the armistice went into effect the United States, so far as its forces were concerned, was just getting ready "to do business" on a proper scale. It is true that the St. Mihiel drive took place two months before the armistice went into effect, but the concentration of flyers at that place left some other places without proper American air equipment. Not many planes were lost in the St. Mihiel engagement. Later in the Argonne the losses were heavy, but no heavier and perhaps not as heavy as it was expected would be the case in hard engagements of that kind. Of the 1,500 machines at St. Mihiel 550 were American and operated by Americans.

It is understood that the airplane service of the United States with the Army of Occupation was on a basis of efficiency, one that would have enabled the Americans to conduct operations in Germany, if they had been necessary, on a proper scale so far as the air service was concerned.

Along the Mexican border today there is a considerable number of airplanes, but not enough, it is understood, to meet even the minor warfare which it is possible may have to be conducted there within the near future. With its $40,000,000 it is probable the air service of the United States can be put on a strong peace basis with sufficient additional strength to meet any small war in which this country may be compelled to engage.

"Archies" Seldom Hit Planes.

While on the western front in 1915 and again in 1918 I witnessed considerable air action. The thing which as early as 1915 was the most striking feature of air service was the seeming impossibility, or almost impossibility of destroying an airplane by fire from the ground. Another striking thing was the apparent inability of the bombers in the airplanes to hit any specific object on the ground at which they were aiming.

Toward the end of the war the bombers were getting more accurate, but there was little change in the situation so far as it affected the accuracy of fire of the anti-aircraft gunmen.

War Brings Out No Candidates.

Politicians in Washington have taken note of the fact, and are interested in it, that the front line of battle in the great world's war has produced no candidate for the presidency of the United States, and this thought takes cognizance of the truth that both Generals Leonard Wood and John J. Pershing are mentioned in connection with the nomination of the Republican party.

So far as one can determine, there is no active campaign in behalf of General Pershing, and thus far the politicians seem to think he has little chance of the nomination. In fact republicans in Washington of all kinds of views seem to believe that Pershing will not seek the nomination and that no active effort will be made in his behalf.

So far as Leonard Wood is concerned the feeling to that, while he is a candidate, his candidacy is in no sense a product of the present war. Politicians say Wood's name would have been mentioned for the nomination, more than mentioned, probably, if there had been no war.

No other war in which the United States has been engaged has failed to produce its presidential candidate.

Reason for the Condition.

There is a reason for the failure of this war to produce presidential candidates. The general officers who served in France did not come into close personal touch with their men, except in the cases of one or two major generals, and quite a number of brigadier generals, none of whom, however, have been considered as constituting presidential timber.

In previous times the soldiers themselves have not always been the prime means of securing honors for their leaders. The civilians of the United States nominated and elected Grant. Roosevelt's following in the Spanish war was only that of a regiment. He was not elected president, of course, immediately on his return from Cuba, but his record there made him governor of New York and vice president of the United States, an office which, of course, carried with it the possibility, and in his case, the certainty of his becoming president.

The instant the United States entered the war with Germany the policy of the suppression of the names of commanding officers went into effect. Pershing's name was the only one mentioned except that of the commanding officer of the first division which went to France. His name got into the papers frequently through no fault or desire of his own. It was printed because his division was the only American outfit in France, and the newspaper correspondents then had just one unit of American troops to write about, and naturally they "broke bounds" and had considerable to say about the commanding officer. Not long after this this major general commanding the division was ordered back to the United States, and there are men who think the fact that his name, without his consent, got into print, was the only reason why he was ordered to return to this country.

Why Names Were Suppressed.

The deeds of men like Liggett, Dickman, Bundy, Edwards, Bullard and some others were of high enough degree to arouse the enthusiasm of the American people and to insure their plaudits if the deeds had been allowed to appear in print with the names of the men who, with their divisions, had accomplished them.

The general officers who commanded armies, corps and divisions in France are some of them Democrats and some of them Republicans. They are divided between the two parties about equally, in fact. Yet today no one seemingly cares whether Bullard, for instance, is a Republican, which he is not, or a Democrat, which he is. Dickman also is a Democrat, so it is said, while Bundy and Edwards are said to be Republicans. An inquiry has failed to disclose the politics of Liggett. It is taken for granted by the politicians that Pershing is a Republican, although he seems to have been silent on the subject of his affiliations.

Possibly the American people do not understand thoroughly why it was supposed to be necessary to keep the names of the general officers out of print. The Germans, long before the war began, had a perfect system of study and espionage. They knew the characteristics and the bent of mind of every high ranking officer in the American army. It was thought it would be an advantage to the Germans to know just what general officers of the American forces were on their immediate fronts. It was taken for granted that the Germans, if they heard this man or that man was on the Moselle front, for instance, would adapt their tactics in accordance with their ideas of the opposing general's temperament and experience, or lack of experience, in the field.

Diplomats May Shun America.

When several weeks had gone by and no one had been appointed to take the place of Lord Reading as the ambassador of Great Britain to the United States, wonder began to grow in Washington. "Why the delay?"

A jocose answer to the question was given by a member of parliament who suggested to the brethren that it was possible the fact that the United States had gone dry was responsible for the disinclination of any Englishman of high rank to serve his country in Washington.

Now, British humor is sometimes past the fathoming. There were people in these good United States who thought that the member of parliament was serious when he unburdened himself of his reason for the lack of ambassadorial material for the Washington post. Probably the truth is that it was a case of dry humor. However, let it be said that it is a pretty safe assumption that no Britisher, no Frenchman, and nobody else who lives in a foreign country and who has some chance of representing his nation in this land of the free, is entirely happy over the prospect of a dry time in the capital of the U. S., "S" in this case, as some put it, standing for Sahara.

Jap Industry Increasing.

The plateglass industry in Japan has greatly expanded since the world war. Before the war about 550,000 boxes of glass were consumed annually, 420,000 boxes of which were imported from Belgium and Germany, the remainder being of home manufacture. During the past year 850,000 boxes were manufactured in Japan, of which 600,000 boxes were consumed at home, and the remaining 250,000 boxes were exported.

External Substitute.

Here is a famous Chinese humorous story. A traveler stopped at a house and asked for a cup of tea. Having none on hand, the host sent his son out to procure some. Meanwhile the hostess put a pot of water on the fire to boil. The son did not return, and it became necessary to add some more water to the pot. This was done several times. The son still remained absent, and finally the wife said to her husband: "Inasmuch as the tea does not seem to be forthcoming, perhaps you had better offer your guest a bath."

INCREASE WEIGHT AND VITALITY WITH PHOSPHATE

Nothing Like Plain Bitro-Phosphate to Put on Firm, Healthy Flesh and to Increase Strength, Vigor and Nerve Force.

The average person is beginning to realize more and more that the lack of physical strength and nerve exhaustion (frequently evidenced by excessive thinness) are the direct cause not only of the failure to succeed in life's struggle for the necessities of existance, but also for the handicap in one's social aspirations. Compare the thin, sickly, angular frame with the well rounded form which is usually accompanied by the bloom of health and attractiveness.

That millions of people are conscious of this handicap is evident from the continued appearance in newspapers and magazines of many suggestions proposing various remedies in food or medicine or exercises, either of which might or might not be appropriate for a given case.

Authorities, however, agree that healthy nerve tissue is absolutely essential to a strong, robust body and mind. Weak nerves, while indicated by a multitude of different symptoms, more immediately and generally result in lack of energy, sleeplessness, irritability, depression, etc., which conditions gradually consume the healthy flesh, leaving ugly hollows, a flat chest, bony neck and scrawny arms and legs.

Our bodies need more phosphate than most of them are able to extract from the foods we eat nowadays, and many opinions affirm that there is nothing which may be taken into the human system that so effectively supplies this deficiency as the pure organic phosphate known as bitro-phosphate and sold by good druggists everywhere.

The essential phosphoric food elements in bitro-phosphate assimilated by the nerve cells should soon produce a pleasing change in nerve energy and hence increased vitality and strength. With the burdens of nervousness, sleeplessness, lack of energy, etc., lifted, normal weight with its attractive fullness and ruddy glow of health replaces the former picture of skin and bones.

CAUTION:—Although Bitro-Phosphate is unexcelled for the relief of nervousness and attendant disorders, owing to its tendency to increase weight, one should watch the scales while taking it unless it is the desire to put on flesh.

POTTED MEATS AND FISH.

In England potted meats are an every-day occurrence, and the knowledge of potting is known by the plainest cooks. Meats such as ham, tongue or chicken, as well as fish left over from a meal, is potted for a luncheon dish, rather than making it into hash which is too common in most of our families. The goodness of potted meats depends upon the pounding and seasoning. If carefully prepared and put away they will keep for a long time and will be found most helpful in preparing emergency dishes.

Potted Chicken.—Take cold roast chicken, rejecting the skin and sinews, chop fine and to every pint allow a half cupful of chopped ham or tongue. Put the bones of the chicken into a saucepan, add a pint of cold water and simmer until there is a half pint of stock; strain and remove the fat. Pound the chicken, ham or tongue to a smooth paste. An old-fashioned mortar and pestle is used for this, or it may be ground through the meat chopper until fine. Then pound, add a little of the broth to thicken; season with cayenne, nutmeg and a tablespoonful of butter. Put into small jars and press down tightly, cover with a cloth, and cover the cloth with a paste made of flour and water, and bake in a moderate oven one-half hour, the jars standing in water. Take out, remove the cover and pour melted butter over the meat. Tie with a paper moistened with white of egg and keep in a cool, dry place. This will keep for months, and makes an ideal hot weather dish. Fresh beef's tongue, cold roast veal, boiled or roast mutton, ham and smoked tongue may all be potted in the same manner.

Potted Fish.—Pick cold, cooked fish to pieces, season with salt, pepper and a little mace, then put into a jar, tie tightly with a piece of muslin, cover with a flour paste, stand the jar in water and bake one hour in a moderate oven. When done and cold, pound the fish to a paste, pack in the jars and cover with melted butter.

Brood not on swords or slights, their biting force
Is measured by their housing mischief seeds,
Which, nursed and tended, bring forth poison weeds,
Whose bitter crop is hatred and remorse.

SOUPS OF SUMMER FRUITS.

Fruit soups are not commonly used among the people of America. In the old world both the prince and peasant enjoy them summer and winter. Chilled with shaved ice they may be attractive, refreshing, as well as nourishing. With fruit soups, the nourishment depends upon the ingredients used as with other soups.

Such fruits as prunes, raisins, figs, bananas, persimmons and pawpaws, have more food value than most other fruits, though lacking in other ingredients. The addition of stock or milk and egg also adds to the food value. Dried or canned fruit may be used in soup making as well as fresh fruit.

Apple and Rice Soup.—Core and slice very thin eight unpeeled apples. Cook them with a half a cupful of rice in two quarts of boiling water until both the fruit and rice are soft, then put through a sieve, add spice and half a cupful of orange or grape fruit marmalade. Serve hot.

Strawberry and Orange Soup.—Sprinkle a pint of strawberries with sugar and let stand on ice for one hour. Meantime make a sirup with one and a half quarts of water and a pound of sugar and a quart of fresh berries, with the juice of one lemon. Mash, strain and add a cupful of orange juice with the prepared berries in sugar. Serve ice cold.

Raspberry and Mulberry Soup.—Wash and drain one quart each of raspberries and mulberries, mash them, add a pound of sugar and let stand for one hour. Then put through a sieve, heat gradually, and when at the boiling point thicken with two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch rubbed smooth in a little water. Serve hot or cold, adding the juice of a lemon or a lime and half a cupful of finely shredded almonds just before serving.

Prune and Peach Soup.—Take one-third of a pound of dried prunes and two-thirds of a pound of dried peaches, soak over night. In the morning add a pint of cold water and let them cook to the boiling point, then add two tablespoonfuls of sago; cook until the sago is clear. Add a cupful of cherry, cranberry, or other tart juice. Serve hot or cold.

Cherry and Quince Soup.—Stem and stone a pint of deep red cherries; place them in a saucepan with the juice and grated rind of a lemon, half a cupful of quince juice and a pint of water; cook until the cherries are tender, then thicken with cornstarch and cook until the starch is well cooked. Serve hot.

Thou mayest not rest in any lovely thing,
Thou who wert formed to seek and to aspire;
For no fulfillment of thy dreams can bring
The answer to thy measureless desire.
The beauty of the round green world is not
Of the world's essence; far within the sky
The tints which make this bubble bright are wrought;
The bubble bursts; the light can never die.

—Lucy Larcom.

HERE'S A RAISIN.

Until the shortage of sugar, we never realized the wealth of sweetness stored in some of our dried fruits, and never considered them in regard to their sugar value. As raisins are three-fourths sugar, why not take advantage of that when using them in various dishes? The saving of sugar is not so vital now, but we still need to use economy so that foreign nations may have a share.

A handful of raisins added to almost any fruit salad adds to its flavor and richness.

For a toothache one of the pleasant remedies is a split raisin, sprinkled with a few grains of cayenne; press the pieces together and place the raisin on the gum nearest the tooth. A hot raisin is said to cure earache.

Apples Stuffed With Raisins.—Wash, core and remove the pulp from a dozen smooth, firm apples. Put through the meat chopper two cupfuls of the apple removed, and two cupfuls of seeded raisins; add one tablespoonful of lemon juice. Stuff the apples with this mixture and place them in a greased baking pan. Into a sauce pan put a cupful each of water and corn sirup, add a tablespoonful of butter and boil for five minutes. Pour this sauce over the apples and bake until they are tender. Serve either hot or cold.

Raisin Pancakes.—Beat the yolks of three eggs, add two cupfuls of milk (sour), two tablespoonfuls of melted fat, three cupfuls of flour, a teaspoonful of salt and one teaspoonful of soda. Beat well, then add one cupful of seedless raisins and fold in the stiffly beaten whites. Cook on a hot griddle and serve with maple sirup or honey.

A few chopped and steamed raisins added to ordinary boiled frosting makes a very good cake filling. Nuts will make a still richer filling, if a few are added, finely chopped.

In counting off our life
By harvest moons, the checkered, toil-some years
Show in their record more of peace than strife,
More joy than sorrow, more of smiles than tears.

GOOD EATS FOR HOT WEATHER.

During the summer the wise housemother serves plenty of vegetables and fruits, cutting down on meats, rich pastries and puddings, thus saving herself and the digestion of her family.

As most people like a bit of sweet to end the dinner, why not prepare a plate of stuffed dates or a dish of homemade candy to substitute on the days that fruit is not served as a dessert?

Pastry shells filled with fresh fruit or with various gelatin mixtures are both pleasing to the eye and palate. The fruit may be crushed, sweetened and mixed with or garnished with sweetened whipped cream. The shell of course is baked, and when used with fruit which will soak its delicate texture should not be filled until ready to serve. With the gelatin, however, that may be put into the shell as soon as it is stiff enough. Make the gelatin mixture and when it begins to set, beat it well with a Dover beater, then let chill and fold in the stiffly beaten whites or whipped cream or serve it piled high in the crust with a border of whipped cream and berries. One will find many new and pretty ways of serving these dainty pies.

Ceylon Tomato Salad.—Peel three solid tomatoes, cut them into halves and press out the seeds. Chop the tomatoes and put into a bowl, add a tablespoonful of lemon juice, a teaspoonful of salt, a tablespoonful of chopped onion and the same of green pepper, with half a teaspoonful of paprika. Mix and turn into a dish in which it is to be served. Add four tablespoonfuls of coconut cream and serve at once.

Coconut Cream.—To prepare coconut cream grate one good sized coconut and pour a pint of boiling water over it. Wash and stir until all the flavor has been washed from the fiber. Turn into a cheesecloth and press firmly. Stand the milk thus obtained in a cool place over night, when a thick cream will have formed on the surface. Remove this and set aside for various dishes.

OF YESTERDAY AND TODAY

Italian Town, Industrial Center, Still Retains a Reminder of the Middle Ages.

Arona is best known to travelers as the station on the railroad from Milan where Lake Maggiore first bursts into view. To Italians it is best known for its plantations of American corn, a novelty in Europe.

Today, Arona is an industrial center, but off in the northeast corner the castle of Angero adds a touch to the landscape which bespeaks medieval importance. The famous Borromeos—they who produced Cardinal de Medici, who became Pope Pius IV—dwelt in ancestral halls on the outskirts of the village.

At the Hotel Reale, a tablet calls attention to the fact that Garibaldi was a guest there in 1848.

That "Arona, Lago Maggiore," Turner's wonderful canvas, was not made from photographs can be gathered from Ruskin's letter, in which he says, "No such hills are, or ever were, in sight from Arona. They are gathered together, hill by hill, partly from the Battles of Oleggio, partly from above the town here, partly from half way up the lake near Baveno and then all thrown together in one grand imaginary chain."

At a Bargain.

"I would give a thousand pounds to have a little boy like you as my own," said an elderly lady to Tommy.

"That's a rare lot of money, isn't it, ma'am?" queried Tommy, with wide-open eyes.

"Not for me," smiled the lady, "because I've got lots of money and no little children."

"Mother wouldn't let you have me for good," said Tommy slowly, but with conviction, "but—but you may hold my hand for sixpence."—From Blighty, London.

HAVE TO PURCHASE BRIDES

Santali Indian Bridegroom Must Lay Up Money Before He Can Aspire to a Wife.

The Santali Indians must literally purchase their brides. They pay a sum of money to the girl's parents—usually about 100 rupees—and, in addition, they present the mother and the female relatives with new saris or shawls.

Should the bridegroom choose a widow for his wife, she will only cost half the sum mentioned. The reason why the Santali Indians hold widows in less regard than unmarried females is because they assert that in the next world man and wife are reunited, hence a widow who marries again is only "lent" to her second husband. When a young man courts a girl who does not favor his suit, he adopts an eccentric way to cure her stubbornness. After having dipped his finger in red paint, he goes in search of the lady and imprints his mark on her forehead. Then he may claim her as his wife.

For the Neighbors' Sake.

"Extravagance," said a Pittsburgh man, "is the bane of America, and why are we extravagant? For the fun of it? No—for the neighbors' sake.

"I know a man who awoke very late one winter night and found his wife just returning to the bedroom.

"'What's that loud noise I heard?' he asked, 'and what have you been doing in the cold?'

"'It's all right, dear,' she answered. 'Go to sleep again. You see, the people are coming back home from the opera, and I just slipped down and slammed the front door hard, so that the neighbors would think we'd been there.'"

BY POOLING WOOL CLIP OF COMMUNITY SHEEP RAISERS CAN OBTAIN FULL VALUE

Buyers Purchasing Wool at Auction Sale.

[illegible] of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The wool grower who markets his [illegible] is at a disadvantage. [illegible] clip is likely to be small [illegible] enough to make any attempt [illegible] assortment methods [illegible] warrant. He competes [illegible] with many [illegible] and sellers [illegible] ignorant of the [illegible] on that the [illegible] would be [illegible] and the producers obtain [illegible] value for their product. [illegible] of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Consigned farm [illegible] wool may operate against [illegible] demand of the city [illegible] not to collected at some [illegible] and sold intelligently, or [illegible] sale or by actual bids. In [illegible] there is rarely an [illegible] representative handle wool for [illegible] so that the growers [illegible] may be consigned to a merchant in some central [illegible]. The latter method requires [illegible] time, experience, expense and [illegible].

How to Organize Selling Clubs.

When farmers of a community decide to market their wool, some one grower should be designated to act as [illegible] manager. He should make arrangements with all the growers to [illegible] their wool at a certain shipping point on a specified day. He should be on hand when the wool is graded, if that has been provided for at the loading station, and to see the wool loaded and shipped.

This plan provides a system for a permanent organization, and is the first step in a more efficient system for marketing wool. The experience gained in one year's operation under this plan is often sufficient to warrant the establishment of a permanent co-operative marketing association. When organizing such an association, the growers should meet and discuss the proposed plan thoroughly, appoint a committee to investigate the possibilities for financing, suitable warehouse accommodations, shipping facilities, and any other local conditions which demand attention. Much misunderstanding may be avoided by having the plan reduced to writing, no matter how simple the co-operative idea may seem.

The success or failure of a co-operative organization for the marketing of wool depends upon the necessity for organization, local conditions, organization efficiency, and the loyalty of [illegible] to preserve. The most important factor is an organization formed for the co-operative marketing of wool is the selection of a sales manager having experience. A man not with sufficient business capabilities to command the confidence of the growers.

Preparation for Expense Funds.

If the members of the co-operative marketing association desire a part of their wool, arrangements should be made with a local banker to advance to the association a sufficient amount to cover such items. Each member should be assessed a certain amount for each pound of wool to cover the expense of loading and shipping, this amount to be deducted at the time of final settlement. Funds thus provided may be used for such expenses as labor for handling the wool, fire insurance, rental for warehouse, etc. In fixing a time for delivery of the wool, it should be remembered that in case of rain the fleeces will be dampened until the [illegible] clear dry.

The price paid for wool is determined by the grade of the clip and when selling under the co-operative plan it is frequently possible to have the wool graded at the time it is loaded. Thus each grower will know before his wool reaches the market whether it has been graded choice, average or poor. When a sufficient quantity of wool is pooled, some buyers will send a wool classer or grader to grade each grower's wool separately. If this is done, an accurate record of each farmer's clip should be kept by the manager and a statement sent to the different growers showing the number of fleeces and net weight of each grade. If possible, each grower should be present when the wool is graded, for a few actual demonstrations of this kind impress the grower and will create an incentive to produce wool of a higher grade.

If possible, arrangements to sell the wool should be made while the grader is present, so that he may represent the growers and explain in an intelligent way to the buyers the merits of the different grades. As a rule, wool growers have little definite knowledge concerning grading, shrinkage, spinning properties or value of their wool, while the buyers—at least most of them—are familiar not only with these points but have accurate information concerning market conditions and the attitude of the manufacturers towards the purchase of wool, and particularly the demand for certain grades.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PREPARING FLEECE FOR MARKET

Shear the sheep when the wool is absolutely dry, never when there is any moisture in the fleece.

The sheep should be shorn only on a smooth, dry surface, preferably a planed board flooring, never on the dirt.

Care should be taken to keep the fleece intact. Avoid second cuts, which reduce the average length of the staple.

Clip all locks from each fleece and pack separately. Never permit them to remain in the fleece.

Fleeces should be prepared with the flesh side out, never the weather side.

Fold, roll, or use fleece box for preparing the fleece.

Tie each fleece separately. Never tie two fleeces together, nor pack and market untied wool.

Use only enough twine to tie fleece securely.

Paper or hard glazed surface twine should be used. Never use sisal nor binder twine.

Never permit the fleece to come into contact with chaff, hay, dust, nor any other foreign material.

Place the tied fleeces in regulation wool sacks or cover them with canvas or new burlap.

Select a clean, dry place for storing the wool until sold. Never permit the wool to lie upon the ground nor store it in a basement.

Keep the white and black wool separate. Never permit any portion of black wool to be mixed through the white.

Divide the burry, seedy, cotted, dead, black, and gray fleeces from the clean, white, well-grown wool, and pack separately. Never pack all grades together indiscriminately.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

From many localities throughout the United States reports are being received from club leaders stating that club membership, as well as club interest, is increasing this year over last year, when special attention was given the work as a war emergency. The home demonstration agent in Natchitoches Parish, La., says: "I find that a much larger percentage of my poultry club members have pure-bred chickens and eggs this year than last and I find that this branch of the work is getting on a very substantial basis. The poultry club enrollment is twice as large as last year and the canning club nearly three times as large."

Portland, Ind.—"I had a displacement and suffered so badly from it at times I could not be on my feet at all. I was all run down and so weak I could not do my housework, was nervous and could not lie down at night. I took treatments from a physician but they did not help me. My Aunt recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I tried it and now I am strong and well again and do my own work and I give Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound the credit."—Mrs. Josephine Kimble, 935 West Race Street, Portland, Ind.

Acid-Stomach Makes 9 Out of 10 People Suffer

Doctors declare that more than 70 non-organic diseases can be traced to Acid-Stomach. Starting with indigestion, heartburn, belching, food-repeating, bloat, sour, gassy stomach, the entire system eventually becomes affected, every vital organ suffering in some degree or other. You see these victims of Acid-Stomach everywhere—people who are subject to nervousness, headache, insomnia, biliousness—people who suffer from rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica and aches and pains all over the body. It is safe to say that about 9 people out of 10 suffer to some extent from Acid-Stomach.

If you suffer from stomach trouble or, even if you do not feel any stomach distress, yet are weak and ailing, feel tired and dragged out, lack "pep" and enthusiasm and know that something is wrong although you cannot locate the exact cause of your trouble—you naturally want to get back your grip on health as quickly as possible. Then take EATONIC, the wonderful modern remedy that brings quick relief from pains of indigestion, belching, gassy bloat, etc. Keep your stomach strong, clean and sweet. Taxed, Too?

It seems to Marian that everything that she especially likes bears the burden of the new war tax—sundaes, sodas, candy, beads, and about everything she had been accustomed to ask for when mother and father went to town. Now they limit the number of luxuries they buy for her and always explain their limitation by saying "on account of the war tax" or "plus the war tax."

The other day a new baby sister came to Marian's home. Fixedly she looked at it the next day after its arrival. "What did it cost?" she asked.

"Twenty dollars," boasted her father.

The second question quickly followed, "plus the war tax?"

Safe and Sane.

"We had a safe and sane Fourth of July."

"Yes," remarked Miss Cayenne. "Children are no longer encouraged to take a morbid interest in amateur fireworks in order to entertain their parents."

Real Philosopher.

One of the dark-skinned warriors in camp just back from the Champagne grinningly indorsed the war.

"No, sah, boss, Ah ain't got a kick. Dis ahmy is the real life. Why, do you know all dah time Ah was in France Ah nevah missed a meal—not a meal."

Surprise, of course, from the listener.

A row of grinning teeth: "Well, of cohse, sometimes mah meals was about three to foah days late—but Ah got 'em all right."—Trench and Camp.

Mine Sweepers at Work.

Mine sweepers are ships that discover and sweep up explosive mines that are put into the sea in time of war for the destruction of enemy ships. Usually two small vessels work together in the mined area. The ships drag a mine cable, one end of which is on each ship, the middle part of the cable being suspended at the proper depth from floats. The mines are caught or exploded by the cable.

Affording a Comparison.

"What are you going to do with yourself this summer?"

"I'm going to help mother and the girls enjoy themselves at a summer resort," said Mr. Cumrox.

"So you are going with them?"

"No. I'm going to stay in our cool, capacious city home and write them a letter every day about how hot and uncomfortable I am."

Chinese Sweetmeats.

The Chinese are very skillful in making confectionery and possess the reputation of having some secrets the knowledge of which our own confectioners would find very desirable. They are able to empty an orange of its pulp entirely and then fill it up with fruit jelly without one being able to find the smallest cut in the rind or even a tiny hole. Indeed, they even empty an egg in this manner and fill it with a sort of almond nougat, without one being able to find the slightest break or incision in the shell.

Daily Thought.

Let time, that makes you homely, make you sage.—Parnell.

On Probation, as It Were.

Preparatory to showing Elmer his new sister, his father said: "What do you say to getting a new baby at our house, sonny?" Elmer thought a moment and then said: "Let's just rent one till we see how we like it, for Jimmy (Elmer's chum) says he is tired of his; it cries all the time."

Had Him There.

"Deacon Simms 'low he doan' approve o' churches advertisin'," remarked Shinbone; "but when Ah ast him, in dat case, wuffo' he ring the church bell fo' service he jes' had nuffin' to say."—Boston Evening Transcript.

Animal and Brute.

Broadly speaking, an animal is any living organism other than a plant, a creature that has some mode of reproduction and of respiration. The term "brute" refers to one of the higher quadrupeds, such as cows, horses, dogs, or to any animal lower than man. In a restricted sense the term "animal" is often used as a synonym for "brute."

Human Ant Hill.

In southern Tunisia is a mountain of considerable size called Douriat, which once upon a time was an active volcano. Bubbles of volcanic gases made it a veritable honeycomb of caves, which in these days are inhabited. In fact, the whole mountain is a city—a human anthill, densely populated.

Her Occupation.

Louise's mother was a busy club woman and was always serving on some committee. When Louise came home from her first day at kindergarten her mother said: "Well, dear, what did you do today?" "O," said Louise, with a patronizing air, "I was appointed on a committee to string beads."

Sunday will be a red letter day in the M. P. church. The congregation has planned for a reunion and home-coming with a basket dinner and all-day meeting. This is also the last quarterly meeting of the year and communion services will be held at the morning service. Rev. J. R. Elson, of Kendallville, and Rev. S. Heininger, of New Haven, will be present for the day. Music will be furnished by the male quartet of Kendallville. Let every member and former member of the church and Sunday school be present to make it an enjoyable day for all.

A gang of "Young Americans" were working on the M. P. church lot last Monday evening preparing it for the making of a tennis court. The lot is being put in shape as fast as help can be secured for the entertainment of the young folks of St. Joe and community. A croquet ground will be made also and some swings, teater boards and slides will be made for the entertainment of the children. The remainder of the lot will be put into sod and flowers will adorn the vacant spots. There is much to be done to put the premises in the shape that the church trustees desire, but by sticking at it at odd times the work will be accomplished.

The St. Joe elevators is a mighty busy place now-a-days. It is nothing to see six and eight wagons lined up waiting to dispose of the load of grain. The addition of some new machinery makes it possible to handle the grain about as fast as it can be unloaded and the farmers appreciate the convenient method of unloading here, too. Farmers for miles around are making St. Joe their marketing place.

The last quarterly meeting for the conference year of the St. Joe M. P. circuit will be held at St. Joe church Saturday evening at 8 o'clock. It is desired that all quarterly conference members be present with their reports. Communion services will be held on Sunday morning. Every member of the churches and congregations are urged to be present as this is the most important meeting of the year.

It is a remarkable thing when one stops long enough to think back for a few years at least, of the many changes that have taken place in a community. Last Sunday was a remarkable day at least for a number of our rural citizens, nearly fifty of them had gathered at the Dills grove, south of town, to spend the day together. Already there are located in and around St. Joe ten families that had moved here from Ohio and from the neighborhood of Peebles, Adams county. It has been the custom of some for a few years to meet in a reunion each year, but Sunday was the first time that they were all represented. The first to move to this community was that of Curtis Hoursey and wife, of near Concord, and now the families total nearly fifty. Besides the two pioneers above named that were present were Mrs. Jay Hart and family, Mrs. O. E. Inlow and family, Ray Inlow, O. E. Cannon and family, Monte Storer and family, Ed Storer and family, Harry Mann and wife, Mrs. T. D. Zinn, daughter Francis, and son, Frank; Ruth Zinn and gentleman friend, Arthur Bottom, of Fort Wayne; besides John Ulm and family and Miss Alice Tustison, who were visitors. The event was indeed a pleasant one for our Buckeye friends, and we are proud of them, believing that they will make real Hoosiers, and a credit to our community.

On next Saturday evening the Young Peoples' Division of the M. P. Sunday school will hold an ice cream social down town in a centrally location. The purpose of the social is to raise a sufficient amount of finance to equip the tennis court that is now being made at the rear of their church. The public is cordially invited to assist the young folks in their effort. We believe that the citizens of St. Joe will realize the importance of this movement and lend their encouragement as much as possible. The management desires that all the games shall be played under strict orders and the fine part is that it is not confined to the young people of the local church alone, but that the town will have access to it under the regulations that will control the young people of the local church. The affair is being planned as a community affair while the directors shall be responsible for the actions of those engaged in the sports from time to time. We need such a play ground in St. Joe and you should do all in your power to assist those who are behind the movement. Remember that you will have the opportunity of contributing something Saturday night by attending the social down town. And besides you will get your money's worth. Contributions of any amount will be received at this social by those in charge from any one who desires to help.

He found himself in a veritable sea of mud and it was only by aid of his companion, Joe Keever, that he escaped.

Newcastle.—After six of the eight employees of the city water plant and seven of the eight policemen had threatened to quit if they did not get an increase in pay, the city council voted to amend the salary ordinance giving these employees and the 13 members of the fire department a general increase of $10 on the month.

Portland.—Negotiations are under way with the directors of the Union Traction company of Indiana relative to the purchase of the power plant at Detamore and the water rights of the Cartwright stone quarry. The city of Portland is in need of a better equipped power plant and the Detamore plant will answer that purpose. The consideration is in the neighborhood of $20,000.

Notre Dame.—The annual convention of the Priests Eucharistic congress of the United States will be held at the University of Notre Dame from August 4 to 7 inclusive. Rt. Rev. Joseph Schrembs, bishop of Toledo, O., president of the organization, successor of the late Bishop Maes, and Very Rev. Dr. James A. Burns, president of Notre Dame, are making arrangements for the meeting.

Plymouth—The board of commissioners has let the contract for the construction of a concrete bridge over Yellow river, for $64,856. The bridge is to be seventy feet in width and will have two spans. It will be built on the Luten plan, which is a patented method of reinforcing concrete construction. It is to be completed by November 10. The contract is the result of a two-year campaign by the city of Plymouth.

Connersville.—The city council has passed an ordinance annexing a strip of territory two squares in width and three-quarters of a mile in length, lying immediately north of the present north corporation line. It embraces the Lake Erie & Western railroad tracks and the Big Four railroad tracks, each for the distance of two squares, and a large number of homes, the owners of which are divided in their attitude toward annexation. The council expects protests and arguments during the two weeks of publication of the ordinance, preparatory to its becoming effective.

Huntington—In the event the state highway commission is willing to change the state road connecting Huntington and Wabash from the road through Dora to the one known as the "Wabash way," the two counties will make up the excess in cost of improving it.

South Bend—As a part of its final session in adjusting property valuations in South Bend and St. Joseph county, the county board announced that it had raised personal property appraisals of five South Bend capitalists together with the personality of an estate, from $187,980 to $9,250,000.

Fort Wayne.—John Grim, fifty-six, is dead at Tocsin, Wells county, of excitement caused by a fight with an uncle.

Winamac.—A 43-acre tract of park land adjoining Winamac has been offered to the county as a memorial to the county's soldiers and sailors.

Sullivan.—The nineteenth annual old soldiers' reunion and the first annual home-coming of the world war veterans, will be held at Hymera, August 13, 14 and 15.

Warsaw.—The Warsaw city council has bought of Charles A. Rigdon, mayor of the city, a strip of land bordering on Center lake and plans to convert it into a city park. The price paid is $4,500.

Vincennes.—Louis A. Wilkerson and Adler M. Lyons are going to build a modern theater here which, in addition to providing amusement in motion pictures, will also take care of legitimate attractions.

Evansville.—Evansville manufacturers have about completed the organization of a housing corporation for the purpose of building houses for workers. It is the plan to build 200 houses in Evansville this summer.

Alexandria.—The Alexandria Preserving company factory will open for the season run during the third week in August, according to Roy Bufkin, manager of the plant. The tomato crop in Monroe township is looking fine.

Muncie.—George Anderson, thirty-eight, negro, confessed slayer of Clyde Benadum, Muncie druggist, who was captured after a pistol duel with the police, and Harvey Lawson, held for a minor offense, are at liberty after breaking jail here.

Greencastle.—Dr. C. U. Wade, endowment secretary of DePauw university here, announced the sale of a tract of land near Lagrange, which was given to the university a few years ago by Noah K. Blough. It included 733 acres and the purchase price was $100,000.

Frankfort.—Charging that he was virtually forced into wedding Constance Taylor, English girl, while lying in a hospital near Liverpool, England, more than a year ago, Jesse L. Cox, twenty-three, has asked for an annulment of the marriage. He denies he is the father of her child.

Columbus.—The report of Henry Wagner, attendance officer for Bartholomew county, for the school year of 1918-1919, shows that there were 645 truancy cases, but no prosecutions. The large number of cases as well as leniency shown was a result of the influenza epidemic here last winter.

Princeton.—Lemuel Gentry of Spurgeon has undergone the removal of an eye at the Methodist hospital here. He attempted to throw a pitchfork up into his hayloft. One of the tines struck a timber and the fork bounced back, the end of the handle striking him squarely in the right eye, splitting the eyeball and destroying the sight.

Elwood.—The soldiers' memorial commission, recently appointed at a mass meeting of the citizens to decide on the form of memorial that would be erected in honor of the soldiers and sailors in this city in the world war, have reported in favor of a building in Callaway park, to be erected at a cost of $50,000. The plans rejected were a public hospital and a community house.

Lafayette.—Indiana is no longer a lumping ground for inferior feeding stuffs for live stock. The annual report of the state chemist at Purdue university's agricultural experiment station here, who, under the control law of 1909, administers the provisions of this statute, was issued, and shows that a decided improvement has been effected in keeping the commercial feeds up to the required standard.

Terre Haute—The board of managers of the Rose Polytechnic institute here decided to postpone indefinitely the erection of a new plant for that institution on a site east of this city on the National road. Bids were opened for the work, but the figures submitted for the construction of the preliminary buildings were so far in excess of the estimates that it was deemed unwise at this time to undertake the project and the bids were rejected.

Richmond.—Frederick E. Overholser, age twenty-six, employed by the Liberty Light and Power company, was killed at the plant of the Greenville and Richmond Gravel company near this city when he came in contact with a high tension wire used by the gravel company to convey electric current to the plant. Thirteen thousand volts passed through his body. Overholser lived at Boston, this county, and is survived by a widow.

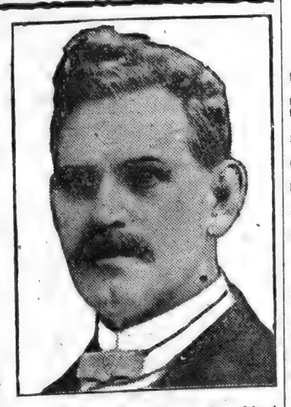
Alexandria.—Elmer Thurston, one of the largest stock feeders in Madison county, marketed 245 hogs that weighed 61,000 pounds and brought $22.50 a hundred pounds, making a total of $13,755.50 for the bunch. They averaged $56.14 a head. He still has 900 hogs in the feed lot which will be ready for the market early next fall. The hogs brought the top price for this locality. Many farmers recall back in 1893 when the Chicago market paid $3.50 and $4.00 a hundred pounds for hogs.

Rochester—Figures given out by the county board of review indicate that Fulton county, Liberty township excepted, will, under the new law, pay taxes on property to the value of $27,590,090 as compared to $11,739,680, the amount last year. The total net taxable property in 1918 was $16,411,600.

South Bend—Because the township assessor for Madison township, failed to raise valuations on improvements, the board of review placed a blanket increase of 200 per cent. on all improvements, added $10 an acre to all the land in that township, and placed a 100 per cent boost on all town lots.

OUT-OF-ORDINARY PEOPLE

THE COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE



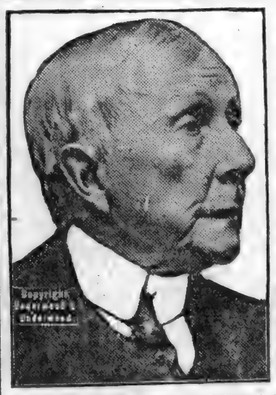
Representative William J. Graham of Illinois, whose portrait is given herewith, is chairman of the house committee investigating war department expenditures. He made an interesting report the other day. Seven men formed a "secret government of the United States," determined all the so-called war legislation "weeks and even months" before war was declared against Germany, he charged, after reading into the record a digest of the minutes of the council of national defense.

The seven men were named by Mr. Graham as Hollis Godfrey, Howard E. Coffin, Bernard M. Baruch, Samuel Gompers, Franklin H. Martin, Julius Rosenwald, and Daniel Willard, members of the advisory commission of the council.

Mr. Graham asserted the council assumed such broad powers that Major General Goethals, former chief of the purchase, storage, and traffic division of the war department, defied it; cabinet members protested against its activities, and Elbert H. Gary, president of the United States Steel corporation, accused it of operating in "flagrant violation of law."

"Behind closed doors, weeks and even months before war was declared," he said, "these seven men designed practically every war measure which congress subsequently enacted. They devised the entire system of purchasing war supplies, planned a press censorship, designed a system of food control and selected Herbert Hoover as its director, and even determined on the daylight saving scheme."

ROCKEFELLER'S EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY

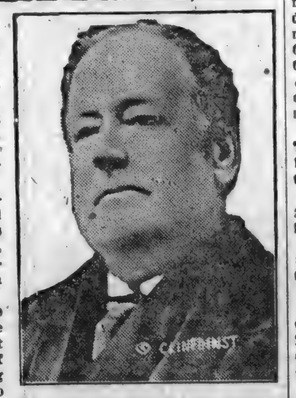


John D. Rockefeller celebrated his eighthtieth birthday the other day at his Pocantico Hills estate and then went to Seal Harbor, Me. Replying to the felicitations of his guests on his long life, Mr. Rockefeller said: "I hope you will all live to be not only eighty years old, but ninety or one hundred, for I have just begun to live."

Mr. Rockefeller has an ambition to live to be one hundred years of age—and then really begin living. Certain men who lived to reach the century mark in good condition mentally and physically have held that they had to live till ninety to realize that the world was beautiful. Certainly after eighty a man should be entitled to rest and take things easy, without self-reproach for laziness. Mr. Rockefeller takes a little olive oil each day, plays golf and refuses to worry. He need not worry about the high cost of living, certainly, for his income is believed to be more than one hundred millions.

In the meantime to every American who burns a kerosene lamp or runs a "flivver" the name of John D. Rockefeller occurs with regularity.

WILLIAM HOHENZOLLERN AT THE BAR



It looks as if William Hohenzollern would be tried in the fall, at a place to be selected. It is reported that Great Britain will furnish the presiding judge in John Andrew Hamilton, Lord Sumner, and that Sir Gordon Stewart, solicitor general of Great Britain, will lead the prosecution. German counsel for the defendant will be assisted by British lawyers, if they wish aid.

There will be five judges representing Great Britain, the United States, France, Italy and Japan. It is believed that Edward Douglass White, chief justice of the United States Supreme court, whose portrait is given herewith, will represent America.

The Germans will charge that the trial is framed in advance; that in the nature of the case the allies could not permit any other verdict than that of "guilty." We need no court finding on that point. What the allies do want to bring out is the whole of the evidence relating, first, to those fateful days when Germany cast the die for war, and, second, to the actual conduct of the war, especially the responsibility for the policy of frightfulness and the more flagrant violations of The Hague conventions.

SWIMMING CHAMPION IN POLITICS

Duke Kahanamoku, world's aquatic champ, has dived into the pool of politics over on his native shores of Hawaii and is rapidly converting his famous "crawl" into the stroke of statesmanship.

The duke shied his bath robe into the ring as candidate for supervisor in Honolulu.

When he confided his ambition to fellow Republicans on the island they said: "Fine! Poland has a pianist for premier. Why not a swimmer for a city father!"

Immediately all the ukuleles started strumming, and the dry-land candidates found themselves with a lot of figurative knots tied in their shirts in this splashing campaign for office.

Kahanamoku hung up records as a campaign speaker with as much ease as he did in aquatic competitions. All the swimmers were for him as a matter of course—and nearly everyone in Honolulu swims. In addition, the duke is the idol of all the hula and near hula girls, and they, too, danced out on vote-getting sallies for the champion.

"It looked like a swim-away for the duke when I left Honolulu," said a shrewd political dopester upon his recent arrival in San Francisco from the islands.

Kahanamoku holds several championship records. He is the fastest sprint swimmer in the world. Twice he has toured the United States as a participant in swimming events, and he represented Hawaii at the Olympic games at Stockholm in 1910.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR AUGUST 3

CHRISTIAN WORSHIP.

LESSON TEXTS—Rev. 7:9-12; John 4:1-10, 19-24; Mat. 6:5, 6; Heb. 10:19-25.

GOLDEN TEXT—God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.—John 4:24.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Mat. 4:10; Psalms 84 and 122.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Children praising God (Mat. 21:15, 16).

JUNIOR TOPIC—Worship in God's house (Luke 2:41-50).

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—Why worship and how.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—The nature and value of true worship.

1. What is Worship? (Rev. 7:12).

It is the attitude of the soul toward God, which recognizes him as the Supreme Being of the universe and benevolently inclined toward his creatures. It is the outgoing of the affections toward him and the ascription of praise and adoration to him as the one from whom all blessings come, the one to whom all glory and honor should be given, the one who is all-wise and powerful.

II. Whom to Worship (Rev. 7:10-12).

1. God (vv. 11, 12, cf. Matt. 4:10). Since in him we live, move and have our being (Acts 17:28), and from him every good and perfect gift cometh (James 1:17), we should worship and adore him.

2. Jesus Christ the Lamb (v. 10). We should worship him because he is God and because he, in the incarnation, linked himself with humanity and on the cross made an atonement for us and is now our high priest, through whom we have access to God (Heb. 10:21).

III. Qualifications for Acceptable Worship (John 4:1-10, 19-24).

This is a fine example of personal evangelism. Christ "must needs go through Samaria" to find this poor, sinful woman. He skilfully disclosed his identity to her. He knew the deep need of her soul, even the inward unrest which was hers while practicing sin. He made the point of contact by that which was uppermost in her mind, namely, water, and passed from the water of earthly to the water of everlasting life which was in himself (v. 10). In order to worship God acceptably there must be—

1. Knowledge of Christ (v. 10). Must know him as a prophet from God (v. 19)—the one sent of God (Acts 7:37, cf. Deut. 18:15) to make known to lost men the way to God. Must know him as the Messiah—the one anointed of God to save lost men (John 4:42).

2. A new nature (vv. 23, 24). Only the regenerated can worship God in spirit. Jesus declared "that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit" (John 3:6). "Except a man be born from above, he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3:3). The natural man has not the capacity to "see" God, therefore he cannot worship him. God is spirit, therefore only the one whose spirit has been quickened can enter into fellowship with him in worship.

3. A sanctified life (Heb. 10:22). The life is sanctified by the Spirit (1 Peter 1:2); through obedience to the Word of God (John 17:17).

4. Faith in God (Heb. 11:6, cf. 10:22). Pretended worship without vitalized faith is an abomination to God.

5. Men of every nation and kindred (Rev. 7:9). God is the God of all nations.

IV. Where to Worship.

1. In secret (Matt. 6:5, 6). The soul shut up with God, with the world and its cares shut out, really worships. Every Christian ought to have a secret chamber.

2. In the assembly (Heb. 10:24, 25). While the private prayer is of first importance, there is value in joint worship with fellow Christians which should not be overlooked. The actions of others are helpful in conducing a frame of mind for worship.

3. Everywhere (John 4:20-24). God is the Omnipresent Spirit, therefore wherever there is a person whose nature is spiritual he can worship. Christianity is unlike every other religion in that without ritual or temple the individual may worship God anywhere. John as truly worshiped God in Patmos as in the assembly at Ephesus, or Paul in the Roman prison as well as with the beloved saints at Philippi.

To Those Who Seek.

It profits little to know Christ himself after the flesh; but he gives his spirit to good men that searcheth the deep things of God.—John Smith.

How Can One Forget?

God living in us, and with us, and under us! How then can a man forget God?

The True Christian.

He that can apprehend and consider vice with all her baits and seeming pleasures, and yet abstain, and yet distinguish, and yet prefer that which is truly better, he is the true wayfaring Christian.—John Milton.

Finds More of God.

The deeper one digs in nature the more of God he finds.

Beauty Made by God.

HUSBAND SAVES WIFE

From Suffering by Getting Her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—"For many months I was not able to do my work owing to a weakness which caused backache and headaches. A friend called my attention to one of your newspaper advertisements and immediately my husband bought three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for me. After taking two bottles I felt fine and my troubles caused by that weakness are a thing of the past. All women who suffer as I did should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. JAS. ROHRBERG, 620 Knapp St., N. S., Pittsburgh, Pa.

Women who suffer from any form of weakness, as indicated by displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, backache, headaches, nervousness or "the blues," should accept Mrs. Rohrberg's suggestion and give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a thorough trial.

For over forty years it has been correcting such ailments. If you have mysterious complications write for advice to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

Couldn't Work

S. W. Bishop Was Laid Up By Kidney Trouble. Now Owes Good Health to Doan's.

"I owe my present good health, largely, to Doan's Kidney Pills," says S. W. Bishop, 5162 Kensington Ave., St. Louis, Mo. "I wasn't able to work. Sharp pains would catch me when I stooped or tried to lift anything, and at night the kidney secretions passed frequently and were scanty and painful. Specks seemed to be before my eyes and I would get dizzy. There was a puffiness under my eyes. I could see myself failing from day to day and I finally was laid up from June until September. I got Doan's Kidney Pills and used them. I received relief with the first box and became stronger every day. I could sleep well at night and the kidney secretions were now of natural color. The dizziness and other troubles disappeared and I picked up in weight. After I had used four boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills I looked and felt like my old self. The cure seemed a miracle and I firmly believe that my life was saved by this remedy."

By RICHARD LE GALLIENNE

Copyright by Doubleday, Page & Company

THE POCK-MARKED MAN.

Synopsis—The man who tells this story—call him the hero, for short—is visiting his friend John Saunders, British official in Nassau, Bahama Islands. Charlie Webster, a local merchant, completes the trio of friends. Conversation turning upon buried pirate treasure, Saunders produces a written document purporting to be the death-bed statement of Henry P. Tobias, a successful pirate, made by him in 1859. It gives two spots where two millions and a half of treasure were buried by him and his companions. The conversation of the three friends is overheard by a stranger, whose face is deeply pitted by small pox.

CHAPTER III.

I Charter the "Maggie Darling."

As luck would have it, the loss, or rather the theft of Henry P. Tobias' narrative was not so serious as it at first seemed, for it fortunately chanced that John Saunders had had it copied; but the theft remained none the less mysterious.

However, leaving that mystery for later solution, John Saunders, Charlie Webster and I spent the next evening in a general and particular criticism of the narrative itself. There were several obvious objections to be made against its authenticity. To start with, Tobias, at the time of his deposition, was an old man—seventy-five years old—and it was more than probable that his experiences as a pirate would date from his early manhood; they were hardly likely to have taken place as late as his fortieth year. The narrative, indeed, suggested their taking place much earlier, and there would thus be a space of at least forty years between the burial of the treasure and his deathbed revelation. It was natural to ask: Why during all those years did he not return and retrieve the treasure for himself? Various circumstances may have prevented him, the inability from lack of means to make the journey, or what not; but certainly one would need to imagine circumstances of peculiar power that should be strong enough to keep a man with so valuable a secret in his possession so many years from taking advantage of it.

For a long while, too, the names given to the purported sites of the treasure caches puzzled us. Modern maps give no such places as "Dead Men's Shoes" and "Short Shrift island," but at last, in a map dating back to 1763, we came upon one of the two names. So far the veracity of Tobias was supported. "Dead Men's Shoes" proved to be the old name for a certain cay some twenty miles long, about a day and a half's sail from Nassau, one of the long string of coral islands now known as the "Exuma Cays." But of "Short Shrift island" we sought in vain for a trace.

"All the same," said I, "the adventure calls me; the adventure and that million and a half dollars—and those 'Dead Men's Shoes'—and I intend to undertake it. I am not going to let your middle-aged skepticism discourage me. Treasure or no treasure, there will be the excitement of the quest, and all the fun of the sea."

"And some duck perhaps," added Charlie.

"And some shark fishing for certain," said John.

* * * * * * *

The next thing was to set about getting a boat and a crew.

After looking over much likely and unlikely craft we finally decided on a two-masted schooner of trim but solid build, the Maggie Darling, 42 feet over all and 13 beam; something under twenty tons, with an auxiliary gasoline engine of 24 horse power, and an alleged speed of ten knots.

Next, the crew.

"You will need a captain, a cook, an engineer and a deckhand," said Charlie, "and I have the captain and the cook all ready for you."

That afternoon we rounded them all up, including the engineer and the deckhand, and we arranged to start, weather permitting, with the morning tide, which set east at six o'clock on July 13, 1903.

Ship's stores were the next detail, and these, including fifty gallons of gasoline, over and above the tanks and three barrels of water, being duly got aboard, on the evening of July 12 all was ready for the start; an evening which was naturally spent in a parting conclave in John Saunders' snuggery.

"Why, one important thing you've forgotten," said Charlie. "Machetes—and spades and pickaxes. And I'd take a few sticks of dynamite along with you too. I can let you have the lot. We'll get them aboard tonight."

"It's a pity you have to give it away that it's a treasure hunt," said John, "but then you can't keep the crew from knowing. And they're a queer lot on the subject of treasure, have some of the rummiest superstitions. I hope you won't have any trouble with them."

"Had any experience in handling niggers?" asked Charlie.

"Not the least."

"That makes me wish I were coming with you. They are rum beggars. Awful cowards, and just like a pack of children. You know about sailing anyhow. That's a good thing. You can captain your own boat, if need be. That's all to the good. Particularly if you strike any dirty weather. But let me give you one word of advice: Be kind, of course, with them—but keep your distance all the same. And be careful about losing your temper. You get more out of them by coaxing—hard as it is, at times. And, by the way, how would you like to take old 'Sailor' with you?"

"Sailor" was a great Labrador retriever, who at that moment turned up his big head with a devoted sigh from behind his master's chair.

"Rather," I said. So "Sailor" was thereupon enrolled as a further addition to the crew.

"Old Tom," the cook, was first on hand next morning. I took to him at once. A simple, kindly old "darky" of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" type, with faithfulness written all over him, and a certain sad wisdom in his old face.

"You'll find Tom a great cook," said Charlie, patting the old man on the shoulder. "Many a trip we've taken together after duck, haven't we, Tom?"

"That's right, suh. That's right," said the old man, his eyes twinkling with pleasure.

Then came the captain—Capt. Jabez Williams—a younger man, with an intelligent, self-respecting manner, somewhat noncommittal, businesslike, evidently not particularly anxious as to whether he pleased or not, but looking competent and civil enough.

Next came the engineer, a young hulking bronze giant, a splendid physical specimen, but rather heavy and sullen and not over-intelligent to look at. The deckhand proved to be a shackly, rather silly, effeminate fellow, suggesting kilocy, but doubtless wiry and good enough for the purpose.

While they were busy getting up the anchor of the Maggie Darling I went down into my cabin to arrange various odds and ends, and presently came the captain, touching his hat.

"There's a party," he said, "outside here wants to know if you'll take him passenger to Spanish Wells."

"We're not taking passengers," I answered, "but I will look him over."

A man was standing up in a rowboat, leaning against the ship's side.

"You'd do me a great favor, sir," he began to say in a soft, ingratiating voice.

I looked at him with a start of recognition. He was my pockmarked friend, who had made such an unpleasant impression on me at John Saunders' office. He was rather more gentlemanly looking than he had seemed at the first view, and I saw that, though he was a halfbreed the white blood predominated.

"I don't want to intrude," he said, "but I have urgent need of getting to Spanish Wells, and there's no boat going that way for a week. I've just missed the mail."

"I didn't think of taking any passengers," I said.

"I know," he said. "I know it's a great favor I ask." He spoke with a certain cultivation of manner. "But I am willing of course to pay anything you think well for my food and my passage."

I waived that suggestion aside and stood irresolutely looking at him, with no very hospitable expression in my eyes, I dare say. But really my distaste for him was an unreasoning prejudice, and Charlie Webster's phrase came to my mind—"His face is against the poor devil!"

It certainly was.

Then at last I said, surely not overgraciously: "Very well. Get aboard. You can help work the boat;" and with that I turned away to my cabin.

CHAPTER IV.

In Which Tom Catches an Enchanted Fish, and Discourses of the Dangers of Treasure Hunting.

The morning was a little overcast, but a brisk northeast wind soon set the clouds moving as it went humming in our sails, and the sun, coming out in its glory over the crystalline waters, made a fine flashing world of it, full of exhilaration and the very breath of youth and adventure, very uplifting to the heart.

Nassau looked very pretty in the morning sunlight, with its pink and white houses nestling among palm trees and the masts of its sponging schooners, and soon we were abreast of the picturesque low-lying fort, Fort Montague, that Major Bruce, nearly two hundred years ago, had such a time building as a protection against pirates entering from the east end of the harbor. It looked like a veritable piece of the past, and set the imagination dreaming of those old days of Spanish galleons and the black flag, and brought my thoughts eagerly back to the object of my trip, those doubloons and pieces of eight that lay in glittering heaps somewhere out in those island wildernesses.

Then Tom came up with my breakfast. The old fellow stood by to serve me as I ate, with a pathetic touch of the old slavery days in his deferential, half-fatherly manner, dropping a quaint remark every now and again; as, when drawing my attention to the sun bursting through the clouds, he said, "The poor man's blanket is coming out, sah"—phrases in which there seemed a whole lot of pathos to me.

Presently, when breakfast was over, and I stood looking over the side into the incredibly clear water, in which it seems hardly possible that a boat can go on floating, suspended as she seems over gleaming gulfs of liquid space, down through which at every moment it seems she must dizzily fall.

As Tom and I gazed down, lost in those rainbow deeps, I heard a voice at my elbow saying with peculiarly sickening unction:

"The wonderful works of God."

It was my unwelcome passenger, who had silently edged up to where we stood. I looked at him, with the question very clear in my eyes as to what kind of disagreeable animal he was.

"Precisely," I said, and moved away.

I had been trying to feel more kindly toward him, wondering whether I could summon up the decency to offer him a cigar, but "the wonderful works of God" finished me.

"Hello! captain," I said presently, pointing to some sails coming up rapidly behind us. "What's this? I thought we'd got the fastest boat in the harbor."

"It's the Susan B., sponger," said the captain.

The captain was a man of few words.

The Susan B. was a rakish-looking craft with a black hull, and she certainly could sail. No doubt it was pure imagination, but I did fancy that I noticed our passenger signal to them in a peculiar way.

I confess that his presence was beginning to get on my nerves, and I was ready to get "edgy" at anything or nothing—an irritated state of mind which I presently took out on George the engineer, who did not belie his hulking appearance, and who was forever letting the engine stop and taking forever to get it going again. One could almost have sworn he did it on purpose.

My language was more forcible than classical—had quite a piratical flavor, in fact; and my friend of "the wonderful works of God" looked up with a deprecating air. Its effect on George was nil, except perhaps to further deepen his sulks.

And this I did notice, after a while, that my remarks to George seemed to have set up a certain sympathetic acquaintance between him and my passenger, the shackly deckhand being apparently taken in as an humble third. They sat for'ard, talking together, and my passenger read to them, on one occasion, from a piece of printed paper that fluttered in the wind.

The captain was occupied with his helm, and the thoughts he didn't seem to feel the necessity of sharing; a quiet, poised, probably stupid man, for whom I could not deny the respect we must always give to content, however simple. He was a sailor, and I don't know what better to say of a man.

So for companionship I was thrown back upon Tom. I felt, too, that he was my only friend on board, and a vague feeling had come over me that within the next few hours I might need a friend.

"Are we going too fast for fishing, Tom?" I asked.

"Not too fast for a barracouta," said Tom; so we put out lines and watched the stretched strings, and listened to the sea. After a while Tom's line grew taut, and we hauled in a five-foot barracouta.

"Look!" said Tom, as he pointed to a little writhing eel-like shape, about nine inches long, attached to the belly of the barracouta.

"A sucking fish!" said Tom. "That's good luck;" and he proceeded to turn over the poor creature and cut from his back, immediately below his head, a flat inch and a half of skin lined and stamped like a rubber sole—the device by which he held on to the belly of the barracouta much as the circle of wet leather holds the stone in a schoolboy's sling.

"Now," he said, when he had it clean and neat in his fingers, "we must hang this up and dry it in the northeast wind; the wind is just right—nor'-nor'east—and there is no mascot like it, specially when—" Old Tom hesitated, with a slyly innocent smile in his eyes.

"What is it, Tom?" I asked.

"Well, sir, I meant to say that this particular part of a sucking fish, properly dried in the northeast wind, is a wonderful mascot—when you're going after treasure."

"Who said I was going after treasure?" I asked.

"Aren't you, sah?" replied Tom "asking your pardon."

"Let's talk it over later on, when you bring me my dinner, Tom."

Later, as Tom stood, serving my coffee, I took it up with him again.

"What was that you were saying about treasure, Tom?" I asked.

"Well, sar, what I meant was this: that going after treasure is a dangerous business . . . it's not only the living you're to think of—" Here Tom threw a careful eye for'ard.

"The crew, you mean?"

He nodded.

"But it's the dead too."

"The dead, Tom?"

"Well, sar, there was never a buried treasure yet that didn't claim its victim. Not one or two either. Six or eight of them, to my knowledge—and the treasure just where it was for all that. I das'say it sounds all foolishness, but it's true for all that. Something or other'll come, mark my word—just when they think they've got their hands on it: a hurricane or a tidal wave or an earthquake. And—well, the ghost laughs, but the treasure stays there all the same."

"The ghost laughs?" I asked.

"Eh! of course; didn't you know every treasure is guarded by a ghost? He's got to keep watch there till the next fellow comes along, to relieve sentry duty, so to speak. He doesn't give it away. My no! He dassn't do that. But the minute someone else is killed, coming looking for it, then he's free—and the new ghost has got to go on sitting there, waiting for ever so long till someone else comes looking for it."

"But what has this sucking fish got to do with it?" And I pointed to the red membrane already drying in Tom's hand.

"Well, the man who carries this in his pocket won't be the next ghost," he answered.

"Take good care of it for me, then, Tom," I said, "and when it's properly dried let me have it. For I've a sort of idea I may have need of it, after all."

And just then old Sailor, the quietest member of the crew, put up his head into my hands, as though to say that he had been unfairly lost sight of.

"Yes, and you too, old chap—that's right. Tom and you and I."

And then I turned in for the night.

Statement That Counts.

Do not let the man who says, "This is the year when I am going to show you how to farm it," think that he will have all clear sailing. He will meet wildcats and bears at every turn, and he may consider himself lucky if he gets off with a whole hide. The big thing is to stand on the far end of the field when the harvest is gathered in and be able to say, "I did what I said I would!"—Exchange.

Lace Frocks in Favor in Paris

Deauville, Aix-les-Bains and Monte Carlo are principal points of interest on the fashion program. Paris, which is to say all of fashionable Paris, has betaken itself to the smart resorts in France, so it is necessary to follow closely, asserts a prominent New York fashion writer, if one is to keep in touch with the latest developments in dress.

Always on the alert, Paris traveled to the races, but many of the best people were absent and the midinettes failed the dressmakers at the last moment, so that there were fewer new frocks than had been expected. Happily most of the troubles are over and the best houses have promised interesting and important changes. However, we are left to guess what the changes are to be, though a few of the models give some important clews and the assurance that whatever the changes may be one may be certain that they will be interesting.

The elegance of the pre-war toilettes is repeatedly mentioned and there is every indication that eventually the more elaborate manner of dressing will return. Lace, which has long since been discarded, is considered one of the most important materials for afternoon wear.

Many and conflicting were the comments on its use at the races, but in spite of adverse opinion it was noted that as the days passed by and the makers had an opportunity of showing new models the lace dresses increased in numbers.

An all-lace frock was contemptuously referred to as a lace curtain, but nevertheless the dress was repeated later by other women.

The widely diverging views in regard to the use of lace are to be expected, for there is no more difficult material to handle, and if used the frock is sure to be either a decided success or a miserable failure.

Paris is surely correct when following its usual rule of never doing things by half-way measures. It selects the widest laces possible and drapes them over something dark to give the pattern the best advantage. Other models illustrate the use of black and white Chantilly, used in the same dress with a most refreshing effect.

Callot, Cheruit and Pierre Bullos are all making use of quantities of lace in the summer models, which they always show in midseason for the benefit of their resident Paris clientele. French women have always been partial to lace for afternoon wear and know how to wear it to the best advantage. Where the American woman is prone to place with it a hat that carries the same tame note as the lace, the French woman will wear something that will provide a contrast and tone up the entire costume. The contrasting note will be found usually in the hat or the material combined with the lace. As black and white is at present the most popular combination in Paris the hat is frequently of black tulle, either with crosse or paradise.

Two of the smartest dresses of lace at Monte Carlo were in black, as were the hats which were worn with them. In both of these dresses the lace figured in the skirt principally and the waist was of taffeta with a touch of lace. Tunics are as prominent as ever in the scheme of the lace dress, but the lace reaches almost to the bottom of the foundation skirt.

The dark silk dresses considered sufficiently elaborate for any afternoon affair if embroidered or otherwise embellished seem to be passing out, at least for the summertime.

Jenny uses Chantilly lace in a large way, that is to say, in quantities and in big spaces. A black satin and black lace frock by her is typical of the prevailing mode in more ways than one. It carries the harem hem, the almost sleeveless bodice and the nipped-in waistline with the fullness bulging both below and above. To all intents and purposes the dress is of lace, with the pattern in the sweeping curves common to Chantilly. Below the waist there is a full peplum and the satin is draped as a scarf over the shoulders, forming the only sleeves there are and falling straight to the hem at the front, leaving an open space showing the lace, about eight inches wide, in the center.

Drapery and Plaiting.

Several striped dresses in taffeta have been noted that show the same arrangement of drapery over the shoulder and one a bit on that order is marvelously constructed of fine plaiting. Variation is found in the way the plaiting is looped up at the sides is a modified pannier effect. Across the front of the upper part the plaits are held in closely, like a girdle, and at each side allowed to fall loosely in a large loop.

Drecoll shows a Chartreuse colored frock with the skirt draped in Chantilly and the girdle forming wing-like loops at the side, giving the desired width.

On the whole new models are rather scarce, suggesting that the best known makers are not averse to holding back as many of their creations as they may for later in the season.

Whether by accident or following the lead of Paris, a well-known American designer turned out lately a charming afternoon dress of organdie and black net, bearing out the assertion that silks are no longer absolutely necessary in the construction of the reception and dinner frock.

The entire gown was of French blue organdie draped with the net in tunic fashion and edged with black lace. If either this frock or the lace frocks noted at the races are any indication, the chemise dress is on the wane, for each one is marked by a decided waistline and both show sashes tied in huge bows at the back.

All the late models by Beer point to the fact that the flaring tunic over a tighter foundation will continue in favor.

Redingotes Are Coming Back.

Cloth dresses in redingote style continue to appear and are quite the accepted thing when wool dresses are worn. From this the indications are that the redingote will be among the autumn models when they make their appearance on this side. Redingotes were introduced two or three seasons ago. At the time they did not make any deep impression, but are now rather surer of success, as any suggestion of being extreme will be out of the question, and they are undoubtedly smart.

As the longer jacket is rather sure of being the proper thing this fall, one may have the same trouble as formerly in trying to tell a dress from a coat or the reverse.

All authorities agree so far on the wider hip line and the accentuated fullness about the hips, and this is to be found in the coats and suit jackets, as well as in the frocks, where it has been seen principally so far. Jenny is very active in turning out suits, as it appears that the dolman and even the cape are slightly less in demand and it is anticipated that the suit will take the place to a certain extent.

Among New Fall Shades.

Among the new fall shades, Indian red, Pompeian red and Cordovan brown (a warm yellow brown tone), are most prominent.

TROOPS CALLED OUT AS CHICAGO RIOTS SPREAD; 15 KILLED

Whites and Blacks Meet in a Pitched Battle.

MAYOR APPEALS TO GOVERNOR

Adjt. Gen. Dickson Is Put In Charge of Military Situation and Immediately Starts Mobilization of 4,000 Trained Men.

Chicago, July 29.—Chicago's black belt was a battlefield Monday night. Negroes and whites fought over an area approximately six miles square within two miles of the heart of the city. Pistols and rifles flashed and bullets crashed through street cars and buildings and on the streets, finding hundreds of victims. Police patrols and hospital ambulances charged through the mobs amid a hail of bullets, rescuing the wounded and recovering bodies of the dead.

250 Wounded.

The police placed the number of dead at 15 with more than 250 wounded, many seriously. Four regiments of National Guard infantry were mobilized when Mayor William Hale Thompson informed Governor Lowden and Adjutant General Dickson he was unable to control the situation.

The battle started when negroes in groups of 50 and 100 began firing on isolated policemen. One of these was Policeman William Kross, one of the first to be wounded. Another was Officer Walter Brooks of the mounted squad.

Brooks, when hit, forced his horse to lie down and fired from behind him. Meantime riot calls went to the Stockyards station, Deering station, the Fiftieth street station and the Cottage Grove avenue station, and patrol loads of bluecoats began to pour into the battle.

Climax of Bad Day.

The battle came as the climax of a bitter day. Sporadic outbursts flared up all over the black belt during the day. Then Mayor Thompson decided the situation was out of control of the police and asked Governor Lowden to turn out militiamen. The governor in turn notified Adjutant General Dickson to mobilize all available state troops and form them at the armories.

Before the soldiers could be notified and gather in numbers sufficient to be of use in quelling the disturbances the battle at Thirty-fifth and State streets was under way.

Fix Mobilization Points.

The Eleventh regiment, under Col. James E. Burke, with its machine gun company, was ordered to assemble at the old Second infantry armory, 2653 West Madison street; the First reserve, under Col. A. F. Lorensen, in the old Eighth infantry armory at Thirty-fifth and Forest avenue; the Third reserve, under Col. Anson Bolte, in the old Seventh infantry armory at Thirty-fifth street and Wentworth avenue. The Second reserve, under Col. Joseph Wilson, was ordered to hold itself in readiness for assembly at a point to be designated later.

General Dickson said he would remain in Chicago in charge of the military situation. He pointed out that the Eleventh infantry and the First reserve regiments have machine gun companies with experienced machine gunners and that the line companies of these two regiments and the Second and Third reserve regiments are armed with new Springfield rifles and Krag-Jorgenson carbines.

Plenty of Ammunition.

"They all have plenty of riot ammunition," said General Dickson, "and if all the race rioters on the South side were to combine the militiamen would be able to handle the situation."

One report was that South side colored men have more than 2,000 Springfield rifles of the type formerly used by the government and placed on sale throughout the city department stores after their condemnation for government use.

This was denied by colored aldermen, but it was admitted that many of the negroes were possessed of arms of one kind or another and were prepared to defend themselves against aggression. The chief fear expressed was that the young hotheads might organize and start general trouble.

TOM MOONEY CALLED VICTIM OF A FRAMEUP

Secret Service Man Bares Politics and Plots in Trial—Report Submitted to House.

Washington, July 24.—Thomas J. Mooney did not receive full justice in his trial at San Francisco for alleged connection with the preparedness day bomb explosion, for which he is serving a life term, according to a report by John B. Densmore, former special agent of the department of justice, who investigated the case for the government. The report, dated November 1, 1918, was submitted to the house in response to a resolution calling for information as to activities of the department of labor in the case. Mr. Densmore's report was forwarded by Secretary Wilson, accompanying his own statement.

Much of the information obtained by Mr. Densmore and his assistants, the report said, was secured by use of dictagraphs placed in the office of Charles M. Fickert, district attorney of San Francisco, where it was kept several months.

Action of District Attorney Fickert in asking for a new trial after the testimony of Frank C. Oxman was proved perjury and then refusing to agree to it, was attacked in the report.

SEEK GIGANTIC LOAN HERE

Allies Want Funds From United States to Cover Credits for Thirty Years.

Paris, July 26.—A gigantic loan will be sought in the United States next autumn sufficient to cover French, British, Belgian and Italian credits for thirty years, or until they do not need any further outside help, according to an interview with E. A. Filene of Boston, printed in the Matin.

Mr. Filene, who is a delegate from the American chamber of commerce, has just left for London in connection with the scheme to supply Europe. Before he departed he told the Matin that delegates from Great Britain, France, Italy and Belgium would gather here in September, sailing for New York on the fifteenth of that month, to attempt to secure the loan. Mr. Filene believes that the issuance of such a loan is the only way to save Europe from collapse.

JANET WILKINSON'S MURDERER FOUND

Thomas Fitzgerald, Hotel Watchman, Confesses the Crime.

CHOKES THE GIRL TO DEATH

Lures Child to His Room and Slays Her When She Makes Outcry—Buries Little Body Under Coal Pile.

Chicago, July 28.—Thomas Fitzgerald murdered six-year-old Janet Wilkinson.

He enticed her into his flat with candy. He made advances. She screamed. He choked her to death. Then he buried her body in the coal pile in the basement of the building.

He confessed the crime to Acting Lieut. Fred Howe at the Chicago avenue station, where he had been held since 1 a. m. Wednesday, 12 hours after Janet vanished. Then he helped the police to find the corpse.

His confession came abruptly at the end of the most remarkable grilling in the history of crime. It lasted throughout the entire night. It was a veritable "fourth degree," in which psychology played a leading part.

A Battle of Mind Shocks.

A detective dressed as a priest had tried to induce Fitzgerald to confess. The man said he had nothing to tell.

Tiny hands, taken from dolls, were laid before him on a table in the dimly lighted basement of the police station as an appeal to his feelings. This failed.

The police even took off his glasses because he seemed to lose his composure without them. But he bowed his head and refused to talk.

He was not physically abused, but the manhunters, feeling the end was near, pounded his muddled and sleepless brain with every mental shock they could devise.

Kind words, threats, thousands of questions and suggestions were fired at him with machine gun regularity. The ordeal had endured eight hours when he called for Acting Lieutenant Howe.

"Send Mr. Howe down here," he said simply. Then he confessed everything.

"I was sitting in the window at ten minutes after twelve Tuesday when I saw Janet coming towards the building," he told the lieutenant. "When she came up the steps to the landing at my doorway I said to her, 'Dollie, would you like some candy?'

"She hesitated. Then I picked her up in my arms and carried her into my apartment.

"I Choked Her to Death.

"She started to scream. Before I knew it or realized what I was doing, I grabbed her by the throat and choked her to death.

"Having realized what I had done, I then dressed, as at the time I was in my bathrobe. I then took Janet's body in my arms, going down the front steps to the basement, where I buried the body under a pile of coal."

After signing a formal confession he led the police officials, under direction of Acting Chief Alcock, to the basement of the flat building at 112 and 114 East Superior street, where he lives, and there pointed out the spot where Janet's body was concealed.

He showed no emotion as the police chief lifted big lumps of coal from the corpse. Only once he betrayed weakness. This was when several men in the throng gathered outside the building shouted: "Hang him! Hang him!"

On the third floor above Mr. and Mrs. John S. Wilkinson, parents of the dead girl, waited in awful suspense. They did not know of his confession. But the crowd below pressaged important developments.

After the body had been removed from the basement the police broke the news to them. Mrs. Wilkinson fell to the floor in a faint. Wilkinson muttered a prayer that the slayer would meet death for the murder.

Prosecutors Swing Into Action.

A few hours later the wheels of Cook county's prosecuting machinery were in motion.

"Red Necktie Jimmy" O'Brien, murder case specialist of the state's attorney's office, was called in.

He had Fitzgerald removed, under a heavy guard, to the criminal courts building, where the murder story was repeated in detail before official stenographers.

Coroner Peter M. Hoffman personally impaneled a jury at Caroll's undertaking rooms and opened an inquest over the body.

Acting Chief Alcock and others demanded an immediate special session of the legislature to enact laws providing for a farm colony for defectives of the Fitzgerald type.

EX-PRESIDENT TAFT URGES PEACE PACT COMPROMISE

Opens Correspondence With the Leaders of Both Parties—Would Patch Differences.

Washington, July 25.—Former President Taft, who has written to several Republican senators and leaders suggesting reservations to the peace treaty which might be acceptable to both sides, has opened correspondence on the subject with prominent Democratic senators.

Senator Hitchcock of Nebraska, one of the leading spokesmen for the administration in the senate fight, received a letter from Mr. Taft.

The former president's communication to the Nebraska senator was not made public, but it was understood to be of the same general tenor as those sent to the Republicans—suggestions for agreement upon treaty reservations or interpretations to facilitate ratification.

Senator Hitchcock and other administration senators declared, however, that for the present, at least, they would continue their efforts for ratification without reservations. Expressing confidence that there was no question but that the treaty would be ratified, they said the fight now centered on the resolution accompanying ratification in which would be embodied any reservations or interpretations.

Contending that senate rules required a vote on each article of the treaty, the administration leaders said they believed they had the votes to defeat amendments to any section.

YANKS IN SIBERIA UNTIL THE FINISH

American Troops Needed to Guard Great Railway.

WILSON GIVES SENATE FACTS

U. S. Men Help Russ With Supplies in Giving Relief to Russian People—Will Not Violate Nation's Sovereignty.

Washington, July 26.—President Wilson advised the senate that the American military expedition in Siberia was there primarily to protect and maintain operation of the Siberian railroad and indicated that the expedition would remain as long as such protection was necessary.

Another purpose of the expedition as outlined by the president was to give relief to the Russian people in Siberia by supplying food, clothing and other supplies. Mr. Wilson said there was no intention of interfering with Russian sovereignty.

The retention of American troops to protect the American railroad forces under John F. Stevens, the president's letter stated, is a "vital element." By agreement with Japan, the president stated, the American troops are to remain there as long as the railroad expedition is engaged in maintaining operation.

The president's communication, detailing at great length the activities of the American military and railroad forces in Siberia, was in response to a resolution of Senator Johnson (Rep.) of California, inquiring regarding the America policy in Siberia and how long it was proposed to retain the troops there.

Text of Wilson's Message.

The president's message to the senate follows:

"For the information of the senate, and in response to the resolution adopted June 28, 1919, requesting the president to inform the senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, of the reasons for sending United States soldiers to Siberia, the duties that are to be performed by these soldiers, how long they are to remain and generally to advise the senate of the policy of the United States government in respect to Siberia and the maintenance of United States soldiers there, I have the honor to say that the decision to send American troops to Siberia was announced to the press on August 5, 1918, in a statement from the acting secretary of state, of which a copy is inclosed.

"This measure was taken in conjunction with Japan and in concert of purpose with the other allied powers, first of all to save the Czecho-Slovak armies which were threatened with destruction by hostile armies apparently organized by, and often largely composed of, enemy prisoners of war.

An Aid for Law and Order.

"The second purpose in view was to steady any efforts of the Russians at self-defense, or the establishment of law and order in which they might be willing to accept assistance.

"Two regiments of infantry, with auxiliary troops—about 8,000 effectives—comprising a total of approximately 10,000 men, were sent under command of Maj. Gen. William S. Graves. The troops began to arrive at Vladivostok in September, 1918.

"Considerably larger forces were dispatched by Japan at about the same time, and much smaller forces by others of the allied powers.

"The net result was the successful reunion of the separated Czecho-Slovak armies and the substantial elimination in eastern Siberia of the active efforts of enemy prisoners of war. A period of relative quiet then ensued.

"In February, 1919, as a conclusion of negotiations begun early in the summer of 1918, the United States accepted a plan proposed by Japan for the supervision of the Siberian railways by an international committee, under which committee John F. Stevens would assume the operation of the Russian railway service corps. In this connection, it is to be recalled that John F. Stevens, in response to a request of the provisional government of Russia, went to Russia in the spring of 1917. A few months later he was made official adviser to the minister of ways and communication at Petrograd under the provisional government."

A bill authorizing an increase of 8,500 to the officer personnel of the army was introduced by Chairman Wadsworth of the senate military committee, at the request of Secretary Baker. Mr. Baker said at least 18,000 officers would be needed to maintain the organization of the construction, air and other services of the army built up during the war.

Mr. Taft's Plan of Interpretive Reservations May Solve the Treaty Problem.

LIKED BY MANY SENATORS

President Wilson Rebuffed by Foreign Relations Committee—Austria Gets Her Peace Terms — News From Russia Not Cheerful —More Trouble With Mexico.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD.

William H. Taft, actuated by the two worthy motives of trying to aid in the speedy stabilising of world peace and of averting possible disaster to his party in the next presidential elections made a notable contribution last week toward the ratification of the peace treaty and League of Nations covenant by the senate. In letters to Republican National Chairman Hays he suggested a way in which he thought this might be brought about with the votes of those Republican senators who are friendly to the league but are doubtful concerning certain of its articles. Mr. Taft's plan is that the treaty be ratified with "interpretive reservations" that would satisfy the consciences of those senators and that would be acceptable to the administration. These, not being amendments or flat reservations, would not necessitate the recommittal of the pact to a peace conference.

Making it clear that he favors ratification of the treaty as it stands, to be amended later by the league if necessary, Mr. Taft declares it to be "the part of statesmen to recognize the exigencies, personal, partisan and political, of a situation in seeking to achieve real progress and reform." He admits that there are reasonable and sincere criticisms made against the league and believes these must be satisfied in order to obtain the nineteen Republican votes necessary to ratification. This he seeks to do with his suggested reservations, which cover most of the articles criticised but ignore the Shantung feature. This latter, he asserts, has been deliberately exaggerated.

Mr. Hays looked with favor on Mr. Taft's plan, and in Washington many Republican senators were said to be so impressed with its value that they already were at work on a program of interpretive reservations. President Wilson had been aware of the Taft suggestions for several days, but his attitude toward them was not stated. The administration senators, however, were said to be still determined to attempt to force unreserved ratification.

Mr. Wilson, though suffering from a slight attack of illness, kept up his work in behalf of the treaty, calling into conference at the White House a number of the opposing senators. Most of these asserted that the president had not been able to change their views or intentions by his arguments and explanations, and the debate in the senate did not indicate that he had converted any of them. It is only fair to assume that few of these senators are governed by anything but patriotism and honesty in taking the attitude they do, but it is hard to see anything but partisanship in such action as that of the majority of the committee on foreign relations the other day. The president, in the interest of business, asked for authority to appoint provisionally an American member of the interallied commission on reparations pending action on the treaty. This the committee refused, adopting instead Senator Knox's resolution declaring:

"That it is the judgment of the committee that until the treaty is ratified no power exists, either in the president or congress, to execute any provision of the proposed treaty, either provisionally or otherwise."

And yet, only three weeks ago Senator Knox declared that the treaty of peace will apply in the United States when ratified by three other powers, "whether we shall actually have ratified or not, because peace will then be a fact."

The president may go ahead anyhow and name the member of the reparations commission, and it was reported that Bernard Baruch is to be his selection.

Some of the senators, and perhaps a great many other people, do not agree with Mr. Taft that the Shantung affair has been exaggerated. Mr. Wilson is said to have explained to certain of his callers that the other peace makers, entangled in secret treaties, left to him the settlement of that annoying matter and that it was necessary to yield so much to Japan in order to assure her joining the League of Nations. It was believed he might now bring some pressure to bear to persuade Japan to declare formally her intention to return the province to China within a short period of time. That, of course, would do much to silence the criticism against the clause. The Japanese, however, are not displaying a very compliant spirit lately. They have vigorously denied the story that the Shantung settlement was in exchange for the Japanese withdrawal of the racial equality clause from the league covenant, and the intimation is plain that they will renew later their demand for the inclusion of such a clause. Also there is open opposition in Japan to participating in the international tribunal to try the former kaiser, based on the assertion that such action would have a bad effect on the Japanese people.

The British parliament has ratified the peace treaty with Germany unanimously, and also has adopted the Anglo-French alliance bill.

Austria has been handed the peace treaty she must sign and of course is protesting — hopelessly — against the terms imposed. The reparation terms are similar to those in the German treaty, and the financial terms provide that the prewar debt shall be apportioned among the various former parts of the Austrian empire and the coinage and war bonds taken up by the new governments and redeemed as they see fit. The Austrian army is to be reduced to 30,000 men and she is to give up all her merchant shipping and fishing boats and 20 per cent of her river fleet. Large numbers of cattle also must be surrendered, as well as quantities of stuff stolen by the Hapsburgs. In the revised territorial terms is seen a possibility of future trouble, for Austria is to receive the Oderberg region of Hungary. The Hungarians are not likely to submit tamely to this and Bela Kun, if he is still in power there, may find in it a chance to keep his army from disintegrating by appealing to the national feeling.

Conflicting stories concerning Bela Kun have been coming from Vienna. One had it that the communist leader had been deposed by a triumvirate and that "terror troops" were in control of Budapest. Another and later dispatch showed he was still in the saddle.

The tangled mess known as the Russian situation has no very promising aspects of late. The British commander in North Russia reports that the Russian volunteer troops that have been co-operating with him have mutinied and joined the bolshevists; General Denikine has been suffering reverses at the hands of Trotsky's army and Admiral Kolchak, head of the Omsk government, does not seem to be getting anywhere. Lenine has offered to cede Bessarabia to Roumania if the latter country will prohibit Kolchak's supporters from crossing its frontier. This may amount to nothing, as Roumania already holds possession of Bessarabia. In eastern Galicia, where the Ukrainians and Poles are fighting for the territory, the Poles have captured the important city of Tarnopol. Delayed dispatches from Vladivostok tell of a successful excursion in the Suchan valley district by an American military column which cleared out bands of bolsheviki at a cost of two men killed and eleven wounded. The bolsheviki in Siberia have released all their American prisoners, five in number.

The peace conference is now attending to Bulgaria. The delegates from that country arrived in Paris from Sofia Friday and were quartered at the suburb of Neuilly. The French troops have been taking care of Bulgaria lately and when the other day some of them were attacked by Bulgarians a French regiment occupied Sofia and disarmed the local garrison.

Sweden is expected to make a loud wail over the report of the Baltic commission of the peace conference. It recommends that the Aland islands at the mouth of the Gulf of Bothnia, which Sweden has claimed, be neutralized under the guaranty of the League of Nations. The Swedes are not in high favor with the allies and any protest they may make is not likely to be considered.

Our relations with Mexico seemed to be approaching the well-known climax, as they have been intermittently for years. Senators and representatives from the border states clamor for intervention, more Americans are killed or kidnaped or robbed by Mexicans, interested European nations become more and more exasperated by the chaotic conditions below the Rio Grande, but the administration keeps its own councils, giving no intimation of its intentions, if it has any. Among the recent outrages to be reported were an attack by armed Mexicans on a boatload of sailors from the U. S. ship Cheyenne near Tampico and the robbery of about $10,000 from the Puerto Lobos station of the Atlantic Refining company. Some trifles were stolen from the sailors and the Mexican government says it was their own fault because they disregarded warnings and went into rebel territory. Most of the other outrages the Carranza officials try weakly to explain away.

Henry P. Fletcher, ambassador to Mexico, appeared before a house committee and said that, although hundreds of Americans had been killed in Mexico in the last few years, and 50 since February, 1917, he had never heard of the prosecution or conviction of any Mexican for the murder of an American. He thinks, however, that nothing would be gained by withdrawal of our recognition of the Carranza government and lifting of the embargo on arms.

Word was brought from Chihuahua City to El Paso that Villa and General Angeles had disbanded their forces until September and were going to Japan to obtain arms and ammunition for a renewal of their revolution.

The city of Washington was greatly upset early in the week by mob riots that amounted to a race war. Whites, angered by alleged attacks on women by colored men, made indiscriminate warfare on the negroes, and the latter retaliated in kind. Several persons, including two policemen, were killed.

After long and wearisome debate, the house of representatives passed the prohibition enforcement bill by a vote of 287 to 100. Nearly all the rigid restrictions insisted on by the radical drys were retained, but individuals are permitted to have liquor in their homes for their own consumption. The measure is now in the senate and may be changed in important particulars.

The chief counsel for the Association Opposed to National Prohibition, in reply to numerous inquiries, has issued a statement concerning the status of the fight against the constitutional amendment. He says the right of referendum on acts of the legislature exists in 15 states. Petitions for referendum have been filed in seven of these and are being circulated in the others. If the people in ten of these states reverse the action of the legislatures the prohibition amendment will be void, since it must be ratified by 36 states and 45 have taken that action. The validity of the amendment also will be attacked on constitutional grounds before the United States Supreme court in the fall.

All the world was startled and shocked by the unique airship disaster in Chicago. A dirigible balloon was making experimental flights over the loop district of the city when it burst into flames and fell through the roof of one of the largest banks. Ten employees of the bank and three men who were in the car of the balloon were killed and more than a score were injured. The cause of the accident was a mystery.

RUSS NOBLEWOMAN DESCRIBES ATROCITIES OF THE BOLSHEVIKI

Hundreds of Persons Tortured in the Most Inhuman Fashion Before Being Put to Death and Their Estates Pillaged and Mansions Razed—Thousands Die From Hunger All Over Country.

New York.—"We do not hope any longer; we die!"

The despair to which bolshevik misrule has reduced Russia is thus epitomized by a Russian noblewoman widely known throughout her country, in a remarkable picture of events in her country contained in a letter received recently in New York. Her castles and estates plundered or razed, her fortune vanished and her friends and family murdered, this titled woman is moved to remark that "three years ago, my second daughter and her husband died, he having caught cold in the trenches. Then I was in despair; now I envy them."

"I beg of you never to mention my name; I wrote frankly to you counting on your discretion," is the plea which fear of bolshevik tyranny moves the unfortunate woman to place at the close of her letter to her friend, a New York woman of prominent and influential family. "Excuse the incoherences; I write with my heart bleeding, knowing that I shall never be able to give you the faintest idea of the sufferings that thousands are enduring."

A graphic tale of the misery that spreads itself over Russia is unfolded in the letter. Wholesale pillaging and murder by bolsheviki, Germans, Finns and others swept the land clear of its wealth.

Both the noblewoman who wrote the letter and the woman who received it are well known. The danger involved for the former makes it advisable that not only the names of the persons but the names of the localities mentioned be withheld from publication. The letter in full reads as follows:

"My very, very dear Mrs. B——:

"At last I am able to write to you and to hope to hear from you.

"I will endeavor to tell you briefly the personal events of these terrible last years. But how to begin? How to give you the faintest idea of the unimaginable atrocities committed by the bolsheviki? Speaking of ourselves, I will tell you that we have lost everything. The bolsheviki have stolen all our fortune, boxes of silverware, precious objects, personal remembrances which undoubtedly are now destroyed.

Freed to Flee From Home.

"Three years ago my second daughter and her husband died, he having caught cold in the trenches. Then I was in despair, now I envy them. The year 1917 in autumn, we had to flee from M——, and come to the city, where we lived under the reds' regime until the arrival of the Germans.

"You have probably read in the papers that the reds had sent to Siberia 300 Russian barons, and also some bourgeoisie; some died and the others returned two months after.

"Although under our roof lived a military guard of bolsheviki or reds, good luck kept us from sharing their lot. I cannot describe the last days. After the arrival of the Germans a list was found of about a thousand persons, in which we were, who were to be shot the very next day.

"The reign of the Germans lasted exactly seven months; they annihilated all our hopes, they accumulated taxes upon taxes; carrying away all the food to Germany, leaving the people of our cities to starve.

"No discipline, corruption everywhere, no administration. Only those who deliberately closed their eyes to evidence failed to see that a country thus plundered and so badly treated was not to remain long under their rule. But, alas! How many were blind!

"Then came the great catastrophe; the German troops fraternizing with the bolsheviki at W——; surrendering to them cannon, war ammunition, and refusing to fight. The Germans even damaged the cannon they left to the Esthes troops, which had been formed hastily and were incapable of defending themselves, having nothing, absolutely nothing!

Reds' Rule Was Worse.

"Then, for another year the country was at the mercy of the reds, and it was worse than the first time.

"The Bolsheviki had with them Chinese and Red Lettes, who were terribly cruel, and those formed the guard of the unfortunate emperor and his family.

"On the 28th of November we learned that W—— had fallen; that the Germans were leaving us in haste; and, as the German general commanding at R——, had, at the request of the Lettes, refused the formation of troops with the men of the country, we were left without any defense.

"The lights of the electric projectors of the enemy's ships already illuminated our shores; from the castle's tower we could see everything; there was not a minute to be lost. The trains were running only for the German troops; it was then necessary to risk traveling by the inland ways, through dreadful roads and in a country in revolution, for when the Germans took possession of the provinces they took care not to punish their friends, the bolsheviki; so that we were compelled to see and to live with the people who had stolen and pillaged our properties. The Germans did nothing to find out the revolutionists and to protect us, nothing!

"After having packed in haste the strictly necessary things, our small caravan started at five o'clock in the morning; it was dark and the roads were frightful.

"We arrived at R—— on the second of December. We were able to stay four weeks at our home, then in great haste we had to embark on the boat sent to Finland for the fugitives and we arrived at Helsingfors. Lassitude, troubles, and emotions of all these weeks overwhelmed at last my poor husband.

"Fortunately we found two rooms in a hospital; there we lived for two months, being often hungry, and when we could get some food it was execrable.

"The high prices of living in Finland are unbelievable. A pound of tea, which ordinarily cost from five to fifteen kronen, cost from one hundred to a hundred and fifty marks; a kilogramme of sugar one hundred marks, etc. Also Finland tried to get rid of so many people she had to feed, and, as the bolsheviki who come up to 28 kilometers from R—— had been repulsed by the Finn troops, which had at the last moment come in aid to the Letts and to the volontaire corps of Balthes-Germans, the Finns then ordered all fugitives to leave the country within six days. However, we received, on account of my husband's bad condition, permission to stay until he would get better.

"Going back was an impossibility, the situation being still very grave; a second expedition was no longer possible for the strength of my poor husband; moreover, we had nothing left. Our large city house was taken and turned into a hospital by a Russian volontaire corps. M—— devastated and plundered! First by the bolsheviki, then by the Esths, whom the Germans left unpunished; then by the white troops and the Finns, who were fighting the reds, Ge[illegible] properties being left unmolested.

Family Lost Everything.

"Last year our estate had suffered, but our magnificent castle with all its dependencies had been respected. Now all have pillaged it. The Finns being more civilized stole the most beautiful things—paintings, bronzes, antiques, etc. Finally the 36 master' rooms and the 11 servants' rooms were plundered. What they could not take away they smashed or burned. We lost everything. Not a sheet, not a plate or a glass exist, and when our intendant complained to the minister of state (a Thesthe), he answered him that naturally in war time everybody wanted to have some souvenirs. The whites pillaged, as I hear, 80 estates, and they were supposed to be our defenders!

"Friends here obtained for us the permission to come to K——, where we found two rooms in a family. We hope soon to find some occupation, and sell some furs that I could take with me, for unfortunately my beautiful laces are also in Petrograd.

"I do not know whether you have an idea of what the bolsheviki have done everywhere whenever they had to retire. At W—— they killed 82 people; we have lost friends, acquaintances and our excellent and noble doctor. Almost all were tortured before being put to death. Before shooting Doctor L—— they broke his two legs. To the old Baroness H., seventy-two years old, after having opened her stomach, snatched out her intestines while alive. They killed priests, doctors, nobles, merchants, women, children and peasants. They made several persons dig their own graves, forcing them to undress; a carriage was waiting to take away their clothes. Then they tortured every one, breaking arms and legs, crushing the limbs, snatching the intestines, gouging out the eyes, scarring the cheeks, and they even burned two persons alive.

"There were three large pits; they tossed pell mell in one of them the living and the dead, and then these monsters jumped into the pit and trampled under foot the unfortunates until they were lifeless.

"Twelve persons were so crushed and disfigured that they could not be recognised. And all that is true!

"After the corpses had been exhumed the doctors and the officers of the state took photographs of each, after having examined everyone of them.

Russia Awaiting the Allies.

"At D——, at W——, etc., whenever the Reds were repulsed—note, I pray you, that I say 'everywhere'—the same tortures were inflicted to the unfortunate ones. I shall not try to describe the horrors of other places, for it has been the same everywhere.

"At D——, hundreds have been thrown under the ice of the river, yet a element death compared with the others.

"Thousands die from hunger in all Russia; bolshevism reigns everywhere. We had hoped to be delivered by the Germans, and they having failed we hoped for the allies; now, as an officer who has escaped from Petrograd was telling, we do not hope any longer, we die!

"Russia is anxiously awaiting the help of the allies, for she alone cannot conquer the terrorizing bolsheviki."

Potatoes Without Vines Are Grown by Girl

Kutztown, Pa.—Lizzie, daughter of Jefferson Hoch, discovered in their potato patch that a number of seed potatoes failed to produce any vines on top of the soil. She was surprised to find the seed potatoes in every hill had clustered around good-sized new potatoes, that the entire vitality of the seed potato was transferred to the new ones, and that there was no vine growth above the surface of the potato hills. The mother potato was still in the hill, but had given up its substance to the young potatoes, which were already so well matured that they could be used for a meal.

"Hang on to War Risk Insurance"

Treasury Department Sends Out This Advice to Demobilized Soldiers.

NEW POLICIES ARE PLANNED

Federal Government Perfecting New Forms With Many Advantages Which Insured Men Will Want In Place of Present Contracts.

Washington.—A busy place these days of demobilization is the bureau of war risk insurance of the treasury department of the United States, with its 14,000 employees and its files containing 30,000,000 records.

Demobilization is having the effect of making a large proportion of the soldiers become transient for an indefinite period after leaving the service. Many of the original addresses of these men become useless, as thousands forget to leave forwarding addresses and neglect to write to the bureau. In this way many men are losing touch with the bureau and are neglecting their insurance. Hence the efforts of the bureau to keep in touch with demobilized men are increasingly difficult, as demobilization progresses. Every possible agency is being used, including the Red Cross and public organizations of many kinds.

Uncle Sam is perfecting plans for the new forms of government insurance which the demobilized soldier will want in place of his war risk insurance. But the soldier cannot change his war risk insurance for this new insurance unless his monthly premiums are paid up to date on his old insurance.

Advice to Soldiers.

The advice which is being sent out from the bureau of war risk insurance to the soldiers who have left the service may be summarized thus:

Hold on to your war risk insurance.

Keep up your premium payments.

If you have permitted your insurance to lapse—even if you have formally canceled it—hasten to reinstate it under the new and liberal provisions for reinstatement.

Write for advice or information to the "Insurance Division, Bureau of War Risk Insurance, Washington, D. C." Give your full name and your address, your rank at the time of applying for insurance; if in the army, your army serial number, the number of your insurance certificate, if known.

In sending check or money order for your premium, make it payable to the "Treasurer of the United States" and mail it to "Premium Receipt Station, Bureau of War Risk Insurance, Washington, D. C."

Uncle Sam provided every soldier, sailor and marine with a right to a policy for $10,000. If you can't keep all of it, keep at least part of it. You can reduce it if you have to.

You can convert to a government endowment policy which will assure financial comfort in later years.

All policies issued by the government contain a total disability clause, making them payable at any time you may become totally and permanently disabled, regardless of your age.

A service man, after his return to civil life, may engage in any occupation, no matter how hazardous, without affecting his insurance.

No physical or medical examination is necessary for the conversion of policies.

Your government insurance is protected from the claims of creditors.

Neither you nor your beneficiary ever will have to pay a cent taxes to the government on the proceeds of your government insurance.

You may pay your premiums by the month, without having to pay anything extra on account of additional expense to the government of collecting monthly premiums. Or, if you prefer, you may pay quarterly, semi-annually or annually. The government pays all the expenses of running the business.

You may have the whole month in which to pay the premium for that month. If you fail to pay and your policy lapses, you may get it back through provisions for reinstatement.

Cash and Loan Values.

After one year the new government policies will have guaranteed cash and loan values, also paid-up insurance and extended term insurance values. The "cash value" of a new government policy is the amount the government gives you if you choose to give up your insurance. The "loan value" means that you can borrow money on your policy up to 94 per cent of the cash value. "Paid-up insurance and extended term insurance values" mean that in the new policies, if you stop paying premiums after one year, the government allows one of the following options: (1) To remain insured for a certain time without cost to you. (2) To receive a policy for a smaller amount, which will be paid, no matter when you die, and on which you will not have to pay any more premiums.

One of the most valuable features of a government insurance policy is that it provides for the disability of the holder, as well as for his death. When for any reason you become totally and permanently disabled, you not only do not have to pay any more premiums, but the government pays you the full monthly sum called for by your policy every month, no matter how long you live.

Labrador Coast Is Swept by Death

Smallpox and Spanish Influenza Play Havoc With Eskimos.

BODIES DEVOURED BY DOGS

Moravian Missionary Tells Almost Unbelievable Story of Sufferings in Northern Labrador—Mode of Living Is Fatal.

St. John's, N. F.—Spanish "flu," smallpox and measles wiped out more than one-third of the Eskimo population of Labrador during the months of November and December of last year. The Rev. W. W. Perrett of the Moravian mission at Hopedale, where he has spent 27 years, reached the Newfoundland shores a few days ago. He told an almost unbelievable story of the sufferings of the Eskimos of northern Labrador.

Shortly after the mission ship Harmony had left the coast at the beginning of November "flu" broke out at Hebron and spread rapidly among the inhabitants. That the disease was contagious was unknown to the Eskimo, who were living in small huts, and whole families were affected and died off. Bishop Martin and those at the mission did what was possible under the circumstances, but they, too, were stricken, and when the epidemic had passed its course only eight children, five women and one man of the native population of 100 were living.

Mad Dogs Eat Human Flesh.

At the outbreak the dead were buried almost as soon as they passed away, but when the entire settlement became ill, the victims were left where they died, those who had recovered in the meantime being too weak to lay them under the ground. Households who had succumbed one by one were left unburied, and the dogs, who were unable to procure food because the hunters had been all ill, became mad and entered the cabins, consuming the flesh from the bodies of the dead.

When it became known that the epidemic was raging, some outside assistance arrived, and an effort was made to give the dead Christian burial. The dogs, however, after consuming the human flesh, became wild, and it was impossible to undertake putting the corpses in the frozen ground. The next best thing was to bury the corpses at sea. Before even this could be attempted the few remaining at Hebron were compelled to shoot the dogs, as even the living were not safe from them.

While this horror of death and suffering was going on at Hebron, a like epidemic was raging at Okak. The Eskimos, as in Hebron, huddled together in their small huts, quickly became affected, until the whole population was either stricken or dead. The daily death rate was appalling, whole families dying within a few hours. The mission all the while was unceasing in its work for the afflicted, but they also fell victims to the disease, which meant that the Eskimos were left helpless. When the new year dawned only a few emaciated Eskimos were found to be alive.

Mode of Living Is Fatal.

Mr. Perrett said that when the Eskimos were stricken, their mode of living and environment was against their surviving. As soon as the illness fell upon them they were obliged to take shelter in the small, stuffy huts, where there was neither fresh air nor sunshine, and here they remained until they died. They were also without seal meat and fats, which are necessary for sustenance in cold climes, having been overtaken by the epidemic just as the hunting season opened, and, their constitutions thus weakened, they became easy prey to the scourge. Many who had recovered from their illness died later for want of nourishment.

Just a Quiet Smoke, But It Shocked Some.

Topeka, Kan. — Clouds of smoke coming from the women's waiting room at the Rock Island depot here caused the patrons of the room to make an investigation. When the matron told her it was not the place to smoke, the aged woman calmly went outside the depot and completed her smoke. She said she came from the mountains of Kentucky and was on her way to Nebraska.

Exchange of Students Planned With United States.

Freed From Dominance of German Schools, Ten Will Take Swede Specialties.

New York.—Proof that American and European students are alike freed of the dominance of German learning and German universities is found in the fact that an interchange of students between this country and Sweden has been arranged by the American-Scandinavian foundation of New York.

According to plans of this organization for the next academic year ten young Americans will go to Sweden for technological study of an advanced nature and ten Swedish students will come to the universities here.

The ten Americans, to receive $1,000 each as fellows of the American-Scandinavian foundation for 1919-20, have been chosen for the foundation by a committee of technical experts and professors. The men appointed are Samuel G. Frantz of Princeton, N. J., Princeton university; Harry F. Yancy of Urbana, Ill., University of Missouri; Chester C. Stewart of Wilmington, Del., Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Harry W. Titus of Laramie, Wyo., University of Wyoming; Robert S. Sessions of Worcester, Mass., Worcester Polytechnic institute; Clarence N. Ostergren of Hoboken, N. J., Sheffield scientific school; William S. Moir of Boston, Mass., Yale Forestry school; Henry M. Meloney of Syracuse, N. Y., state school of forestry at Syracuse university; Ralph E. Zetterstrand of Munhall, Pa., Sheffield Scientific school, and Thomas Fraser of Urbana, Ill., University of Illinois.

Four of these men will study chemistry, two hydro-electrical engineering two forestry and two metallurgy, in a of which subjects Sweden excels.

CARE FOR HEALTH OF FOWLS

Dropping Boards Should Be Cleaned Weekly—Isolate Birds With Colds —Keep Away Insects.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Clean the dropping boards at least once a week, and spray the roosts once a month with kerosene or some commercial preparation for killing mites. Have a good supply of sand or dry dirt on hand to use on the dropping boards.

If any of the birds develop colds, put as much potassium permanganate as will remain on the surface of a dime into a gallon of water and keep this material in their drinking water for several days, or until the symptoms of the colds have disappeared. Remove any sick birds from the flock as soon as noted and treat them in coops by themselves or kill and bury them if they are not worth treating.

Examine the pullets and hens for lice and dust thoroughly with a good insect powder or apply a mixture of equal parts of vaseline and mercurial or blue ointment, applying a piece about the size of a pea one inch below the vent of the bird, rubbing the mixture lightly on the skin. An application of this ointment two or three times a year will keep the fowls free from lice. Where insect powder is used, it should be applied three or four times a year, or oftener if the fowls become infested with lice. Provide a small box in the house, partly filled with dry road dust or fine dirt, in which the hens may dust themselves, thus helping to keep them free from lice.

POULTRY NOTES

It is an easy matter to overfeed fowls. Bear this in mind unless the fowls are on range.

Hens that are laying are not likely to accumulate fat; it is when they are not laying that they do so.

• • •

Give the fowls good dust and plenty of it. This is how they keep themselves free of vermin and well.

Hens of light breeds may be profitably kept for three seasons; those of the heavy breeds for two seasons.

• • •

Good layers are bred up and not fed up. All the feeding in the world cannot induce a naturally nonproductive hen to change her nature.

A trap nest is the one accurate way to tell whether you are keeping a paying flock, but the poultryman who keeps it must look after the nest in a proper way.

If you have made a failure of everything else, don't think the chicken business will prove to be a life saver. It requires not only brains, but an overplus of energy.

Chickens never wash, as many other birds do but cleanse themselves of insects by wallowing in soil. For this reason every poultry house should be provided with a dust box.

Five eggs out of every 100 are spoiled by being fertile. Producing infertile eggs does not require anything but the removal of the rooster from the flock after the need for hatching eggs is past.

Milk is no substitute for meat, for it is not sufficiently concentrated. It is impossible for fowls to drink enough of it to take the place of meat. When fed with animal food, milk performs excellent service.

Infertile eggs are more common among poor layers than good ones. Experiments at the Maine experiment station proved it nearly impossible to get fertile eggs from the hens that were the poorest layers.

SUMMER SALADS.

Skill is required in arranging salads; the garnishing is most important. Color combinations should be used with care, not mingling too many in one dish. Bright splashes of red, vivid green or yellow give zest to the appetite.

Pimentoes, chives, and hard boiled eggs thinly sliced make attractive garnishing, as do olives stuffed or green, when shaved and placed on cheese or on pineapple salad. Capers and sweet green peppers are good in combination with lettuce, tomatoes or chicken.

Lemon sliced and sprinkled with chopped parsley or sprays of parsley with quarters of lemon make a fish salad most dainty.

Beet and Potato Salad.—Take six beets and six potatoes, one cupful of chopped olives and chives, with mayonnaise dressing. Cut the cooked beets and potatoes with a potato cutter into small balls. Put the potatoes in the mayonnaise dressing to which has been added the chives and olives. Dip the beets in vinegar and dish alternately, serving on lettuce.

Poinsettia Salad.—Take six tomatoes, a stalk of celery, a sweet green pepper and three apples, one-half cup of walnut meats and mayonnaise dressing. Scald the tomatoes, chill them and with a sharp knife, mark five divisions from the top center over half way to the base. Carefully turn back the skin to form five petals, scoop out the pulp and fill with apple, celery and nuts. Heap a little extra dressing on each and garnish with a ring of green pepper.

Jellied Egg Salad.—Take one quart of chicken jelly; this may be made very economically by cooking a half dozen pairs or more of chicken's feet. Scald, then cut off the toes and skin, then cook in a quart or more of water until the flesh falls from the bones. Slice the eggs, using six, and stir them gently in the cooling jelly so they will be evenly mixed. When cold place on a platter and garnish with mayonnaise dressing and parsley or water cress.

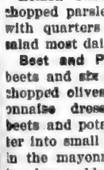
Fruit Salad with Orange Dressing.—Take a half a pound of dates, scalded and seeded, two small apples, half a cup seeded white grapes and quarter of a cup of black walnut meats; chop all but the grapes and mix well with a dressing made by using one-fourth of a cup of orange juice, three tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, one-fourth of a cup of sugar syrup and one large egg. Cook together in a double boiler until thick.

Sliced oranges with French dressing make a dainty salad to serve with game.

A child is not a blank paper on which we may write our own ideas, but an individual, who has a character to be developed and a place to make in the world.

FOOD FOR THE SICK-ABED.

Illness will come in all homes at times and it is vitally important that we realize how valuable proper food is in the recovery of a patient. A trained nurse should be well equipped in knowledge of food values and how to prepare a tempting tray, yet it is not always possible to have a trained nurse, and the mother in the home will need this knowledge.



A person who is ill in bed is out of balance, both mentally and physically, and it is wise to treat them with as much consideration as one does a child. Variety even in the serving of milk is important. Surprises are important to remember in the serving of food for grown-ups as well as for children.

The tray should be arranged to please the eye first, then the palate. A rose or a small flower beside the plate or in a small vase will often make eating a pleasure what would otherwise be refused or eaten under protest.

With little people many kinds of games will be thought of by the nurse to amuse and distract attention when the appetite is poor.

In the case of serious illness a small quantity of nourishment is given often, with as much attention to daintiness as possible.

If milk is the only food allowed it may be served in various ways. Chilled or hot, albumenized or as junket or kounniss, buttermilk and whey. It may be served with cocoa, nutmeg, orange or lemon rind, with a bit of whipped cream and fruit if it is allowed. Eggnog is a favorite method of serving milk, but it must not be overdone. A variety of flavors may be used in eggnog.

Gelatin is an easy food to digest, and combined with fruit and juices of fruits is a valuable addition to the food for the sick. It lends itself to many tempting dishes, from soups, jellies, blancmange to ice cream.

Toast is the most common of tray foods. It should be dry and well browned, then cut in finger strips to make it easier to handle. When serving any creamed dish or egg on toast it should be cut in small squares before placing the egg.

To set the face in the right direction, and then simply travel on, unmindful and never discouraged by even frequent relapses by the way, is the secret of all human achievement.

FOR THE CHOCOLATE LOVER.

Chocolate is so well liked by nearly everybody that a few recipes using the popular food may be welcome.

French Chocolate.—Melt two ounces of bitter chocolate; add two tablespoonfuls of sugar and a half-cupful of boiling water; cook three minutes. Scald three cupfuls of milk with one-fourth of finely ground coffee; strain and add to the chocolate with an eighth of a teaspoonful of salt. Beat with a Dover egg beater and serve with whipped cream flavored with vanilla.

Cocoa Ice Cream.—Take two cupfuls of milk, one cupful of sugar, a tablespoonful of arrowroot or cornstarch, a half-cupful of cocoa and cook in a double boiler for twenty minutes. Add four egg yolks well beaten, two cupfuls of cream or rich milk, and a teaspoonful of vanilla with a little salt. Freeze as usual.

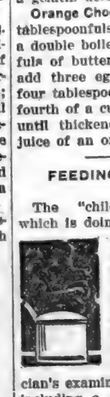
Chocolate Mousse. — Melt three squares of chocolate; add one and one-half cupfuls of sugar and one cupful of thin cream; boil one minute; cool, add a teaspoonful of vanilla, a pinch of salt and the whip from three cupfuls of heavy cream. A tablespoonful of gelatin mixed with one-fourth of a cupful of cold water, is, when softened, added to the hot mixture. Pour into a mold and let stand packed in ice and salt four hours.

Chocolate Sauce.—This is a good sauce to serve on various puddings. Cook two squares of chocolate, a cupful of sugar and one-half cupful of water together with two tablespoonfuls of butter and one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt. Cook twelve minutes; add one teaspoonful of vanilla and serve hot. This is nice served on vanilla ice cream, and is good with a gelatin dessert or with cooked rice.

Orange Chocolate Sauce.—Melt three tablespoonfuls of grated chocolate in a double boiler; add three tablespoonfuls of butter; stir until well mixed; add three egg yolks, one at a time, four tablespoonfuls of sugar and one-fourth of a cupful of rich milk. Cook until thickened. Add the rind and juice of an orange and serve at once.

FEEDING THE CHILDREN.

The "child welfare" movement which is doing such splendid work in our country should be encouraged, for there is no system of care or feeding which insures a child's health. Further, a child's appearance can never be trusted. No mother can be sure that her child is well, except on a physician's examination and a thorough one, including a blood test. It will pay parents and it will be profitable for the state and nation to see that every child is examined every year. By the system of height and weight charts sent out by the children's bureau, any mother may know whether her child approaches the normal or not and, if underweight, he should be examined at once.



Children need whole wheat. Other cereals may be used for variety. They need fat, particularly butterfat, which contains the wonderful substance which promotes growth. They should have sugar in moderate quantities and an abundance of fruit and fresh vegetables, especially those like spinach, chard and lettuce, for in them also is this life-promoting principle found in milk, butter and cream.

Another food that a well-nourished child should have is the egg. Serve one in some form daily for each child.

Then fruit of various kinds, orange juice particularly, are good for infants. Prunes, figs, dates and raisins when well masticated or cooked, are most wholesome for children. Apples, baked, are especially good; bananas when thoroughly ripe and scraped to free them from the stringy fibers are also good. As each fruit has some valuable property in itself it is wise to have a variety. Children fed on prunes with no other fruit will develop scurvy, so that orange juice with potatoes is recommended for that trouble. The young child can take orange juice; the older ones are able to take potatoes.

Fish, if fresh and carefully cooked, is a food which may be given children in place of meat. Poultry, if one can afford it, is another good food for the child. Cornmeal, mush, rice and potatoes once a day to young children are all good foods, provided they are well cooked.

ROAD BUILDING

INTEREST IN ROADS GROWS

More Attention Now Given to Improvement in Highways Than Ever Before in History.

The good roads movement is seeing a big revival now that business is becoming normal. The most important program that has recently come to our attention is that of the state of Michigan, which has just voted in favor of a $50,000,000 program that, when carried out, will place Michigan on the map big so far as good roads are concerned, writes Birkett L. Williams, truck sales manager for a large motorcar corporation.

Everywhere else you see also more interest in good roads than in any period in our history. It is true to say that the war and its needs taught us the value of good roads. Perhaps it did. Perhaps it brought home to those dull ears of higher ups the supreme importance of an intelligent system of navigable highways. But more and more it comes home to the man who studies the situation that back of the good roads movement must be the ordinary man, the average man who pays taxes and votes and thinks as he votes.

The farmer or rural dweller in certain sections for a long time stood in the way—he wanted the roads, but he didn't want to pay for them. He did not realize that in the long run good roads pay for themselves out of savings made to the community in haulage of people and merchandise. But the farmer today is reckoning in units of time.

Yes, he realizes the value of minutes throughout the season—and he is just as keen in conserving time as the city-bred man who operates a big factory; if anything, he is a bit keener, for seasons do not wait and crops must be sowed and cultivated, reaped and marketed at the right time. He has convinced himself that time is money. And he knows that good roads save time and that they save time largely because they make it possible to get satisfactory services from motorcars and motortrucks. And he is not one bit blind to the fact that operating cost is largely influenced by road conditions—that good roads make gasoline more elastic, rubber and steel more durable and bring markets nearer, and that good roads increase property values out of all proportion to the cost of good roads to any one individual. Therefore, the farmer is now back of road improvement.

Does the city man feel any interest in good roads? Ask your neighbor. If he doesn't own an automobile he expects to own one, and he knows all about where the good roads are and what they mean. But when his influence counts big, the greatest impetus has naturally sprung from the numerous army of motorcar owners to whom motorcar ownership has made the territory for miles around his neighborhood.

Counties and states where good roads have become a steady part of a progressive program of legislation have seen values shoot up in the most surprising fashion, and this, again, has brought home the fact that good roads pay for themselves. Thus it is natural that the years 1919 and 1920 will see the most stupendous good roads programs inaugurated in America that the world has ever known. This will result in the wider utility of motorcars and motortrucks and, of course, prove a big aid to the solution of the freight traffic problem.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By Mary Graham Bonner

THE FIELDS.

"It was in the summer time that the fields were waving and chatting and saying these things to each other. Of course they were at their best and the season had been just right for them.

"There had been enough rain but not too much, enough sunshine but not too much. In fact, it had been quite a perfect season so far.

"The fields always spoke of things having been nice so far for they never knew what the weather was going to be any more than the farmers did, and they heard the farmers talking in that way to each other.

"So the fields used to wonder if it would be dry and without even any showers for the rest of the season, or whether it would rain every day and hurt them!

"But this special day they were feeling very well and very happy.

"'I'm so good for food,' said the barley field. 'I am pretty and feathery, too.'

"'I'm such a lovely pale green color,' said the oats.

"'And I am good and substantial looking,' said the winter wheat.

"'I am very good for the feed of animals,' said the oats, 'and so are peas.'

"'I come in pretty usefully myself,' said the winter wheat.

"'How about me?' asked the sorrel, a plant with yellowish blossoms.

"'All right,' said the oats, 'but I am such a lovely shade of green.'

"'You admire yourself, eh?' asked the sorrel.

"'I do,' said the oats.

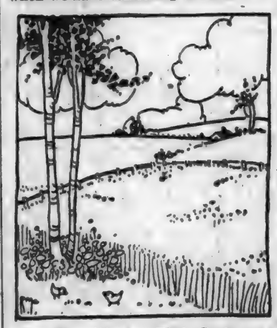
"'So do I,' remarked the winter wheat.

"'And I like myself, too,' said the barley field. 'We are liked by others,' it added.

"'We are, too,' said the winter wheat.

"'Ah, ah, ah, don't boast too much,' said a voice.

"'And who are you, pray tell?' the fields asked. 'Why shouldn't we boast when we have something to boast for?'



They Were at Their Best.

"'You may boast,' said the voice, 'but not too much for I want to do some of it myself.'

"Then the fields noticed that the voice came from the direction of the clover hay field.

"'Oh, ho,' said winter wheat, 'so clover hay wants to do some talking.'

"'Certainly,' said clover hay.

"'Well, what have you to say for yourself?' asked the others.

"'Quite a lot,' said clover hay.

"'Pray tell us what it is then,' the others asked.

"'You are all very useful. You all make good food for the animals, both in the summer and in the winter.'

"Winter wheat bowed gracefully. It was much flattered to be especially noticed.

"'But I have a special distinction,' said clover hay.

"'What is clover hay talking about?' the others asked.

"'Don't use such big words,' said the barley. 'Fields don't understand.'

"'I mean that I have something special to boast of,' said clover hay, 'so I don't want all of you to take up the whole summer-time in boasting.'

"'Ah, we see,' said the oats, 'clover hay doesn't want us to boast so it can get a good chance at it.'

"'Right,' said clover hay. 'You're perfectly right.'

"'What are you going to boast about?' asked the winter wheat.

"'Myself, of course,' said clover hay

"'Yes,' it continued, waving about, 'I can boast about myself and boast beautifully. I am the food the animals love so; they actually call me the animals' dessert. I am to the animals what ice cream is to the children and to the grown-ups, too.

"'It's all very well, all very well, to be regular, ordinary feed, but I, the clover hay, have the honor showed to me of being considered the best part of the animals' meal.'

"'And what clover hay boasted of was true, for clover hay is the dessert for the farm animals."

THE "BLUES" Caused by Acid-Stomach

Millions of people who worry, are despondent, have spells of mental depression, feel blue and are often melancholy, believe that these conditions are due to outside influences over which they have little or no control. Nearly always, however, they can be traced to an internal source—acid-stomach. Nor is it to be wondered at. Acid-stomach, beginning with such well defined symptoms as indigestion, belching, heartburn, bloat, etc., will, if not checked, in time affect to some degree or other all the vital organs. The nervous system becomes deranged. Digestion suffers. The blood is impoverished. Health and strength are undermined. The victim of acid-stomach, although he may not know the cause of his ailments, feels his hope, courage, ambition and energy slipping. And truly life is dark—not worth much to the man or woman who has acid-stomach!

Get rid of it! Don't let acid-stomach hold you back, wreck your health, make your days miserable, make you a victim of the "blues" and gloomy thoughts! There is a marvelous modern remedy called EATONIC that brings, oh! such quick relief from your stomach miseries—sets your stomach to rights—makes it strong, cool, sweet and comfortable. Helps you get back your strength, vigor, vitality, enthusiasm and good cheer. So many thousands upon thousands of sufferers have used EATONIC with such marvelously helpful results that we are sure you will feel the same way if you will just give it a trial. DEATH RESULTS FROM A HARD FALL

On Wednesday afternoon of last week occurred an accident that cost the life of Mrs. Angeline Jones, mother of Mrs. J. D. Fetters, at her country home, three miles northwest of St. Joe. Mrs. Fetters was up stairs attending to her household duties when she head a noise and hurrying downstairs found that her mother had fallen down cellar and that she had hurt herself seriously. Help was called immediately and the physician called found that she was injured about the head and shoulders to such an extent that she was rendered unconscious and death came as a relief on Thursday evening at 11:30. Mrs. Jones had come to the home of her daughter just ten days prior to the accident for a visit of a few weeks. She had been in rather poor health but was like all old folks, able to get about themselves. Mrs. Fetter stated that she could see that her mother was failing but that she did not like for her to watch her and keep her from work. The life history of Mrs. Jones is as follows:

Angeline, daughter of James and Catherine Callender, was born in Farmer township, Defiance county, Ohio, February 2, 1844. She was united in marriage with Samuel H. Jones, March 28, 1861, and two years later settled on the old Jones homestead. To them were born four children, one son and three daughters, Catherine Bertie, Aosa Irene and Lillie Belle, the son, Robert C., died July 26, 1863, and the husband passed away June 20, 1878.

When fourteen years of age she was converted and united with the Methodist Episcopal church near Farmer Center. About twenty-seven years ago she joined the church of the United Brethren in Christ at Williams Center, of which she was a faithful and honored member at the time of her death. She was a loving devoted wife and mother, cheerfully sharing in the toil and sacrifice of pioneer life. But her ministers of love and helpfulness were not confined to her own home and dear ones, but shared with neighbors as opportunity presented, and even with the stranger that might need the kindly word or act. She loved the sanctuary with its services and associations and earnestly sought to teach the loved ones committed to her care, both by precept and example to love, trust and follow the Christ she served.

At the home of her daughter, near St. Joe, Ind., she passed to her reward July 24, 1919, aged 75 years, five months and 22 days.

"What is death? 'Tis to be free, no more to love or hope or fear, to join the great equality. All, all alike are humbled there. The mighty grave wraps lord and slave; nor pride nor poverty dares come, within that refuge home the tomb."

She is survived by three daughters, Mrs. John Fetters, St. Joe, Ind.; Mrs. Emanuel Camp and Miss Lillie Jones, both of Edon, Ohio. One sister, Mrs. William Waters, of Newaygo, Mich., two brothers, John Callender, of Newaygo, and George, of Edgerton, Ohio; two grandchildren and two great-grandchildren with other relatives and many friends who deeply deplore their loss.

Funeral services were held from Farmer Center Union church Sunday conducted by Rev. J. W. Lilly, of Hicksville, assisted by Rev. C. O. Johnson, of St. Joe, Ind. Interment at Farmer Center cemetery.

MARGARET SWINEFORD DIES AFTER A YEAR'S SICKNESS

St. Joe has again been called upon to give up one of her most respected citizens, Mrs. Margaret Swineford, after an illness of just a few weeks' duration. During the past year, however, she had a number of serious sick attacks but was always able to recover. Due to her ripe age she was practically exhausted every means of assistance that was given her, the end came to her peacefully on Thursday evening, July 24, at her home at about 7:30 o'clock. The deceased was a twin of Mrs. Sarah McCroy, who had been living in St. Joe caring for her.

Mrs. Swineford and Mrs. McCrory were perhaps the oldest twins in northern Indiana. Two or three years ago they took the prise at Robison park, Fort Wayne, for being the oldest twins in attendance. Both were the center of much attraction at that time. Mrs. McCrory is in fairly good health for a woman of her advanced age.

Margaret Louesa Horn was born in Adams county, Pa., March 25, 1832, and departed this life July 24, 1919, aged 87 years, three months and 29 days. In early childhood she moved with her parents to Ashland county, Ohio, where she was married to Anthony Swineford in June, 1852, and continued to reside there until the year 1858, when they came to DeKalb county, and purchased a farm on the state road. With the exception of a very short time, when they lived in Newville, they lived on the farm and reared their children. In 1888 they moved to St. Joe, where the husband and father died in 1894 at the age of 67 years.

Five children were born to this union, Elinora, who died in infancy; George Swineford, of St. Joe; Mrs. Calvin Brown, deceased; Mrs. DeLora Curie, of St. Joe, and Mrs. Ada Boyle, of Norwalk, Ohio.

She united with the Lutheran church at the age of twelve years, near Jeromeville, Ohio, and had lived a faithful devoted Christian ever since, dying in a triumphant faith and hope of eternal life. Our loss is her gain.

The funeral services was conducted from the Lutheran church Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. A. K. Mumma, her pastor, officiating. E. R. Kinsey, director. Burial was made at Riverside.

LIFE HISTORY OF MRS. MYRTLE BEAMS

Myrtle Haifly Beams was born in Allen county, Indiana, May 21, 1882, and died at Spencerville, July 28, 1919, at the age of 37 years, two months and five days. She spent her early life on the farm and moved with her parents to Spencerville at the age of fifteen, where they remained four years, moving back again to the farm.

She was united in marriage to Mr. George Beams June 15, 1904. To this union were born three children, two sons and one daughter, Forest Gerald, Garnet Beatrice and Howard Lester. She united with the Lutheran church January 30, 1898, and has lived a faithful christian ever since. She was the teacher of the Golden Hours Sunday school class, which has grown to a class of twenty-seven members. She was faithful to every trust and obligation that was put upon her. She will be sadly missed on every hand.

"Dear Jesus we thank Thee
For many friends so dear
Who never do forget us
Whether we are far or near.

But there isn't a friend
Though we love them so dear,
That can take the place of Jesus
For He is always near.

And when they're all gone, but Jesus,
No one to talk to, but Him,
We can tell Him all our troubles
And soon feel right again.

Oh, 'Faith is the Victory,'
To win all answer to prayer,
And what a rich blessing
To look to Jesus for care.

Though we have our homes and kindred,
They seem but large as a kernel
Compared with the friends and mansions
We shall have in that home eternal."

(Written by Myrtle Beams on her death bed.)

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. A. K. Mumma assisted by Rev. Delaney, pastor of the Lutheran church at Harlan. She was laid to rest in White City cemetery.

RESPONDS WILLINGLY TO OUR STATEMENT

During the past month we have sent out a number of statements covering the period for which a number of our readers are owing us for their papers. The response has been gratifying to us indeed but still there are many who owe us small sums that would be appreciated at this time perhaps as never before. Among the last that we received is that from Roscoe Hart, of South Bend, Ind. In part we reproduce his letter:

"I am glad that you sent me a statement for I did not know when I had paid, but I knew I was behind some. I am enclosing $2.00 on back dues and am sending $2.50 for advance subscription and when it expires send me a statement."

He also enclosed a clipping from the South Bend Tribune speaking of the aeroplane flights made there and a paragraph of the news item speaks as follows:

"Other 'cloud-riders' Friday were R. E. Moojiera, J. H. Wells, Roscoe Hart, Mrs. Ellen Cripe and Miss Margaret O'Dell. Approximately 70 persons have ascended with either Lieuts. McCabe or Sellers during the short time their aerial company has been in existence. Seven of these passengers have been women."

A note at the bottom of his letter says: "Couldn't be without the paper."

IMPATIENTLY AWAIT GREAT NEW CIRCUS

Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Combined Shows Arouse Keen Interest Here.

"Circus Day," the big holiday for which young and old impatiently wait at this particular season promises to eclipse all other events of the calendar year at Fort Wayne, Tuesdays, August 5.

It would seem at though everybody in this locality were planning to attend. The very name of the great new circus—Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Combined—has been sufficient to arouse far more interest than has ever before been shown in the coming of any amusement enterprise. And word from the Ringling Brothers, who are the directors of this gigantic supercircus, is to the effect that those who attend the performance will witness the greatest program ever presented in America. This is likewise true of the mammoth street parade, which will positively take place showday morning, the mammoth menagerie and all else connected with this biggest of all amusement institutions. The famous showmen have made a complete survey of both the great circuses and merged the finest and best of each into one. Hundreds upon hundreds of performers will appear in the gigantic main-tent. There will be scores upon scores of the cleverest dumb actors. A gorgeously costumed pageant, of stupendous size, will open the program. Great companies of characters, representing the best-loved stories of fable and nursery lore, will appear. There will be splendid and many groups of beautiful horses in jeweled trappings. The army of clowns exceed all past records for fun and numbers. All contribute to the biggest circus in history.

Total of Fourteen.

Put your mathematical friend to the test by asking him to name five uneven figures which, when added together, total 14. After he has given it up set down for him three ones and the figure 11. If he argues that 11 is only one figure, tell him that 11 is made up of two figures. If that solution doesn't satisfy him give him this one: Four ones equal four. Set down another one in front of the four and you have fourteen.

Relics of a Past Race.

The great ceremonial cave or Kiva, where the people's councils evidently assembled, is located two-thirds of the way up the side of a cliff, in a cave inaccessible, save with ladders. The temple is carved out of the solid rock, partly by nature and partly by hand. Little is known about the forgotten people that once lived in this beautiful retreat in New Mexico, although many of the symbols of a race that was are visible in the interiors of the recently discovered homes.

Sun Nearest Earth.

The sun is nearest the earth—or perihelion—at the beginning of the year, or when the northern hemisphere has winter. It is at its greatest distance, or aphelion, about the middle of the year, or during the summer of the northern hemisphere. The least distance of the sun from the earth is more than 91,000,000 miles, and the greatest more than 94,000,000. The mean distance is commonly stated as 92,900,000.

Japanese as Gymnasts.

Nearly all Japanese soldiers are expert gymnasts, and every barrack has a gymnasium. So well trained are they that in less than half a minute they can scale a wall 14 feet high by simply leaping on each other's shoulders, one man sustaining two or three others.

Women are wearing half shoes this spring, both because the new oxfords are so attractive in appearance, and because the season has been favorable for the very general wearing of low shoes.

The capacity of the elevator was then overtaxed and it could be noticed about the building. They have been having a hard time of getting cars for loading, but now they have made room for more grain by getting out a few cars the latter part of the week.

Some misunderstanding has arisen about getting War Saving Stamps as an inheritance in case of death. The government originally arranged this so that it can be obtained by the proper person representing the deceased. It has already cashed a many such. This investment is absolutely safe. If you want further information consult your local postmaster.

I have taken over the cream station next to Leighty's Grocery store. Open every day. Bring me your cream. Mrs. Ada Berry, St. Joe.

Half Shoes for Women in the Black and the Brown Kid.

Women are wearing half shoes this spring, both because the new oxfords are so attractive in appearance, and because the season has been favorable for the very general wearing of low shoes.

Those who do not buy their shoes by chance, but use discrimination in making a selection, enjoy exercising their choice among the several new styles at Lawrence's. These show distinctive character, assured style, correct fitting quality, fine leathers, high quality shoemaking. They set properly, without gaping at side and heel. Also made to keep their shape in service, and to wear well.

OUT-OF-ORDINARY PEOPLE

TARDIEU NEXT FRENCH PREMIER?

The report comes from Brest, France, that Andre Tardieu will be the next French premier. In that stronghold of socialism the men who make politics what it is in that end of France predict the resignation of Premier Clemenceau before long.

Political gossip has it "The Tiger" will retire with colors flying, taking no chances of asking the chamber of deputies to vote its confidence in the government. Much of this talk comes from circles in which are the supporters of Deputy Goude of Brest, member of the extreme left, who has led the fights against Clemenceau.

This speculation is coincident with the arrival here from the Black sea of the French warship Justice. Now, it was aboard the Justice that the sailors mutinied in Sebastopol and in whose behalf Deputy Goude demanded amnesty, lining up 137 votes in support of the motion, 100 members abstaining from voting on the question. Those whose chatter in a political strain predict that Clemenceau will address the chamber and point out that he has brought France to a just peace, that his work is done, and that he will resign.

"And will he seek to have Tardieu succeed him?" they ask.

Now Tardieu is very popular. He made a fine record as high commissioner for France in the United States during the war. He might be acceptable to the socialists, it is said, if he promised to give socialism representation in his cabinet.

CARSON'S MESSAGE TO AMERICA

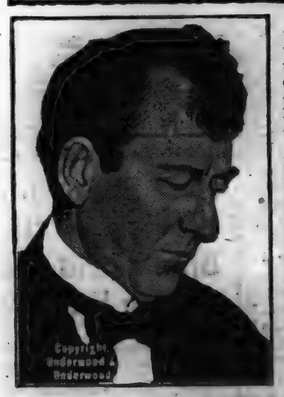
The Irish question is always interesting. While President De Valera of the "Irish republic" is here to raise money and is greeted by enthusiastic crowds, Sir Edward Carson, the Irish unionist leader, is telling the United States to mind its own business. In a speech at Belfast he said:

"Heaven knows I want good feeling between America and this country. I believe the whole future of the world probably depends upon the relations between the United States of America and ourselves, but I am not going to submit to this kind of a campaign, whether for friendship or any other purpose.

"I seriously say to America today, you attend to your own affairs; we will attend to ours. You look after your own questions at home; we will look after ours. We will brook no interference in our own affairs by any country, however powerful. It is not for that we waged the great war of independence which has just been concluded. What right had an American mission to come to this country—come here in a breach of hospitality of one nation toward another—to attempt to stir up strife in matters in which they were not concerned?

"The encouragement those men gave the Sinn Fein party has created for the British government far more difficulties than ever before."

WOULD KEEP PRESIDENTS AT HOME



The president of the United States would not be permitted, during his term of office, to leave the country or to perform the duties of his office except at Washington, under a bill introduced by Representative Campbell of Kansas, chairman of the house rules committee. The bill's text follows:

"Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, section 1, that from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for the president of the United States, during the term of his office, to absent himself from the territorial jurisdiction of the United States or to perform the duties of his office at any other place than at the seat of government established by the act for establishment of the temporary and permanent seat of government of the United States, approved July 16, 1790, to which this act is an amendment."

Representative Campbell had prepared a lengthy address on his bill in which he sharply criticized President Wilson for going to Europe for the peace conference, but unanimous consent for its immediate delivery was refused by Representative Blanton, Democrat, Texas.

The next day Champ Clark said in debate that the bill was not introduced to be passed, but simply as an indirect attack on President Wilson.

"He has as much right to go to Europe as he has to go to Baltimore," said the ex-speaker.

LADY BEATTY'S RICHES COSTLY

An income of $200,000 a year is supposed to insure one from fear of the wolf at the door. But not if one lives in England and owns property in the United States. Here is what happens in the case of Lady Ethel Beatty, wife of Admiral Sir David Beatty of the British navy, and daughter of the late Marshall Field.

The British government takes 50 per cent of her income on the ground that she is a British subject, being married to a Briton. And the United States government takes 60 per cent because her property is in America. Her income is known to be between $200,000 and $300,000 a year, because it is only on incomes of that amount that 60 per cent is levied.

Say, then, that Lady Beatty draws $200,000 a year from her property. The British government takes $100,000, the American government takes $120,000, and her income is $80,000 less than nothing at all. If her income amounts to $300,000 the British government takes $140,000; the American government takes $168,000, and Lady Beatty pays $28,000 more than she gets.

"Every American living in England faces the same conditions," said Arthur Huertley of the Northern Trust company, which handles Lady Beatty's finances.

Felt and Taffeta Hats.

A line of hats with stitched gray felt top and navy taffeta facing is featured for midsummer wear by a manufacturer of popular priced models. There is a large variety of styles to choose from, according to the bulletin of the Retail Millinery Association of America. Soft, crushable crowns are a feature of these hats, as well as wide sailor brims, mushroom, roll side effects, rolling sailors and wide side and short back and front models. The trimmings are simple. Navy wool stitching appears in rows on the side crown of one model, and ornaments of vari-colored silk soutache give a gay touch to the combination.

Silk Sweaters.

There are many lovely new silk sweaters. Perhaps the greatest novelty of these is the jersey sweater made up of jersey fabric in designs. These designs take the form of squares and plaids and stripes, and sometimes, too, the fabric seems to be creped most attractively.

SMOCK FAD IS ADDED BY ALL

And now enters the smock—that is, it is entering everybody's wardrobe. At first, writes a fashion correspondent, this curious fad was followed only by those of artistic or gardening temperament or those who loved the most advanced and different sort of thing. The smock has undergone so many modifications from its first appearance as the typical peasant garment, which it really is, that it is in point of fact hardly recognizable. Its name, too, has changed, for whereas in the beginning it was just a smock, now it is known as the "overblouse," and the chemise blouse, and the Cossack coat.

The gardening period in our recent lives is believed to be responsible for the acceptance of this type of blouse. The smock is so comfortable with its loose free lines that it became at once just the sort of thing needed for this sort of work, especially since it looked just as well with trousers as with skirts—a thing which could not be said of all waists or blouses. Of course trousers were a part of the gardening days, and while they have retired at least from general service as far as woman's need for them goes, the smock remains, glorified beyond its most humble followers' recognition.

Of great beauty are those overblouses of midnight blue voile closely paillated all over with round silver disks and held in place with a thick cord of silver threads. This is to be worn with a skirt of silk or sport satin or gabardine and makes a pleasing costume. The printed chiffons have been extensively used for the type of blouse. One seldom sees them without a belt of some sort, generally a heavy silken cord which encircles the waist and loops in front with heavy tassels or fringe.

If the smock is worn under the coat it is often left free and unbelted, but rarely is it seen now worn in this way without one's coat or sweater. The smock of the unbelted variety has a decidedly dressing sacque look, but so many women understand so cleverly the adaptation of every mode that we are spared an avalanche of ladies apparently abroad in their breakfast coats or boudoir jackets.

A Lovely Smock Blouse.

One of the most beautiful of all the smock type of blouses seen lately is of finest indestructible white voile, braided all over in fine white silk braid in circle design. The bottom of the blouse has a hem of white silk faced back onto the blouse. A vest is cut at the front and piped with white silk. Two silken buttons caught together with loops of the narrow braid fasten it at the throat. It slips over the head in kimono fashion and a heavy silken cord of white slips around the waist and loops in front. This charming thing is to be worn with white skirts of satin or silk or crepe.

A curious concession to the overblouse notion is found in many elaborate waists of chiffon or georgette with the front piece left long enough to go over the skirt and the back, stopping just at the waist line. The belt of the skirt slipped over the front panel gives the effect when worn under a coat or a vest. The blouse, of course, buttons down the back. The vestee lives on and on and appears just as often on simple waists of wash fabric as it does on the more elaborate type.

One finds waists of georgette with vests made by using frill after frill of narrow Valenciennes lace. Always the vestee is simulated by leaving the front panel longer than the back so that it hangs over the skirt. Just as often one finds a hem of some contrasting color to the body of the blouse added, the contrasting color appearing on collar and sleeves also. Now and then in a very fine smock of organdie one finds this sort of trimming done with fine lace.

Of all of the delightful summer things we have seen none is more charming than the smock of organdie of a new sort which has dots of a different color scattered thickly over its surface. Tiny frills of the plain organdie trim collar and sleeves and edge the turned back hem, while narrow string belts of the organdie hold the extra fullness in place at the waist. These offer the greatest degree of freshness and crispness—which any summer wash fabric ought to have.

The Long Cossack Blouse.

A variation of the smock is the Cossack blouse. This is just as apt to reach to the knees as not. It often buttons right up to the chin, or again it is apt to separate down the front entirely to show a vest underneath of richness and beauty. The Cossack blouse, as the name tells, is borrowed from Russia. It has the same drooping fullness at the waist that one sees in the Russian peasant garment, arranged over a wide belt of the same material as the whole garment or of different color and fabric.

The skirt of this blouse is always very long, and just as apt to reach to the hem of the skirt as not. It is most often developed in some handsome fabrics such as georgette thickly braided or beaded, or in silken indestructible voile or even in heavier silk or velvet, and naturally is intended for elaborate occasions. There is nothing which offers a simpler way of remodelling an old garment than the use of a Cossack blouse.

One can really make a sort of elongated shirt and belt it in at the waist and conform thus strictly to the type. Or the front can be opened, a vest added and the sides of the skirt be left open to show the petticoat of the dress beneath. There are endless ways in which one can vary the design, therefore it has everything to recommend it.

Now because there is much talk of these newer models we must not for a moment think that the regulation blouse or shirtwaist is out of favor. Indeed, it is not, and it is repeated in just as many materials as there are factories to make them. The kimono type with its slip-on ease is still much favored for the dressier blouses of georgette or chiffon. Many have a rather tight foundation over which is hung a panel of contrasting color back and front. This panel, while short, is left to hang free over the skirt and is smart in appearance. The sleeves of this blouse are of the same color and material as the body. One often finds this type of waist enveloped in a combination of organdie and linen or pique or heavy lawn. The effect is pleasing and unusual, too.

Waist of Tailored Type.

As to the more tailored type of waist for traveling or business there are several models which bid for favor. One of these is the strictly tailored design following the exact lines of a man's shirt and is much affected for sport wear. A long time ago shirts of this sort were made of a brilliant striped percale and these are again in favor—bright red and white stripes vying with those of the most vivid blue or green or yellow or black for first place.

These, of course, are strictly tailored and have the appearance of belonging to one's brother, as they demand the same ties and link cuff buttons.

Another tailored model is less severe than these, as it has a turned down collar usually added of some heavier material than the sheer lawn or dimity or linen of which the blouse is made. In one model the collar of linen crash becomes a pointed revers extending the entire front and fastening just below the yoke with one large pearl button. Fine lawn is used for the body of the blouse. The cuffs which finish the long, tight sleeves are folded back to fasten with buttons or narrow bows of black and white ribbon.

Hip Stiffening in Skirts.

Hip stiffening is being used to a large extent in Paris dresses, giving skirts very much the old crinoline effect.

DEAD MEN'S SHOES.

Synopsis—The man who tells this story—call him the hero, for short—is visiting his friend John Saunders, British official in Nassau, Bahama Islands. Charlie Webster, a local merchant, completes the trio of friends. Conversation turning upon buried pirate treasure, Saunders produces a written document purporting to be the death-bed statement of Henry P. Tobias, a successful pirate, made by him in 1828. It gives two spots where two millions and a half of treasure were buried by him and his companions. The conversation of the three friends is overheard by a stranger, whose face is deeply pitted by small pox. The document disappears. Saunders, however, has a copy of it. The hero determines to go in search of the pirate treasure and charters the Maggie Darling, a trim two-masted schooner. The pock-marked man is taken on board as a passenger, bound for Spanish Wells. Old Tom catches a "sucking fish," of great virtue as a mascot in connection with the seeking of buried pirate treasure.

CHAPTER V.

In Which We Begin to Understand Our Unwelcome Passenger.

As I yawned and looked out of my cabin soon after dawn, about 4:30 next morning, there was no wind at all, and no hope of wind.

As I stood out of the cabin hatch, however, there was enough breeze to flutter a piece of paper that had been caught in the mainsail halyard; it fluttered there lonely in the morning. Nothing else was astir but it and I, and I took it up in my hand idly. As I did so George reared his head for'ard.

"'Morning, George," I said; "I guess we've got to run on gasoline today."

"There ain't no gasoline, sir. It's run out in the night."

"The tanks were filled when we started, weren't they?" I asked.

"Yes, sir."

"We can't have used them up so soon . . ."

"No, sir—but someone has turned the cocks . . ."

I stood dazed for a moment, wondering how this could have happened—then a thought slowly dawned upon me.

"Who has charge of them?" I said.

George looked a little stupid, then defiant.

"I see," I said; and, suddenly, without remembering Charlie Webster's advice not to lose your temper with a negro—I realised that this was no accident, but a deliberate trick, something indeed in the nature of a miniature mutiny. That fluttering paper I had picked from the halyard lay near my breakfast table. I had only half read it. Now its import came to me with full force. I had no firearms with me. Having a quick temper, I have made it a habit all my life never to carry a gun—because they go off so easily. But one most essential part of a gentleman's education had been mine, so I applied it instantly on George, with the result that a well-directed blow under the peak of the jaw sent him sprawling, and for awhile speechless, in the cockpit.

"No gasoline?" I said.

And then my passenger—I must give him credit for the courage—put up his head for'ard, and called out:

"I protest against that; it's a cowardly outrage. You wouldn't dare to do it to a white man."

"Oh, I see," I rejoined. "So you are the author of this precious paper here, are you? Come over here and talk it over, if you've the courage."

"I've got the courage," he answered, in a shaking voice.

"All right," I said; "you're safe for the present—and, George, who is so fond of sleep, will take quite a nap for a while, I think."

"You English brute!" he said.

"You English brute!" he had said; and the words had impelled me to invite him aft; for I cannot deny a certain admiration for him that had mysteriously grown up in me.

"Come here!" I said, "for your life is safe for the time being. I would like to discuss this paper with you."

He came and we read it together, fluttering as I had seen it flutter in his fingers as he read it for'ard to the engineer and to the deckhand. It began:

"Think how many we are! Think what we could do! It isn't either that we haven't intelligence—if only we were to use it. We don't lack leaders—we don't lack courage—we don't lack martyrs; all are ready—"

I stopped reading.

"Why don't you start then?" I asked.

"We're waiting for Jamaica," he answered; "she's almost ready."

"It sounds a pretty good idea to me," I remarked, "from your point of view. From your point of view,' remember, I said; but you mustn't think that yours is mine—not for one moment—O dear no! On the contrary, my point of view is that of the governor of Nassau, or his representative, quite nearby, at Harbour Island, isn't it?"

My pock-marked friend grew a trifle green as I said this.

"We have sails still, remember," I resumed. "George and the lost gasoline are not everything. Five hours, with anything of a wind, would bring us to Harbour island, and—with this paper in my hand it would be—what do you think yourself? The gallows?"

My friend grew grave at that, and seemed to be thinking hard inside, making resolutions the full force of which I didn't understand till later, but the immediate result of which was a graciousness of manner which did not entirely deceive me.

"Oh," he said, "I don't think you quite mean that. You're impulsive—as when you hit that poor boy down there—"

"Well," I observed, "I'm willing to treat you better than you deserve. "So, I'll say nothing about this, if you like" (pointing to the manuscript), "and if the wind holds, put you ashore tomorrow at Spanish Wells. I like you in spite of myself. Is it a bargain?"

On this we parted, and, as I thought, with a certain friendliness on both sides.

There was no sailing wind, so there was nothing to do but stay where we were all day. I spent most of the time in my cabin, reading a novel, and, soon after nine, I fell asleep in a frame of mind unaccountably trustful.

I suppose that I had been asleep about three hours when I was disturbed by a tremendous roar. It was Sailor (who always slept near me) out on the cockpit with a man under his paws—his jaws at the man's throat. I called him off, and saw that it was my pock-marked friend, with his right hand extended in the cockpit and a revolver a few inches away from it. So far as I knew it was the only firearm on the ship. "Let's get hold of that first, Sailor," I said, and I slipped it into my hip pocket.

"Wake up, Tom," I called, and, "wake up, captain!" Meanwhile I took out the revolver from my hip pocket, and held it over the man I seemed to grow more and more sorry for.

"We've not only got a mutiny aboard," I told the captain, "but we've got treason to the British government. Do you want to stand for that? Or shall I put you ashore with the rest?"

Unruffled as usual, he had nothing to say beyond:

"Ay, ay, sir!"

"Take this cord, then," I ordered him and Tom, "and bind the hands and feet of this pock-marked gentleman here; also of George, engineer; and also of Theodore, the deckhand. Bind them well. And throw them into the dingy, with a bottle of water apiece, and a loaf of bread. By noon, we'll have some wind, and can make our way to Harbour island, and there I'll have a little talk with the commandant."

And as I ordered, all was done. Tom and I rowed the dingy ashore, with our three captives bound like three silly fowls, and presently threw them ashore with precious little ceremony. Then we got back to the Maggie Darling, with imprecations in our ears, and particularly the promises of the pock-marked rebel, who announced the certainty of our meeting again.

Of course we laughed at such threats, but I confess that, as I went down to my cabin and picked up the "manifesto," which had been forgotten in all the turmoil, I could not escape a certain thrill as I read the signature—for it was: "Henry P. Tobias, Jr."

That night we made Harbour island, and met that welcome that can only be met at the lonely ends of the earth.

The commandant and the clergyman took me under their wings on the spot, and, though there was a good hotel, the commandant didn't consider it good enough for me.

I liked the attitude they took toward my adventure. Their comments on "Henry P. Tobias, Jr." and the paper I had with me, were specially enlightening.

"The black men themselves," they both agreed, "are all right, except, of course, here and there. It's fellows like this precious Tobias, real white trash—the negroes' name for them is apt enough—that are the danger for the friendship of both races. And it's the vein of a sort of a literary idealism in a fellow like Tobias that makes him the more dangerous. He's not all to the bad—"

"I couldn't help thinking that too," I interrupted.

"Oh, no," they said. "but he's a bit mad, too. That's his trouble. He's got a personal, as well as an abstract, grudge against the British government."

"Treasure?" I laughed.

"How did you know?" they asked.

"Never mind; I somehow got the idea."

"Take a word of advice. Have a few guns with you, for you're liable to need them."

"I agree," I remarked. "I'll take the guns all right, but I'm afraid I'll need some more crew. I mean I'll want an engineer, and another deckhand."

And, just as I said this, there came up some one post-haste from the village; some one, too, that wanted the clergyman, as well as me, for my captain was ill, and at the point of death.

"What on earth can be the trouble?" I said, but, the three of us, including the commandant went.

We found the captain lying in his berth, writhing with cramps.

"What on earth have you been doing with yourself, Cap?" I asked.

"I did nothing, sir, but eat my dinner, and drink that claret you were kind enough to give me."

"The half-bottle of claret?"

"Yes, sir, the very same."

"Well, there was nothing to hurt you in that," I said. "Did you take it half and half with water, as I told you?"

"I did indeed, sir."

"It's very funny," I said. And then as he began to writhe and stiffen, I called out to Tom: "Get some rum, Tom, and make it boiling hot, quick—quick! We must get him into a sweat."

Very soon we did. Then I said to Tom:

"What do you make out of this smell that's coming from him, Tom?"

"Kerosene, sar," said Tom.

"I thought the very same," I said.

Tom beckoned me to go with him to the galley, and showed me several quart bottles of water standing on a shelf.

"Two of these were kerosene," he said "and I suppose Cap made a mistake;" for one looked as clear as the other.

Then I took one of them back to the captain.

"Was it a bottle like this you mixed with the claret?" I asked.

"Sure it was, sir," he answered, writhing hard with the cramps.

"But man!" I said. "Couldn't you tell the difference between that and water?"

"I thought it tasted funny, boss, but I wasn't used to claret."

And then we had to laugh again, and I thought old Tom would die.

"A nigger's stomach and his head," said the commandant, "are about the same. I really don't know which is the stronger."

The captain didn't die, though he came pretty near to it. In fact, he took so long getting on his feet, that we couldn't wait for him; so we had practically to look out for a new crew, with the exception of Tom, and Sailor. The commandant proved a good friend to us in this, choosing three somewhat characterless men, with good "characters."

As we said goodby, with a spanking southwest breeze blowing, I could see that he was a little anxious about me.

"Take care of yourself," he said, "for you must remember none of us can take care of you. There's no settlement where you're going—no telegraph or wireless; you could be murdered, and none of us hear of it for a month, or forever. And the fellows you're after are a dangerous lot, take my word for it. Keep a good watch on your guns, and we'll be on the lookout for the first news of you, and anything we can do we'll be there, you bet."

CHAPTER VI.

In Which the Sucking Fish Has a Chance to Show Its Virtue.

The breeze was so strong that we didn't use our engine that day. Besides, I wanted to take a little time thinking over my plans. I spent most of the time studying the charts and pondering John P. Tobias' narrative, which threw very little light on the situation. There was little definite to go by but his mark of the compass engraven on a certain rock in a wilderness of rocks; and such rocks as they were at that.

I looked well to my guns. The commandant had made me accept the loan of a particularly expert revolver that was, I could see, as the apple of his eye. He must have cared for me a great deal to have lent it me, and it was right as the things we love.

Then I called Tom to me: "How about that sucking fish, Tom?" I asked.

"It's just cured, sar," he said. "I was going to offer it to you this lunch time. It's dried out fine; couldn't be better. I'll bring it to you this minute." And he went and was back again in a moment. "You must wear it right over your heart," he said, "and you'll see there's not a bullet can get near it. It's never been known for a bullet to go through a sucking fish. It's God's truth."

"But, Tom," I said, "how about you?"

"I've worn one here, sar, for twenty years, and you can see for yourself"—and he bared the brown chest beneath which beat the heart that like nothing else in the world has made me believe in God."

We awoke to a dawn that was a rose planted in the sky by the mysterious hand that seems to love to give the fairest thing the loneliest setting.

But there was no wind, so that day we ran on gasoline. We had some fifty miles to go to where the narrative pointed, a smaller cay, the cay known in old days as "Dead Men's Shoes"—but since known by another name which, for various reasons, I do not deem it polite to divulge—near the end of the long cay down which we were running.

About twilight we dropped anchor in another quiet bay, so much like that of the night before, as all the bays and cays are along that coast, that you need to have sailed them from boyhood to know one from another.

The cove we were looking for, known by the cheery name of Dead Men's Shoes, proved farther off than we expected, so that we didn't come to it till toward the middle of the next afternoon, an afternoon of the most innocent gold that has ever thrown its soft radiance over an earth inhabited for the most part by ruffians and scoundrels. We soon found that we were not alone in the cave.

"She's changed her paint," said Tom, at my elbow. And, looking round, I saw that our rakish schooner with the black hull was now white as a dove; and, in that soft golden water, hardly a foot and a half deep, five shadowy young sharks floated, with outstretched fins like huge bats. Our engineer, who was already wading fearlessly in the water, beautifully naked, "shooed" them off like chickens. But it was soon to be evident that more dangerous foes waited for us on the shore.

Yet there was seemingly nothing there but a pile of sponges, and a few black men. The Susan B. had changed her color, it was true, but she was a well-known sponger, and I noticed no one that I recognised.

There was one foolish fellow that reminded me of my shackly deckhand, whom I had always thought out of his mind, standing there on his head on the rocks, and waving his legs to attract attention.

"Why! There's Silly Theodore," called out the captain.

"I'm going ashore," I said.

"I'm going with you too," said the captain. "But look after your guns. There's going to be something doing—quiet as it looks."

So we rowed ashore, and there was Theodore capering in front of a pile of sponges, but no other face that I knew. But there were seven or eight negroes whose looks I took no great liking to.

"Like some fancy sponges to send home?" said one of these, coming up to me. "Cost you five times as much in Nassau."

"Certainly I'd like a few sponges," I said.

And then Theodore came up to me, looking as though he had lost his mind over the rather fancy silk tie I happened to be wearing.

"Give me dat!" he said, touching it, like a crazy man.

Events prove that the sucking fish is quite necessary, as mascots are in great demand

LESSON FOR AUGUST 10

WINNING OTHERS TO CHRIST.

LESSON TEXT—Acts 16:9-15; James 5: 19, 20.

GOLDEN TEXT—Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth.—Acts 1:8.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Luke 19:1-10; John 3:1-15; Acts 20:17-21; 26:30, 31.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Helping others to know Jesus (Acts 16:9-15).

JUNIOR TOPIC—Telling our friends about Jesus (John 1:40-46).

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC — Witnessing for Christ.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—Personal evangelism the duty and privilege of all Christians.

I. Paul Called to Macedonia (Acts 16:9-12).

The inclination of Paul and his companion was to tarry in the province of Asia, preaching the Word, but they were hurried along against their inclination. Realising that the Spirit knew best they obeyed. In the guidance of the Spirit we find him just as active and as faithful in closing doors as in opening them. Those who are disposed to do the will of God should heed this fact. Being hemmed in on all sides, Paul saw in a vision a man of Macedonia pleading for help. He now saw clearly the mystery of the closed doors about him. As soon as the divine way was known they rendered immediate obedience. As true servants of God they did not question his wisdom nor delay action. Christ, the Divine servant, is the pattern of obedience for all time.

II. Paul Winning Lydia to Christ (Acts 16:13-15).

With Paul as leader, the missionaries went to Philippi where they spent several days studying the conditions there. The Jewish element in the city was very insignificant, as they could not afford a synagogue, making it necessary for the devout people to frequent the river side for worship. To this humble gathering Paul came and preached to the women gathered there. A certain woman by Thyatira, a proselyte, believed in his message and was baptized. The work of the Lord here had a very humble beginning, but it was destined to transform all Europe and the world. Lydia's is a typical conversion, therefore it is worthy to note—

1. Her attendance at the place of prayer (v. 13).

2. She listened to the preaching of the Word of God (vv. 12-14).

3. Her heart was opened by the Lord (v. 14).

4. She was baptized (v. 15).

5. Her household believed (v. 15).

III. The Blessed Issue of Soul-Winning (James 5:19, 20).

The business of soul-saving is the most important in which a human being can engage. Anyone who has been saved can point lost souls to the Savior. Christ came to save the lost (Luke 19:10). It is the blessed privilege of all Christians to labor together with God in rescuing the perishing. The result of soul-saving is twofold:

1. It saves souls from death (v. 20). Meditation upon the three words "saves," "soul," "death," will make us conscious of the tremendous importance of soul-saving. We must realize the value of the souls before we can give ourselves to the work of saving them. A soul is of more value than the whole world (Matt. 16:26). God valued souls so much that he gave Jesus to die for them (John 3:16).

2. "Hides a multitude of sins" (v. 20). God's way of hiding sin is to save men from it. Every sinner has a multitude of sins, therefore every soul saved hides that multitude of sins. When sins are thus hidden they are out of God's sight forever. "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us." (Psalms 103:12). He remembers our sins against us no more. (Isa. 43:25.)

Open to the Light.

The heart of a true Christian appears like such a little white flower as we see in the spring of the year; low and humble on the ground; opening its bosom to receive the pleasant beams of the sun's glory; rejoicing as it were in a calm rapture; diffusing around a sweet fragrance; standing peacefully and lovingly in the midst of other flowers round about; all in like manner opening their bosoms to drink in the light of the sun.—Jonathan Edwards.

What Trial Is.

That which purifies us is trial, and trial is by what is contrary.—John Milton.

Despondency and Hope.

Despondency is ingratitude—hope is God's worship.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Growth.

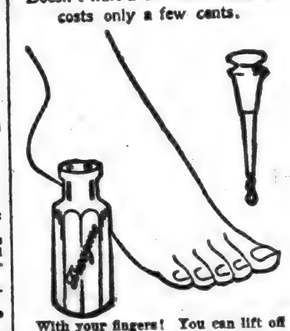
To become like Christ is the only thing in the world worth caring for, the thing before which every ambition of man is folly, and all lower achievements vain. . . . Reflect the character of Christ and you will become like Christ.—Henry Drummond.

What Heaven Is Like.

Heaven is where love is, and where love is there heaven is. Our homes and the homes of our neighbors should give to each of us some idea of what the real heaven is like.

Lift off Corns!

Doesn't hurt a bit and Freezone costs only a few cents.



With your fingers! You can lift off any hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the hard skin calluses from bottom of feet.

A tiny bottle of "Freezone" costs little at any drug store; apply a few drops upon the corn or callus. Instantly it stops hurting, then shortly you lift that bothersome corn or callus right off, root and all, without one bit of pain or soreness. Truly! No humbug!

Self-Announced.

A story told by Bishop Greer illustrates the plain nature of the man. On an occasion when he was to confirm a class a carriage was sent for him in charge of an English coachman who had been imported by a wealthy American. Bishop Greer walked unaccompanied and in non-clerical dress from his front door to the carriage and entered it—but the driver did not move his horses. After waiting for a moment the bishop asked the man why he did not drive on.

"I'm waiting for the lord bishop of New York, sir," the proper person replied.

"Well," said the bishop, "I'm it. Drive on."—Christian Register.

PACKERS UNDER FEDERAL FIRE

"Big Five" Is Target of United States Attorney General Palmer.

PROSECUTION SET IN MOTION

Charges Clear Violation of Antitrust Law—Hoarding Defined as Crime and Such Stocks May Be Confiscated—Wilson Speaks Friday.

Washington, Aug. 7.—Developments in the government's drive on the high cost of living popped out so fast that they tumbled over one another.

Attorney General Palmer announced the bringing of antitrust suits against the five great packing concerns—Armour, Swift, Wilson, Morris and Cudahy.

At the same time the attorney general ordered all agents of the department of justice to arrest profiteers, hoarders and other contributors to soaring food costs. The first arrests came in Pittsburgh where a concern was wholesaling sugar at 14 cents a pound.

Food hoards may be confiscated by the government.

President Wilson declined a suggestion of Republican Leader Mondell in the house that he postpone his address to congress on the high cost of living from Friday to next Tuesday. The president went ahead with plans to speak at four o'clock Friday afternoon.

Intermingled with the cost of living situation was the decision of the senate interstate commerce committee to notify the president that it disagrees with his suggestion for a special wage board to deal with railway employees' demands. The committee holds the president has sufficient authority already to deal with the situation.

Palmer to Prosecute Packers.

Antitrust suits against the five big meat packers will be instituted immediately by the department of justice.

Attorney General Palmer announced that the evidence before the federal trade commission and committees of congress indicated "a clear violation of the antitrust laws," and that he had ordered "prompt action accordingly."

Isidor J. Kresel of the New York law firm of Jerome, Rand & Kresel will have charge of the case, and Mr. Palmer said he would be given such assistance by the department of justice "as the case seems to warrant."

Mr. Palmer's announcement follows:

"The department of justice has made a careful review of the evidence developed by the investigation into the combination of packers, both by the federal trade commission and the hearings before the committees of congress. This review has been made by lawyers specially retained for the purpose, and their report is now in hand. I am satisfied that the evidence adduced indicates a clear violation of the antitrust laws, and prompt action will be taken accordingly.

"Further proceedings, while under the immediate direction of the department of justice, will be in charge of Isidor J. Kresel of the law firm of Jerome, Rand & Kresel of New York, who will be given such assistance as the case seems to warrant."

Names the Companies.

By "combination of packers" Mr. Palmer said he meant Swift & Co., Armour & Co., Morris & Co., Cudahy Packing company and Wilson & Co. He declined to say whether criminal or civil suits would be instituted, but said the law made provision for both. He would not say in what jurisdiction the suits would be brought.

Mr. Kresel, the man who will be in direct charge of the prosecutions against the packers, headed the committee which examined the evidence submitted. He has had wide experience in handling prosecutions, it was said, both as assistant to District Attorney Jerome of New York and in private practice. Mr. Palmer said he had used Mr. Kresel in some of the most intricate and exacting work connected with the office of alien property custodian, where it was essential to show capabilities in sifting evidence.

All district attorneys in the United States were ordered by Attorney General Palmer to proceed immediately in the prosecution of all persons guilty of hoarding foodstuffs and to libel the foodstuffs for condemnation.

"Conditions," said Mr. Palmer's telegram to the attorneys, "require a country-wide campaign against hoarders and profiteers, and I desire the department of justice to use every legal means available to put an end to these activities.

"This is the most important business before the country today. I propose to have the law enforcement machinery of the government sidetrack everything for this job.

"The food control act, which is still in force, in section 6, makes hoarding of necessaries as therein defined a crime, and section 7 provides that whenever necessaries shall be hoarded they may be proceeded against by process of libel for condemnation."

Mr. Palmer believes that profiteering also can be reached by the government, although he has said there was no way in which to punish directly a man guilty of extortion in prices. He said he was not ready to discuss what action he proposed to take and declined to indicate whether it would be through new legislation or extra legal means.

REAFFIRM OPEN DOOR

Japan's Shantung Demand Not Approved by America.

Lansing Tells Senate Committee Ishii Agreement Recommitted Japan to Policy.

Washington, Aug. 7.—Secretary Lansing told the senate foreign relations committee that the original American plan for a League of Nations was "not pressed" at Versailles and was never presented to the full peace conference.

Senator Johnson asked if the president's fourteen points were considered.

"I don't think they were discussed," said Mr. Lansing.

"Not discussed at all?" asked Senator Johnson.

"No, we followed the terms of the armistice largely."

"Was there any discussion of insistence upon the fourteen points?"

"I don't recall any."

Senator Johnson asked on what general plan the peace conference worked in formulating the treaty.

Secretary Lansing said they worked on "common sense and general principles, with an avoidance of policy and expediency."

"And not on the fourteen points?" asked Senator Johnson.

"Yes, I consider them common sense," replied Mr. Lansing.

"And did you accomplish your purpose to frame the treaty around them?"

"Yes, substantially; so far as it was possible to do so with 28 nations around the table."

The plan now embodied in the league covenant, Mr. Lansing said he thought was a "decided improvement" on the American plan. He could not go into details because he was not a member of the commission which drafted the covenant.

When the Lansing-Ishii agreement was made, Mr. Lansing said, the department knew of Japan's demands upon China, but the demands did not enter into the discussion.

"At no time was it understood that the Lansing-Ishii agreement was an indorsement of Japan's 21 demands?" asked Senator Borah.

"Absolutely not," said Mr. Lansing. "We were opposed to them."

"And the agreement was not for enforcement of the secret agreement regarding Shantung?"

"No."

"And if you had known of those secret agreements would you have likely entered into the agreement with Viscount Ishii?"

"Yes, I think so," Mr. Lansing replied. "I think I can say that one of the very reasons for the Lansing-Ishii agreement was to secure from Japan a redeclaration of the open-door policy, and this she gave."

Washington, Aug. 7.—Representatives of 14 different railroad unions now have joined in a communication to Director General Hines asking immediate increase in wages. So far as known this is the first instance on record in which all the railroad unions, representing 2,000,000 employees, have acted as a unit. Mr. Hines said he had not had time to analyze the communication, but it seemed a formal presentation of wage demands already made public.

ROUMANIA ASKS HUNGARY SPOILS

Ultimatum Demands Half of Harvest, Live Stock, Machinery and Rail Supplies.

NEW GOVERNMENT MAY FAIL

Allies Asked to Send Troops—Roumanians Refuse to Accept Orders From Entente — Budapest Shelled by Invaders.

Paris, Aug. 7.—The Roumanians, after occupying Budapest, have served an ultimatum on the Hungarian government, according to messages reaching the peace conference. The ultimatum, it is stated, makes demands far in excess of the armistice terms.

It is greatly feared in conference circles that the Roumanian action will result in the overthrow of the new Hungarian government.

French circles state that the Roumanian army is not under the command of Marshal Foch, the allies' commander in chief, the Roumanian general refusing to accept orders from the French. The Roumanians have not been actively participating in the peace conference since Premier Bratiano, some time ago, took exception to the decision of the conference upon the principle guaranteeing the rights of minorities within national borders.

Wants Beasts and Machinery.

In their ultimatum the Roumanians demand the reduction of the Hungarian army to 15,000 men and the surrender of 50 per cent of the harvest, animals and farm machinery and 50 per cent of the railway supplies.

The ultimatum, which was forwarded to Paris by Lieutenant Colonel Romanelli of the allies' military mission, and Col. W. B. Causey, U. S. A. of the relief administration now in Budapest, also demands a large proportion of the Danube shipping and equipment and supplies for an army of 800,000 men, together with rations for the Roumanian forces pending a peace settlement.

Ask Allies to Send Regiments.

The new Hungarian government through Lieutenant Colonel Romanelli, chief of the Italian mission in Budapest, has sent to Premier Clemenceau, as president of the peace conference, a communication, saying it is willing to observe the terms of an armistice and asking that each of the great powers send a regiment to Budapest.

British monitors in the Danube, it is believed, will be sent to Budapest to steady the situation.

Intransigeant's Geneva correspondent says that according to a Bukharest dispatch King Ferdinand of Roumania is with his army in Hungary.

A wireless dispatch from Budapest reports that the city was bombarded before the Roumanians occupied it. Twenty-one shells were fired, one house being hit. There were many arrests at Budapest. All those arrested shown to have been connected with the soviet system were imprisoned.

British troops are on their way to Budapest for the purpose of participating in the occupation of the city with the Roumanians.

SUGAR MEN ARE ARRESTED

Warrants Issued in Pittsburgh for Three Representatives of a Chicago Concern.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 7.—Warrants were issued for the arrest of three officers of the Pittsburgh branch of the Central Sugar company of Chicago, charged with profiteering.

The informations, which were sworn to by Special Agent Edgar J. Speer of the department of justice, charged that the company during the last two weeks sold sugar at 14 cents a pound wholesale.

The officers named in the informations are: George P. Leinberg, manager, and George L. Dowd and J. S. Shaffer, assistants.

According to Mr. Speer, who has been investigating food prices here, the Central Sugar company operates exclusively in Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio and Wisconsin.

ENORMOUS LOSS IN THRESHING

Million Bushels of Grain Lost Each Year Because of Inefficient Methods.

KEEP MACHINES IN REPAIR

Separators Out of Adjustment Are Cause of Greatest Trouble—Thresherman Should Study Manufacturer's Instructions.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Every important grain state has been losing over a million bushels of grain each year because of inefficient threshing methods, declare investigators of the United States department of agriculture. The government, by bringing this enormous loss to the attention of farmers and threshermen and showing them how to avoid it, saved 22,000,000 bushels of grain in the 21 states in which the educational work was carried on last year.

When an average of eight bushels of grain is lost on every farm in the United States at threshing time every year, that loss begins to have a personal meaning. With wheat worth $2.26, it is well worth while to prevent that loss, if possible. And it is entirely possible. The chief source of loss is the inefficient operation of threshing machines.

Any standard threshing machine will do satisfactory work if kept in repair and operated intelligently. If the operator knows his machine, and sees that it is properly adjusted and operated, grain will come through clean and losses will be small. The farmer should know enough about the general operation of a threshing machine to detect poor work, which means a direct loss to him.

Adjust Separator Carefully.

To do good work the separator must be set level, both crosswise and lengthwise, and then carefully adjusted to the particular job at hand. The greater part of the separation is done in the cylinder and immediately after the grain passes over it. If cracked grains are frequent there may be too much

Large pile shows grain wasted while threshing 2½ bushels—8 pints in this instance. Small pile shows grain wasted after adjustments had been made to machine—less than 1 pint. The unnecessary loss of 7 pints occurred every two minutes the separator was in operation. This means that 4½ per cent of the grain was lost.

and play of the cylinder, the speed may be too high, or the concaves may be set too high. The teeth may be crooked or too high and not centered. Too rapid speed will also crack grain. Dry grain demands a lower speed of the cylinder.

Unthreshed heads are often found in the tailings. This results from missing or broken teeth, or teeth too far apart, not centered, or badly worn; concave set too low, or concave with not enough teeth. The speed of the cylinder also causes many unthreshed heads. Damp, unripe or moldy grain requires more than normal speed of the cylinder to thresh it out well.

Operator Should Know Machine.

Grain is lost through the improper adjustment of other parts of the separator as well as the cylinder, so it is evident that the operator must be thoroughly familiar with the entire machine. It may not be possible to save all the grain now lost, but the careless operator who does not know how to adjust the different parts of his machine will waste a great amount unnecessarily. He will surely have to make frequent stops for adjustment. Every time a machine stops the whole crew must be idle until it starts again—a loss of time to everybody concerned.

Manufacturers furnish instruction books on the care and operation of their threshing machine. They have spent years in experimenting, and they know how their machines should be run to secure the most satisfactory results. A great deal of the trouble experienced by the thresherman is due to his disregard of or even neglect to read the manufacturers' instructions.

There are other ways in which grain can be saved, but the proper operation of the separator is the most important. Efficient operation of the threshing machine should interest both thresherman and farmers.

CHECK TOMATO LEAF BLIGHT BY SPRAYING

As Many as Seven Applications Made in West Virginia.

Color and Solidity of Fruit Was Improved and 39 Per Cent Increase in Yield Secured—Bordeaux Soap Mixture Used.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"I wouldn't grow tomatoes in a blight infested region without spraying," says S. L. Dodd, Jr., extension pathologist for the United States department of agriculture and West Virginia agricultural experiment station, who sprayed tomatoes for the control of blight in six counties of West Virginia in 1918. Thorough spraying was the keynote of his success. He made six, and in some fields seven applications, using spray mixture at the rate of 150 gallons an acre for mature plants. Spraying improved color and solidity of fruit, reduced rot and sunscald, and increased the yield of ripe fruit 39 per cent, and of both green and ripe fruit 55 per cent.

A small knapsack compressed-air sprayer was used in this work. Such sprayers are light, easy to operate, and produce a fine misty spray. Several different kinds, varying somewhat in shape and construction, but built on the compressed-air principle, are now offered for sale.

The spray formula used was 5-5-3-50 Bordeaux soap mixture, composed of five pounds of copper sulphate, five pounds stone lime, three pounds resin fish oil soap, and fifty gallons of water.

To reduce the work of preparing spray mixtures the following stock solutions were made: Five pounds of copper sulphate (blue stone) was dissolved by suspending it in a wooden vessel containing five gallons of water. Copper sulphate corrodes iron and tin. Five pounds of stone lime (quick-lime) was slaked in another vessel by slowly adding water at first and later increasing the volume to five gallons. Three pounds of resin fish oil soap was diluted in a third vessel by stirring it in hot water until thin and increasing the volume to five gallons by adding water of ordinary temperature.

These stock solutions keep indefinitely if not mixed or weakened by rain, but the lime should be covered to prevent drying out and air-slaking. The level of the liquid when freshly made and after each spray period should be marked on each vessel, and water added when needed to restore loss by evaporation.

Ten gallons of spray mixture are prepared by taking one gallon of each freshly stirred stock solution and increasing it to three and one-third gallons by adding water, and by pouring together and stirring the three diluted solutions thus made. The resulting mixture is ready for use as soon as strained and should be used while fresh, as it deteriorates by standing.

CARE OF HORSES' SHOULDERS

Prevent Accumulation of Dirt and Dandruff on Collars, Especially If Soreness Develops.

Do not use sweat pads. Keep collars clean of dandruff and dirt, especially if soreness develops. Sponge the shoulders of work horses with cold water at night after work. If they are sweaty at noon, sponge at noon also. Care should be taken in fitting collars on work horses. Many collars are too big or too loose. If the withers are fat or especially full, the fitting of collars will need extra care.—Ohio State University.

Probably more little chickens are killed by gapes than by any other one disease. On nearly every farm at least a few chickens die every spring of this trouble, and on many farms the loss is so great as to discourage the keeping of poultry.

BRITAIN IN ROW WITH ARGENTINA

Purchase of German Ship During the War Cause of Friction

AMBASSADORS TO LEAVE

Retirement of Both Ministers Due to Sale of Steamer Which England Refuses to Recognize—Warship Appears Off River Platte.

Buenos Aires, Argentina, Aug. 6.—Diplomatic relations between Great Britain and Argentina are delicate as a result of the purchase by Argentina of the German steamship Bahia Blanca, according to La Nacion. In today's edition the newspaper will say:

"Regarding rumors which from the beginning have been founded on more than supposition, we have received versions the gravity of which are self-evident and according to which the return to London of Sir Reginald Tower, British minister to Argentina, and the departure of Francisco Alvarez de Toledo, Argentine minister to England, from London are not disconnected. On the contrary, it appears the retirement of both ministers is traceable to the purchase by Argentina of the steamer Bahia Blanca from the Germans, which purchase the British government refused to recognize.

Argentine Envoy Not Received.

"Following this refusal Argentine attempted to solve the difficulty by appointing a minister at London—Senor Toledo, who as minister of marine, handled the negotiations for the purchase of the ship. He presented his credentials to the British foreign office some time ago but a considerable period has elapsed without King George receiving him. It is reported there is no probability of his reception in the near future. It appears this might have been expected, as the British government never stated that Senor Toledo was persona grata.

"It will be remembered the Argentine government has waited a long time for response to its inquiry as to the purchase of the Bahia Blanca and there now appears reasons for believing that Sir Reginald's favorable intimations relative to the deal were solely his personal impression."

Before Senor Toledo sailed for London it was announced he would go on the Bahia Blanca. A day or two later, however, a British cruiser took up a position off the River Platte. Senor Toledo subsequently went to London on a regular liner.

ARMY FOOD PRICES TOO HIGH

Committee of Post Office Department Seeks to Lower Figures Announced by War Department.

Washington, Aug. 6.—The prices announced last week by the war department at which army surplus foods may be purchased by the public are too high, in the opinion of the committee of the post office department charged with the distribution of the foods. This committee, headed by Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Blakeslee, will confer with officials of the war department with a view of obtaining a revision downward of the schedule, it was announced at the post office department. It is felt by post office officials that when the cost of distributing the surplus foods through the postal service has been added to the prices quoted by the war department no saving will be made.

President Issues Formal Statement on Eastern Question.

Tokyo Agreed to Return Shantung to China, Retaining German Privileges, Says Wilson.

Washington, Aug. 7.—President Wilson issued a formal statement saying the "frank statement" made by Viscount Uchida as to Japan's policy regarding Shantung "ought to serve to remove many of the misunderstandings which had begun to accumulate about this question."

References in the Uchida statement as to the agreement between Japan and China in 1915 "might be misleading," the president said, "if not commented upon in the light of what occurred in Paris."

When the question of disposal of Shantung was definitely decided on at Paris, President Wilson said the Japanese delegation, in reply to a question from him, said:

"'The policy of Japan is to hand back the Shantung peninsula in full sovereignty to China, retaining only the economic privileges granted to Germany and the right to establish a settlement under the usual conditions at Tsing-Tao.'"

ORDERED TO FURNISH POWER

Illinois Public Utilities Commision Takes A Hand in the A. E. & C. Strike.

Chicago, Aug. 7.—The state public utilities commission ordered the Aurora, Elgin & Chicago electric railroad to start operating its power plant immediately and supply towns along the road with power to operate their electric light plants and water pumping stations. The unions were requested to furnish a sufficient number of men to run the machinery. The strike of the 600 employees will not be affected by this decision.

FIRING SQUAD FOR THE PROFITEERS

Labor Leader Stone Sees That as Possible Way to Cut Living Cost.

PLUMB PLAN BILL EXPLAINED

House Interstate Commerce Committee Told Men Have Made No Strike Threats, Nor Demands for Increase—Ask Lower Prices.

Washington, Aug. 7.—Organized labor has no concrete suggestion for reducing the cost of living, but it may later advocate a firing squad for profiteers, Warren S. Stone, head of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, told the house interstate commerce committee.

Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, told the committee that labor would not be disappointed if it failed to have its railroad plan adopted immediately.

It would simply gird itself for the educating of the people to the point at which congress would be sufficiently impressed.

Mr. Morrison said he believed that the Plumb plan would be so satisfactory that there would be no occasion for railroad employees to strike.

"The railroads under this plan," he said, "will be run without profit, with wage-earners and public getting all the benefit, the public a lower rate and the employees a reasonable compensation."

Questioned by Chairman Esch after he had presented his formal statement, Mr. Stone said the railway brotherhoods were entirely opposed to return of the roads to the old system of control. In the event congress rejected the Plumb plan, it would be the policy of labor to create enough sentiment out of congress to force its adoption.

Denies Any Strike Threat.

"We have not and do not make any strike threats," he said. "We have not even demanded an increase in wages, preferring a reduction in the cost of living.

"I do not believe any labor organization will strike simply to force the Plumb plan," Mr. Stone continued. "I think some organizations will strike unless something is done immediately to raise wages or cut down living cost. When you reduce the latter you solve the entire problem of industrial unrest."

When Mr. Stone was asked particularly concerning reported statements from union leaders that they would "sew up the railroads," he said:

"It is the rankest kind of nonsense to say they will not run if this plan fails of adoption. We know they will run; the people must live and railroads are essential to their welfare."

He expressed the opinion that many railroads would go into bankruptcy if turned back to private ownership.

Discussing profiteering, Mr. Stone said that from 18 to 20 car loads of fruits and vegetables were dumped at Cleveland every day simply in order to keep up prices.

Representative Winslow wanted to know what Mr. Stone thought congress should have done.

"Congress could have seen what was coming months ago," the witness replied. "Congress was so busy playing politics it could not think of the common people. If there were no laws to deal with the problem, laws should have been passed."

Asked by Chairman Esch if he had any concrete suggestions, Mr. Stone replied:

"I think we might possibly offer many suggestions. We haven't them in concrete form at this time. It might be that before we get through we would advocate a firing squad for some people."

"People Will Not Starve."

Mr. Stone added that unless congress found a solution of the high cost of living problem within a few months America would see "its very worst period."

"The people are not going to starve," said he. "They are going to die fighting."

Answering Representative Sanders of Indiana, Mr. Stone said the time was coming when the price of coal would be fixed by the government, "so some men won't get rich while others freeze."

Asserting that American democracy was controlled by an autocracy in industry, Mr. Stone insisted there could be no solution and no lowering of the cost of living so long as consumers had to pay exorbitant profits on the necessaries of life.

Labor's belief in the Sims bill embodying the railroad employees' plan for the solution of the railroad problem was asserted by Mr. Stone to be profound. The workers, he said, had raised the banner of democracy and advanced to "a new crusade with the faith of the Pilgrims."

"At the request of these organizations the Sims bill is now before you," said Mr. Stone. "I speak as the voice of these 2,000,000 men, delegated by them to announce to this committee and to the people of this country that they are supporting this measure with all the strength and all the unity of purpose that can move so large a body of citizens.

"Joined with us and represented by Mr. Morrison is the American Federation of Labor, adding three and a half million men to that body of railway employees who instituted this movement.

"In the industrial development of this country great organizations of capital appeared as employers. Individual workers, following the example set by capital, also organized. Capitalistic organization has been to hold and to keep the profits of industry. The strength of the labor unions has been exerted to wrest from capital a larger share of the profits.

Nature of Conflict Changed.

"Thus there has been a perpetual struggle. At times, both sides could ignore the needs of the public. Now the growth of labor organizations has brought into their ranks a great mass of the consumers. The extension of industry has changed the nature of the struggle.

"Whatever the worker receives in wages he must spend for the necessaries of life. The cost of his living is determined by the sum he earns plus the profit he is charged on his own labor. So long as consumers are forced to pay profits on their own earnings to a third interest there is no solution of the industrial problem.

"This third interest absolutely dominates the management of industry. It fixes wages and controls working conditions. It fixes the prices of commodities, without regard to the needs of society or the necessities of producers and consumers.

"We have a democratic form of government, but an autocratic control of industry. We exist under government, but by industry we live. Under such a system the majority of a democracy can through their government enjoy only such rights and privileges as an autocracy in industry permits them to receive. This country was peopled by a race who sought religious freedom. It was established by their descendants as a land of political freedom. We now demand that it become the home of industrial freedom."

WOULD PUNISH KAISER

Danger of Escape Leads Lansing to Object to Military Trial.

Secretary of State Tells Senate Committee Proof of Guilt Would Be Doubtful.

Washington, Aug. 7.—The propriety of trying the former German emperor was discussed at some length by Secretary Lansing in testimony before the senate foreign relations committee. He said the American commissioners dealing with the question were unanimous in the opinion that a legal trial could not be had.

"Will there be a trial?" asked Senator Borah.

"I didn't say," the secretary smilingly replied.

Some senators suggested that the former emperor should be required to surrender to a military tribunal, as Napoleon did, for trial under general court-martial authority.

"That was the report of the commission with which the United States disagreed," said Mr. Lansing. "It seemed to me that in such a proceeding there would be grave doubt whether the guilt of the defendant could be established, and it might let him off free."

London, Aug. 7.—The allies have not altered their decision to hold the trial of the former German emperor in London, Andrew Boner Law, government leader, announced in the house of commons. He said no action in the matter could be taken until the German peace treaty is ratified.

IF THIN AND NERVOUS, TRY PHOSPHATE

Nothing Like Plain Nitro-Phosphate to Put on Firm, Healthy Flesh and to Increase Strength, Vigor and Nerve Force.

When one stops to consider the host of this people who are searching continually for some method by which they may increase their flesh to normal proportions by the filling out of ugly hollows, the rounding off of protruding angles with the attendant bloom of health and attractiveness, it is no wonder that many and varied suggestions along this line appear from time to time in public print.

While excessive thinness might be attributed to various and subtle causes in different individuals it is a well-known fact that the lack of sufficient phosphorous in the human system is very largely responsible for this condition. Experiments on humans and animals by many scientists have demonstrated beyond question of doubt that a body deficient in phosphorous becomes nervous, sickly and thin. A noted author and professor in his book, "Chemistry and Food Nutrition," published in 1918, says: " " " that the amount of phosphorous required for the normal nutrition of man is seriously underestimated in many of our standard text books."

It seems to be well established that this deficiency in phosphorous may now be met by the use of an organic phosphate known throughout English speaking countries as Nitro-Phosphate. Through the assimilation of this phosphate by the nerve tissue the phosphoric content when absorbed in the amount normally required by nature soon produces a welcome change in our body and mind. Nerve tension disappears, vigor and strength, replace weakness and lack of energy, and the whole body soon loses its ugly hollows and abrupt angles, becoming envisaged in a glow of perfect health and beauty and the will and strength to be up and doing.

CAUTION:—While Nitro-Phosphate is unsurpassed for the relief of nervousness, general debility, etc., those taking it who do not desire to put on flesh should use extra care in avoiding fat-producing foods.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

AFRICAN PORCUPINE.

"When I lived in Canada," said the Canadian porcupine, "I was perfectly happy. Of course if I am helping the zoo along and being of great interest, I do not mind, but I do not care for zoo life as I do for a life of freedom.

"Ah, what wanderings through the woods I used to have," the Canadian porcupine continued. "I used to go miles and miles along through dark low fir tree forests. I used to live so happily in the woods where people so seldom came.

"And in the springtime when fishing parties would camp in the woods, if a dog bothered me I would soon punish him.

"It is not true that I throw my quills, but if a dog barked at me and tried to fight me—well, he got punished and you know how!

"I don't like these untrue stories to get around that I throw my quills as the wind throws leaves around. I don't do that, but I can give away some of my quills if I am frightened or annoyed. That is perfectly true.

"In Canada, where there is beautiful country and where the forests are very wonderful I think a porcupine leads a very happy life. Such a free, wild life, no bothersome society around one all the time.

"Here in the zoo folks come and talk and the animals chatter and make such a fuss. I like a life which isn't sociable, a wooded life, and I'm not going to pretend I like what I don't."

Now the Canadian porcupine said all this to no one in particular, but the speech was heard, just the same, by a good many of the animals, some of the visitors, boys and girls and by the keeper.

"That is perfectly true," said the keeper, and he told those who hadn't been able to understand, just what it was the porcupine had said.

"But I think the African porcupine is going to say something, too," said the keeper. "He will have a different story to tell. We must hear his story, too."

Such a Free, Wild Life.

So everyone listened to the story the African porcupine had to tell; it was a little story of his own ideas and so forth.

"That Canadian porcupine," said the African porcupine to himself, "is very fussy.

"He doesn't care for the zoo. He says it is so very fine where he comes from up in Canada that he is very homesick. Now, I am not so fussy.

"My home is in Africa, as anyone might guess or know or imagine because my name tells a good deal. At least it tells two important things.

"The first one is that it tells that I come from Africa or that I am African, which is the same thing, and the second important thing that my name tells is that I am a porcupine.

"They name me well—the African porcupine. It's a good name, a good, sensible name, and it tells folks what I am and how I look, and quite a lot about me.

"Now, little girls and little boys are often so foolishly named. If they were just called 'North American tall thin boy', or 'South American short fat girl', it would be so much easier.

"How is one to know anything from the name of Sally, or Susie, or Kitty, or Jane, or Donald, or John, or James and Jack? When one speaks of the African porcupine one knows what is being spoken about, but when anyone speaks of a friend named Jack I have no idea!

"They may be speaking of a little thin girl with golden curls and blue eyes or they may be speaking of a very tall girl with black hair and brown eyes. Or they may be speaking of a fat boy with a red tie or a thin boy who is very, very tall and who has freckles.

"Yes, I have the right sort of a name, I have, and I'm not in the least fussy. I don't mind it here in the zoo; in fact I like it, and I don't miss Africa in the least, not in the least."

But the Canadian porcupine who heard this said: "Africa isn't Canada, though, and I do miss Canada and its woods."

MIGHT BE "PUSSY'S" COUSIN

Though Civet Cat Makes Its Home in the Open, and Is Larger Than House Pet.

Ever meet a bassarisk?

No, not a basilisk; that is something different. A bassarisk is a cacomistle.

But the animal is better known as the "civet cat"—though why so called nobody knows, inasmuch as it is not a civet and not a cat.

It is a strange little creature, related to the raccoon, with a very long bushy tail ringed in black and white. Sometimes it is called a "ring-tailed cat" and sometimes a "cat squirrel"—the latter designation bestowed on account of its squirrel-like habit of climbing trees and nesting in hollow branches.

Like a cat, it catches rats, mice and small birds. It is about 16 inches long, not counting the tail, which measures another 16 inches. In color it is brownish gray. It is a night prowler, like a cat, and often makes its home in outbuildings and deserted ranch houses.

The civet cat ranges from Mexico and Texas to California and as far north as southern Oregon. Occasionally it is kept in captivity, making an attractive and interesting pet.

REALLY OF ENGLISH ORIGIN

Punishment by Tarring and Feathering First Instituted by King Richard Many Centuries Ago.

Throughout the English-speaking world there seems to be a widespread impression that the punishment of tar and feathers is something peculiarly American and that the practice originated with and is confined to mobs in the wilder or more remote sections of the United States. But the practice did not begin in America and is, in fact, English in origin.

The first known use of tar and feathers was in the British navy 730 years ago. It is on record that in 1189 Richard of the Lion Heart, when about to start on the Third crusade, ordered that such of his sailors as were found guilty of theft should be covered with "boiling pitch" and feathers or down be then strewn upon them.

This ancient employment of boiling pitch of course meant death, while the modern application of pitch heated only enough to run and smear is not necessarily fatal. The modern American practice is, therefore, a more merciful adaptation of an ancient British substitute for the usual hanging of a thief.

All Should Toil.

Ideal social progress requires the productive activity of every human capable of adding to the general total. This is Utopian. It ought not to be so much of a dream, but it will be what it is so long as human nature remains what it is. Men differ so much. Some acquire laziness and some are born lazy. But the results are the same. You even have aristocratic loafers who pull all sorts of hereditary stuff in make-believe attempts at superiority. They would have you subsidize them, and guarantee their future against want and work. It's all bosh. They have no claim upon humanity other than a right to an opportunity to make good in the world. Instead of an easy time they need the prod of necessity. The lazy few, be they poor or rich, are the drones of society.—Exchange.

Bird Dresses in Spanish Style.

In his distinguishing black on the forehead and yellow on the throat, the Maryland yellow-throat is one of the most beautifully marked of any member of his tribe and gives an appearance of Spanish grandeur, says the American Forestry association of Washington. There is no mistaking the song of this bird, and it is rendered in a variety of ways which make it sound like any one of the following: "Which-is-it? which-is-it?" or "What-a-pity, what-a-pity;" or "Which-way-sir? which-way-sir?" or "I-beseech-you, I-beseech-you;" or "Witchery, witchery, witchery." The bird is particularly fond of thickets by the side of running water.

A Food Luxury.

Large jars of baked clay were used by the ancient Romans as cages for dormice.

Why dormice?

To eat, of course. Dormice were esteemed a great delicacy by epicures in those days, and were kept in the jars while being fattened for the table.

If a theater party was in contemplation after dining—meaning a visit to the amphitheater or circus—the host, it may be supposed, had already bought the tickets. But they were not of pasteboard, with coupons. They were made of baked clay and stamped with letters or numbers referring to the position of the seat.

Unexpected Testimony.

"Ma wants two pounds of butter exactly like what you sent up last. If it ain't exactly like that she won't take it," said a small boy, much out of breath. The grocer turned to his numerous customers and remarked blandly: "Some people in my business don't like customers who are particular, but I do. It's my delight to serve them and get them what they want. I will attend to you in a moment, little boy." "Be sure and get the same kind," said the small boy. "A lot of pa's relatives are visiting our house, and ma doesn't want 'em to come again!"

Inquirer Might Be Excused for Thinking Old Lady Was Gone Beyond Recall.

Concerning the cheese that made Limburg famous, a bulletin of the National Geographic society quotes a communication from William Wisner Chapin as follows:

"Limburg is sometimes called the garden of Holland. Of the celebrated relish known as Limburger cheese it has long been a query how an article of food made from delicious material and considered such a delicacy can possess so obnoxious an odor and still retain its self-respect. This peculiarity has made Limburger cheese responsible for many amusing incidents.

"A Dutch-American rural citizen once went to town to make some purchases, among which was some of this odoriferous commodity. For convenience he placed it in a long box in the wagon behind the seat. Happening to stop on the road, an inquisitive acquaintance approached and asked what the box contained.

"In answer he raised the lid and replied, 'I have my grandmother.'

"'Well,' rejoined the inquirer, as he caught a whiff of the contents, 'she's not in a trance.'"

FUNERAL A PICNIC FOR DOG

Rover Had Quite a Good Time While on His Way to His Last Resting Place.

A big picnic was planned and I was slated to transport the refreshments and a crowd of relatives to the picnic grounds, writes a correspondent of the Chicago Tribune. I placed the boxes and baskets containing the sandwiches, cake, friend chicken, etc., in a trailer, hitched the trailer to my car, already filled to overflowing, and started gayly on my way.

A huge dog belonging to my aunt accompanied us, and I had the misfortune to run the heavily loaded machine over him, killing him instantly, as we all thought. My aunt was deeply affected and insisted that I take Rover's body along and bury it beside the river. I loaded the dog's carcass into the trailer and started on again, but not so gayly.

When we reached the picnic grounds and I reconnoitered in my trailer I beheld Rover sitting up licking his chops, as large as life, or larger, I should say, for he had devoured all our provisions.

DAMAGE DONE TO HIGHWAYS

Public Roads Bureau Experimenting With Matter of Impact on Various Surfaces.

A new series of experiments, which may have a far-reaching effect upon transportation on the highways and the regulation thereof, has been undertaken by the bureau of public roads, department of agriculture.

The work, which is being done by the division of road materials, test and research, is designed to demonstrate the damage done to highways by different forms of transportation units traveling under varying conditions. It is thought that the information so obtained will perhaps serve as a basis for scientific regulation of traffic on different types of pavements, incidentally indicating the types and designs of road which will best serve the needs of traffic.

It is also suggested that from this knowledge fair consideration will be assured in legislative charges against traffic, since an accurate measure of impact damage therefrom will be possible.

The experiments will cover a wide range, taking into account four factors—those of speed, height of fall, type of tire used and the weight of the transportation unit.

Under the last heading it will be necessary for the bureau to consider distribution of weight above and under springs and on back and front axles, a quantity which is decidedly variable on different makes of motor and horse-drawn vehicles. The bureau has called upon the national automobile chamber of commerce to assist in the collection of this data, much of which has not been generally tabulated, and a questionnaire has been sent to all motor truck manufacturers of America on this subject. Immediate attention to this has been requested in order to facilitate the experiments.

In the initial stages of the work the pack has been measured by the permanent deformation of one-half by one-half inch copper cylinders placed under a steel plunger subjected to the impact of traffic. A varying height of fall is arrived at by different take-offs for the machine. First experiments indicated a wide range in the force of impact as between units with solid tires and pneumatics.

Working from these first steps the bureau officials plan to perfect a machine which will take into account the factors mentioned and which will enable them to provide a constant succession of impacts on selected slabs or paving compositions. This will enable the experiments to proceed much more rapidly than would be possible under actual road conditions. Tests will be made on horse-drawn as well as motor-driven vehicles.

In addition to the above experiments another series is planned to determine the wearing qualities of different types of road surfaces when subjected to very heavy traffic.

SAVE TRANSPORTATION COSTS

Eight Cents Per Ton-Mile Can Be Effected When Road Is Lifted to Durable Class.

The report of the joint congressional committee which investigated highway economics in 1914 shows that a saving of eight cents per ton-mile can be effected in transportation costs when a road is lifted from the dirt to the durable class. This does not take into account increased real estate valuations or social advantages from the improvement.

Good Roads Approved.

The secretary of agriculture, up to May 1, had approved 1,067 project statements for federal aid roads, involving the improvement of 10,580 miles of highways at an estimated cost of $92,988,000.

Much for Trunk Highways.

It is proposed that Uncle Sam spend $400,000,000 for trunk highways, now that the season approaches when a man will have no further reason to travel principally with a suitcase.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

Each day is a fresh beginning. Wise is he who takes today and lives it and tomorrow when it comes—but not before it comes. The past is of value only by way of the lessons it has brought us.

FOOD FOR THE SICK.

A tempting tray with a change of china, using the prettiest in the house will interest the patient, and he will know and appreciate that the preparation of his food and tray is a pleasure, in the measure in which it is demonstrated. When no invalid tray is provided use a large tray and support it over the patient's lap with books on each side. This will take away the weight and dread of spilling food.

Gruels are such important foods for the ill that it is fitting that thought should be put upon their preparation. For a liquid diet all cereals are prepared in the same way, using two to three tablespoonfuls to a quart of water. Cook for several hours in a double boiler and strain before serving. A thick cereal is cooked as for breakfast food, but cooked a long time.

Chicken Broth.—A good broth may be prepared from the neck, wing tips and feet of a chicken. Scald the feet, removing the skin and nails. Cover with cold water adding celery and let it simmer gently for two hours. Season and strain.

Mutton Broth.—Cut one pound of the neck of mutton in small pieces. Cover with cold water and simmer gently for several hours. Season and strain through a cheesecloth. Add a tablespoonful of boiled rice or barley at serving time. This adds to the nourishment. All fat should be removed before serving. Chill, then reheat after taking off the fat.

Creamed Sweetbreads.—Soak a pair of sweetbreads in cold water an hour, changing the water several times. Simmer in hot water until tender. Add salt and a few celery leaves for flavor. When done dip in cold water and separate into small pieces, removing the membrane. Save the broth in which they were cooked as it makes delicate soup, adding a little milk and seasoning. Put the sweetbreads into a cream sauce and serve on toast or in ramekins.

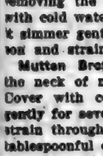
Lemon Jelly.—Soak a tablespoonful of gelatin in three tablespoonfuls of cold water; add three-fourths of a cupful of boiling water and four tablespoonfuls of lemon juice and five tablespoonfuls of sugar. Stir until dissolved. Pour into a wet mold and put on ice to harden. This makes two servings.

Plain Sponge Cake.—Beat two eggs, separating whites and yolks; add one-half cupful of sugar, and a flavoring of lemon juice and rind to the beaten yolks; then add the whites and fold in one-half cupful of flour. Bake in a moderate oven until the cake shrinks from the pan.

A sunny, bright, and buoyant, chronically buoyant disposition is one of the most desirable and enviable qualities of character that anyone, man, woman or child, can possess.

SERVING THE SUMMER MEAL.

In the homes where it is necessary to use economy (and that means 90 to 90 per cent of our people) the using of left-overs wisely and acceptably is usually a daily problem. Because the male members of the family shy at anything reheated, made over or hashed, the problem becomes one which takes finesse on the part of the menu planner. The preparation of a leftover into an appetizing dish takes vastly more thought than the ordinary one, which is often the reason why such dishes are not acceptable; they are prepared with too little thought.



The reason so many men balk at salads is because they are used as the clearing house for leftovers. There is something out of balance with a person who has not learned to enjoy crisp, well-blended salads, or well-cooked and seasoned vegetables, but no one can be blamed for refusing unattractive food.

In meeting people and making friends we try to be as agreeable as it is possible to be. Why not use the same method in combining foods, by putting a little originality into the seasonings, and make a new dish welcome?

We have favorite foods as we have favorite friends, yet it is not possible nor wise for us to always be served with the foods we like best or associate with people always agreeable.

Daintiness should be the keynote in the serving of the summer meal, as attractive dishes sharpen the appetite.

By following the advice of Horace Fletcher and chewing the food three times as long as usual, the appetite is satisfied with a smaller amount of food and the body has less waste to throw off, thus saving wear on the human machinery. "Eat less, work more, worry less, walk more," is a good motto for the whole year as well as for hot weather.

A salad, a sandwich, a cooling drink with a dish of fruit and a simple cake will make a noon meal sufficiently satisfying during the hot weather. Such a meal may be varied with a change of dessert and different kinds of salads and sandwich fillings, so that there will be no monotony. Milk and eggs, custards and frozen dishes are most satisfactory at this time. Hearty dishes of meats with heavy desserts are best left entirely alone if one would be well.

EMERGENCY DISHES.

One of the earmarks of a good housekeeper is to be ready for any occasion. If her emergency shelf is a corner grocery, even a car full of friends arriving within an hour of meal time will not disturb her serenity. The hostess who urges her guests to remain to a meal which she is wildly planning in the back of her head, will lack the ring of true sincerity, no matter how carefully worded.

With a well-stocked emergency shelf which is constantly replenished, if she lives in the country or too far from a grocery store an impromptu guest will bring no panic, but on the contrary will be welcomed and enjoyed. The list of staples to be kept for such occasions will vary with the taste of the householder. There are some things which are necessities, such as crackers, cheese, pickles, olives, jellies and preserves. With canned fruit which is found in every well-regulated home, desserts and salads of various kinds may be quickly prepared. A few frills like a box of marshmallows, a bottle (small one) of maraschino cherries and coconut will dress up an otherwise plain dish.

If the woman who lives in the country would serve her friends with the farm food—eggs, butter, cream, chicken, vegetables and berries, and not try to prepare something fancy, both she and her guests would be far happier. Crisp, fresh vegetables with cream or butter are a treat to the city dweller.

An omelet is a most satisfying dish to serve in a hurry. It may have a variety of fillings or sauces, making it a main dish or a dessert.

The wisest and most interesting men talk little, think much, complain never, but travel on. How far have you come today, brother?

HOT WEATHER MENUS.

The appetite flags during the hot weather, making it necessary to give attention to foods that are cooling as well as nourishing. This is a good time to cut down meats, serving an omelet or croquettes with a good sauce. A small amount of meat may be used in preparing the croquettes or they may be made entirely of vegetables.

Cold fruit soups, fruit salads and fruit cocktails are especially satisfying on a hot day. Iced drinks of various kinds are always welcome. For a luncheon or supper, sandwiches with any desired filling, sliced cold roast beef, olives and radishes or small onions well chilled, a dish of ice cream or a sherbet and a cake will make a satisfying meal for anyone. Vegetable soup, crackers, omelet creamed potatoes with peas, tomato salad, sponge cake with a custard and a small cup of coffee is a good menu for dinner.

Rhubarb Pudding.—Spread bread with butter and cover with a layer of cut rhubarb; sprinkle with sugar and repeat until there is enough for each to be served. Add a little water and bake until the rhubarb is well cooked. Cherries or other acid fruit may be used in place of the rhubarb. Sponge cake with sweet berries may be treated in the same way, making a most wholesome dessert that you need not fear to give to the children.

Rich desserts and sauces, fat and highly seasoned meats, should be left out of the menus during hot weather.

A supper dish that is economical and wholesome can be prepared from a cupful of cooked rice with three or four eggs. Put the rice with a little milk into a saucepan, add the eggs, stirring them into the mixture. Cook slowly, add a bit of butter, salt and pepper and serve hot in place of scrambled eggs. This will save three or four eggs, which, without the rice, would be needed to make the dish "go round" in a family of five.

SUNDAY WAS RED LETTER DAY AT M. P. CHURCH

The first gathering of its kind ever held in the local M. P. church was the homecoming on last Sunday. The day was ideal and the program was carried through the entire day without a disappointment, all of which made the event very pleasant. While the crowd was not what was anticipated, yet everyone present was more than glad for the day.

The day begun with the Sunday school session at 9:30 in the morning, at which a fine crowd, numbering 105, were present. This session was in charge of John N. George. Following the lesson hour Sol Barney was called upon to officiate at the service in honor of William Hamilton, who bears the distinction of being the oldest Sunday school scholar living, of this class. Mr. Barney began to relate the life history of the brother, beginning when a mere boy and taking him through his western experience up to the present. When but 20 years of age he became a Christian and he has lived this life ever since as every one who knows Uncle William. He has been a member of the church for 70 years. Mr. Barney said that "today we meet in a measure to pay a tribute to this Christian man and to honor him for his steadfastness in the service of his master, despite his many trials and temptations. Not only this, but on Monday he shall have passed his ninetieth milestone, and we shall each one extend greeting by the presenting our brother with a card, letter or a hearty handshake."

This matter had been planned as a surprise and it worked out perfectly and when the requests of the speaker were fully met, Mr. Hamilton was showered with cards galore from the scholars, both old and young.

The morning sermon was delivered by the Rev. John R. Elson, pastor of the Kendallville church, followed by the communion service.

The noon hour brought out the sociable part of the day's program where nearly 100 participated of the bounteous dinner that had been at home, each family bringing their basket and the committee taking charge of the dinner spread on the long tables in the grove at the Christian church and each one went to it. The dinner was great and those who failed to come are the losers.

The afternoon session began at 2:30 with Rev. S. Heininger of New Haven as speaker, a former pastor of the local church.

Those present from out of town were: Chas. Jenkins, Auburn; Mrs. Cadmir Woodcox and children, Garrett; Mrs. Vada Dove and little daughter, of Spencerville; Howard Shilling and wife, of Hicksville; Mrs. Joe Harrod, Mansfield, Ohio; J. R. Culbertson and wife, of Orangeville; Mrs. Eva Elson.

The affair will probably be made an annual affair of the church.

Piano Recital Successful.

Last Friday evening at the M. P. Church, the pupils of Mrs. S. W. Tustison gave a piano recital that was far beyond the expectations of the large audience. Many of the contestants had never appeared in public before and some of them had only taken a few lessons. Not one of them was compelled to give up their task on the program because of embarassment and the program moved off very promptly. The interest shown in this recital by the public in general was extraordinary. Music in St. Joe has been dormant for some time. Mrs. Tustison has a large class of pupils and the work that is being done by them is no doubt gratifying to the parents. THE NEWS desires to congratulate the participants in the recital upon the manner in which they played their respective pieces.

Coburn Family Reunion

The Fourth Annual Reunion of the Coburn Family was held in the Erick Grove, Thursday, Aug. 7th. The attendance, while not large was better than last year, a number of persons being present who had not attended the previous reunions. The weather was ideal for an occasion of this kind. The association were unanimous in their approval of this place as the regular meeting point for future reunions and the date, Aug. 7th., has been agreed upon as a permanent date for same.

After a sumptuous dinner had been served, the afternoon was spent in a program of speaking and several musical selections. Two original poems recited by their composers, Mrs. Rose Murphy and Mrs. A. M. Baker, deserve special mention. Swings for the little ones, a game of horseshoe for the men, croquet and bathing for the younger set was indulged in at the conclusion of the program. A refreshment stand netted the association a small balance after expenses were paid.

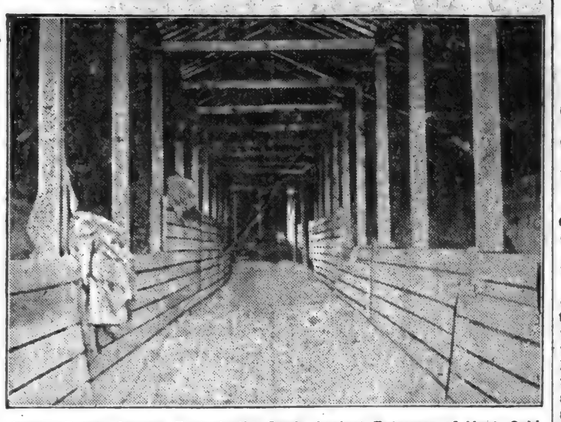
POTATOES MUST BE PROTECTED FROM EXTREME HEAT AND COLD, AND LIGHT



Proper Potato Storage Protects the Spuds Against Extremes of Heat, Cold and Light.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Storing potatoes resembles banking money, because ordinarily it results in the potatoes selling for higher prices later in the season when the supply is not so abundant as at digging time. The potatoes earn dividends while in storage just as money in the bank accumulates interest. If all the potatoes were sold immediately after digging the prices would decline, due to the excessive offerings on the market. It permits of holding the more or less perishable potatoes in a salable condition over as long a period as is economically desirable. Storage also insures a more uniform market supply throughout the season.

It is the late or main crop varieties of spuds, intended for winter use, which are stored, as the early or truck crop potatoes are ordinarily disposed of directly from the field as harvested. Potato storages are practically of all types and descriptions, from primitive shelters, such as caves or pits, up to rather elaborate, artificially refrigerated storage houses. However, the fundamental purpose of the storage house, be it simple or elaborate, is to protect the spuds from extremes of cold and heat as well as from the light, and under proper conditions of humidity and ventilation. Care must be exercised not to keep the potatoes together in large bulk where the development of high temperature and deterioration will be favored.

Specialists of the United States department of agriculture believe that a temperature of about 36 degrees Fahrenheit is generally low enough for practical potato storage, and that during the earlier portion of the storage season the temperature of 40 degrees Fahrenheit is just as satisfactory except where powdery dry rot infection occurs. The freezing point of the potato is between 28 and 26 degrees Fahrenheit.

Potatoes, when exposed to strong or even moderate light are soon injured for food purposes, and on this account it is essential to exclude the light from the storage house, although exposure to modified light, where the spuds are kept cool and well aired, is not injurious to tubers intended for seed potatoes.

Protect Potatoes Against Wilting.

There should be sufficient moisture in the potato storage house to prevent the wilting of the tubers and at the same time to maintain a humidity content low enough to prevent a deposit of moisture on the surface of the potatoes. One investigator suggests a humidity of from 85 to 90 per cent as about correct for a potato storage room temperature of 33 to 35 degrees Fahrenheit. Generous provision for adequate ventilation must be made, the ventilators or air flues being arranged so as to insure a rapid and even distribution of air throughout the structure.

It is a bad practice to store potatoes in large bins or piles. Not infrequently the tubers are heaped to a depth of 10 or 15 feet, the pile being correspondingly large in the other dimensions. Such storage almost invariably results in violent sweating or curing, in which the spuds in the central portion of the pile are frequently subjected to a dangerously high temperature. This is especially true if the tubers are slightly immature or were not dry and free from moist soil when gathered, or if stored when the outside temperature was high, making it difficult to lower the inside temperature of the house. Such overheating may be avoided by inserting division walls at intervals throughout the pile. The division walls may consist of 2 by 4 inch uprights, on the 2-inch face of which are nailed ⅞ by 5 inch strips of any desired length, leaving a 1-inch space between each strip. This provides a ventilated partition, which can be of any height and length desired. By placing these in an upright position 5 to 6 feet apart as the bin or storage house is being filled, good ventilation will be secured and an easy avenue of escape for both heat and moisture provided.

Storage Adapted to Local Needs.

In considering the type of storage best suited to the needs the grower should bear in mind the temperature and rain or snow likely to occur during the storage period, the character and cost of the material involved, the nature of the soil and drainage, and the length of the storage period. Potatoes may be successfully stored in pits if provided with good drainage and given sufficient covering to insulate them against extreme heat and cold, a well-drained site being essential. It is usually not advisable to excavate more than 6 inches, making the pit long and narrow rather than square in shape. It is inadvisable to store a large bulk of potatoes in one pit.

The potatoes are stored over a light layer of straw on the floor, while the pile is insulated against cold and heat by covering the spuds with alternate layers of straw or hay and soil. During the late fall, as the weather grows colder, more straw, as well as more soil, should be added to form a protective overcoat for the potatoes. Each layer of straw when compacted should be approximately six inches thick, while the final layer of soil should be six to eight inches deep, depending upon weather conditions. Ventilation may be provided by means of a wooden flue, the lower end of which extends almost to the bottom of the pit, while the upper end should project well above the covering, the valve being equipped with a wooden cap to prevent the entrance of rain or snow, and also in order that it may be closed entirely during very cold weather.

A pit of this sort when well made will provide perfect protection for the potatoes until spring, the objection to it being that the potatoes stored therein are not always accessible during the winter.

In regions where rainfall is slight, dugout potato cellars are commonly used, it not being necessary to provide these buildings with water-tight roofs. Usually the pit or "hog back," as it is called, is placed on a short, narrow ridge of land which permits of easy approach and a central driveway into the pit at the grade line. It is necessary to brace such potatoes by means of posts and plates in order to prevent cave-ins. Some of the pits are more expensive and substantial, with the side and end walls made of concrete. Generally it is advisable to have the storage cellars or pits equipped with some system of artificial lighting.

Central Driveway in Cellar.

The storage cellar is usually provided with a driveway entrance and is considerably wider than the cellars without driveways, which often are only 12 to 30 feet wide, the entire space being used for storage purposes and the floor being either dirt, wood or concrete. Some of the best storages have driveways through the middle with bins on either side, the driveway being an earthen one with the storage bins having ventilated wooden floors laid on joists placed at right angles to the driveway and thus furnishing an unrestricted circulation of air beneath the bin.

CORN STANDARD NOW RISING

Fraction for 1913 Was 82.5 Per Cent, Slightly Above Mean for the Preceding Ten Years.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Merchantable corn was 82.4 per cent of the entire crop during the last 36 years, and the percentage has been a declining one. In 1888-1897 the mean was 84.6 per cent; in 1898-1907, 83.4 per cent; and in 1908-1917, 80.2 per cent. The standard of merchantability appears to be rising. The fraction for 1918 was 82.5 per cent, or almost the mean for 36 years, but above the mean of the preceding ten years. The highest fraction in 36 years was 89.1 per cent in 1906, and the lowest 60 per cent in 1917.

Art in Fashion Is the Demand

Two women were discussing the subject of clothes. Said one:

"Do you dress to please yourself or to please others?"

"Why, to please others, of course," was the reply.

The questioner smiled.

"Would you mind taking off that shirtwaist?" she said. "I have always despised it."

The silence which ensued was quite thick enough to feel.

Perhaps, writes a prominent fashion correspondent, this little story illustrates the futility of even attempting to please. Most of us, I am sure, dress the best we can with the means at hand—those means in the bank and those the manufacturers create. Now and then one comes across those radiant persons who not only dress to please themselves but succeed in pleasing every one else as well.

All Seek the Picturesque.

I know of no other word with which to describe the fashions of the hour than picturesque. To be picturesque seems to be the aim of all who make and those who wear feminine apparel.

Certainly there is a quaintness and a charm about present moment modes which warrants the term. For instance, a certain little pale pink organdie just the tint of a rose is banded together in a series of lace puffs made by gathering a narrow band of insertion along the top and bottom edges and placing the puffs between spaces in the organdie.

Across the front there is drawn a little apron of the organdie likewise banded with these same quaint puffs and at one corner having a small pocket fashioned of the lace and tipped at the top with a deep red rose and a blue ribbon. The bodice has a fichu, quaint little sleeves of lace and organdie puffed like the skirt, and the blue ribbon and red rose appear coquettishly again at the side of the fichu where it crosses. The charming frock is not in the least fantastic or bizarre but picturesque to the last degree and is the sort of thing a young woman would affect for her gayest moments.

It begins to look as if the waist is to disappear altogether—that is the waistline, I mean, for the newest creations show not only no line where one's waist is but many gowns and blouses have capes of lace or accordion-plaided chiffon set over the shoulders, and entirely covering the upper part of the figure. This effect is achieved in a gown of black Spanish lace, the skirt of which has several lace flounces placed one above the other on a foundation of black satin. A deep girdle of burnt orange and silver brocade form what there is of the bodice and a tight cape of the lace buttons snugly around the neck and fits as smoothly as a cap over the shoulders. The lower edge falls over the ribbon girdle in a floating panel effect.

Same Method Overseas.

The same method of making a blouse has just arrived from overseas in a white accordion-plaited chiffon blouse of which the lower part is a tight foundation of the chiffon over a thin white silk and the plaited chiffon falls in the same capelike fashion from neck to waistline hiding the absence of other sleeves, as this curious arrangement seems to make sleeve as well as bodice. The same thing appears again in a flesh pink georgette with the lower edges bordered with several rows of palest pink ostrich feather banding.

The fashion for veiling one's self in tulle as was done so much last year is more noticeable than ever. It is well to note that the soft wood brown shades have almost superseded the blues of the past season, so much so in fact that the brown is becoming quite as hard to find as the blue, which grows scarcer daily—and dearer, too. Brown, by the way, is the coming fall shade. Many of the Paris importations for street dresses of the chemise and one-piece effects show in the collection only two colors, in fact, brown and black.

The soft fabrics, such as duvetyn, velours and kitten's ear, have pushed all others aside. Serge, we hear, is to have a rest along with all of the kindred fabrics of surface rougher than the velvety velours family. The embroidery is done by hand in the same shade as the dress material and the extremely heavy embroidery silk is used. Redingote effects, with their long slender lines, are leading all others at this time.

Sand and Tan Tones.

As companion to the brown shades destined for early fall and winter wear sand and tan tones are often seen. There are, by the way, several new shades—faison brown, which has a reddish cast; tison, which is rust red; peace blue and jade; Corinthe and Adriatic, also blues. The combination of brown and green is striking and unusual enough to please the most ardent searcher after novel effect. It is deftly done by placing strips of a jade green along a brown background and veiling the green strips with a thin fabric of brown or a heavy open mesh braid, through which the green is flecked.

White and marigold yellow also present a new color combination of which the possibilities are limitless. We learn that London is more interested just now in clothes for the debutantes than in all else—that is, London's smart world, for there are the accumulated debutantes of the past five years to be presented at this year's drawing rooms, since the English king and queen held no social gatherings during the war.

Because of the vast number of young girls to appear before their majesties the regulation court costume with its long, long train, veil and Prince of Wales feathers will not be required this season at the several drawing rooms, but the London makers are creating wonderful afternoon costumes. Hence these lighter colored effects such as the vogue of marigold and white—so closely are we in this country in touch with matters over there that it is only natural that the mode of their moments should reach us, too.

War Over Short Skirts and Sleeves.

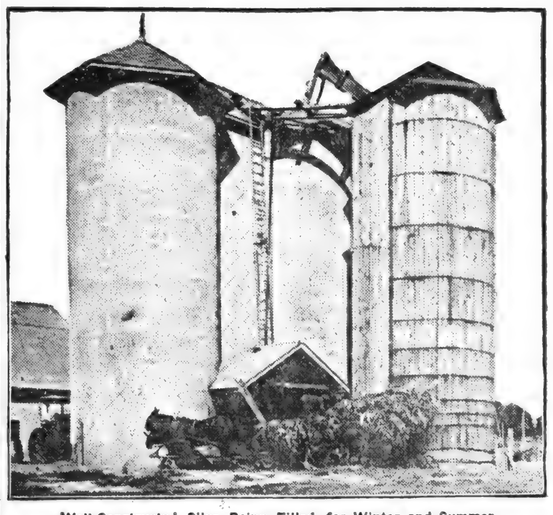
Paris continues to wear its skirts and sleeves just as short as possible, and consequently we are having a gay little dressmakers' war in this land as to just the length for American skirts, for the "ten inches from the floor" rule has quite as many followers as has the five-inch adherents. It is said that many American buyers had ordered French dresses with lengthened skirts for the American trade, but when these arrived the general effect of the dress was impaired and the buyers followed the French designers' ideas.

Returning to the picturesque note so pervasive, the newest evening gowns for young women show one-piece velvets entirely unrelieved by the slightest bit of color other than the dress itself.

Blouses of Linen.

Smart and attractive are tunic blouses of tan linen with the bands of heavy cluny, or blouses of crepe de chine made in the loose, cool and becoming tunic style.

SUMMER SILAGE IS PROPER INSURANCE AGAINST LOSSES DURING DRY WEATHER



Well-Constructed Silos Being Filled for Winter and Summer.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The time has nearly arrived for filling silos—has quite arrived for building additional ones if more space is needed.

Materials are high. It may be a question with the individual farmer whether he can afford to build a silo this year.

Realizing that possibility, the United States department of agriculture believes that many men may be inclined to give too much weight to construction cost and not enough to silage value, and that therefore the advantages of the silo ought at least to be restated.

Advantages of Silos.

Here are some of the outstanding points in what the department's dairy specialists think of silos:

In general, more cow feed can be grown on an acre of ground in corn than in any other crop.

When put in a silo it is more easily harvested and cared for than any other crop.

Silage operations are absolutely independent of weather conditions. Corn for silage can be harvested in the rain.

The silo makes possible full utilization of corn that otherwise would be destroyed or damaged by frost.

The silo makes it possible to keep more animals on a given acreage, which means more manure and constantly increased soil fertility.

Harvesting corn as silage clears the ground early so it can be prepared for other crops.

With silage it is not necessary to put so many acres in hay.

In any other form a considerable portion of the feeding value is lost.

Corn cured as fodder loses about 40 per cent of its feeding value.

Corn preserved as silage loses only about 10 per cent of its feeding value.

About 35 per cent of corn fodder is wasted in feeding.

Only about 5 per cent of corn silage is wasted in feeding.

In other silage crops, weedy growth that would not be eaten at all as hay is all eaten as silage.

Saved in any other form, feeds become, in a measure, less palatable and less nourishing.

Silage is all succulent, and all palatable.

Silage Feeding Pays.

Statistics show that the percentage of profitable herds is almost three times as high among herds that are fed on silage as among herds that are not fed silage.

While there may be some possible question as to the economy of putting up silos under extreme high prices, there can be no question about the economy of filling to capacity those that are already up.

Every man who has a silo should aim not only to put up enough silage to carry his herd through the winter but to have some for summer feeding, at least in case of emergency.

Even in the best of pasture regions, cows frequently drop 20 to 50 per cent in production—even more sometimes—in midsummer when drought cuts the pastures short.

When the rains come later, these cattle do not return to 100 per cent production.

If there is some stuff in the silo when the dry weather comes, the cows can be kept up in production through the drought and carried on at maximum production through the season.

Summer silage is, to the dairy farmer, insurance against loss from drought.

If he has not sufficient capacity to carry over summer silage, more should be constructed as soon as it is at all feasible.

The summer silo, to give the most service possible, should be of smaller diameter than the winter silo, for in order to keep it in perfect condition silage must be fed to a greater depth each day in summer than in winter.

As compared with soiling crops, summer silage saves labor at a time when labor is urgently needed for other things.

Dairy farmers are realizing more and more every year that they must have summer silos

PAINTING SILOS FOR FUTURE USEFULNESS

Of Great Importance to Protect Against Decay.

Good Inside Coating Is Coal-Tar Solution, Thinned With Gasoline—Wooden Staves Usually Begin to Rot at the Base.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Now that the cost of constructing silos is high it is more important than ever to protect against decay those that are already built.

A good inside coating for silos, specialists of the United States department of agriculture say, is coal-tar solution, thinned if necessary with gasoline, and applied with a paint brush. The best plan is to apply it one or two days before the silo is filled, but it can be done successfully during filling, the men in the silo painting a strip as high as they can reach, and repeating the process periodically until the top is reached. When put on in this way the material must be thinned with gasoline which evaporates almost immediately and leaves the coal-tar dry enough not to injure the silage.

The same preparation is good also for coating the outside wall. The only objection is that black outside paint, is not as pleasing in appearance as that of a lighter color. The high cost of linseed oil and prepared paints, however, cause many silo owners to neglect painting with those materials, and a black outer coat is certainly preferable to deterioration for lack of paint.

Wooden-stave silos that have begun to rot at the base—where decay usually begins—can be saved by sawing off the rotten portion. It is necessary, of course, to block up the silo before the sawing is done, and then to lower it gradually. Carefully handled, a silo can be sawed off and lowered absolutely without injury. After this operation there is likely to be three or four years of life left in a silo that without it would have been worthless.

RABBITS CHEAPEST TO RAISE

Compared With Chickens Points Are in Favor of Rabbits—Inexpensive Feed Given.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

It costs about 25 cents to raise a rabbit to the age of three months. At that time it may be marketed at the rate of 35 to 40 cents a pound and the pelts are worth from 15 to 75 cents, depending on the kind of rabbit and its size. Oats, cabbage and water compose the basic diet used by most of the young growers. Compared with chicken raising, the points are in favor of the rabbit, for the hares are very hardy and require inexpensive feed.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Pigs are as clean as other animals if conditions are as they should be.

After weaning the colt will need some feeds to supply ingredients furnished by the mother's milk.

If the driver lets the horses' shoulders get sore, even if strong and sound, the horse is useless.

The brood mare previous to foaling time will require a little extra care in her handling; she should not be overworked.

Mrs. Hoffman's Recovery From Dropsy a Surprise. She Used Doan's.

Mrs. Hoffman

"I was in dreadful shape," says Mrs. W. B. Hoffman, 639 Oakley Ave., Hammond, Ill. "There was a sickening pain across the small of my back and when I stooped over, knife-like twinges nearly drove me wild. I had large puffs under my eyes and my body bloated badly all over. My feet were swollen to twice their natural size and the skin looked shiny. When I pressed it down, it left a dent there and I knew I was bad off with dropsy.

"My friends didn't think I would live very long. I doctored with three different physicians and they didn't help me and I was discouraged. Nobody knows the torture I went through.

"I decided to try Doan's Kidney Pills. I used three boxes and I was cured. I felt fine. As the swelling went down, my appetite picked up and I was soon perfectly healthy. My color came back and people said I looked as well as ever. Doan's Kidney Pills saved my life."

CONSTRUCTION OF GOOD ROAD

Concrete Highway Is Composed of Mixture of Sand, Stone, Portland Cement and Water.

The concrete road is composed of a carefully proportioned mixture of clean, hard, well-graded sand, pebbles or broken stone, portland cement and water. This mixture is laid upon the subgrade to a depth of 7 inches or more for the entire width of the road, and soon hardens into a mass as hard as rock. The materials are bonded together by the cement so firmly that it is impossible for traffic to loosen or separate the particles. For this reason no expensive maintenance is required.

The foundation or subgrade is compacted where the concrete is to be laid and the roadbed is drained so that no water will remain under the slab, writes A. L. Pettibone in Dakota Farmer. Upon the foundation concrete is laid in one or two courses. A one-course concrete road consists of a relatively rich concrete mixture throughout. A two-course road consists of a somewhat leaner mixture for a base with a richer top or wearing course, applied before the concrete in the base has begun to harden. Frequently re-enforcement in the form of wire fabric or steel rods is embedded in the concrete. This assists to prevent cracks in the slab and aids in keeping cracks which may form from opening to any appreciable extent.

The high wearing quality of the concrete road results from using properly graded, clean, hard sand and pebbles or crushed rock. These must be combined with portland cement in carefully measured proportions, mixed with a power-operated batch mixer to produce a stiff plastic consistency, then placed upon the foundation and struck off with a template or strike board, so shaped that the surface of the pavement will have the desired crown. After rolling with a light metal roller to compact the concrete and remove excess water used in mixing, the concrete is finished by seesawing a section of rubber or canvas belting along the pavement, leaving a true, even, gritty, dense surface. When sufficiently hardened to prevent pitting or marking, the surface is sprinkled with water, then covered with 2 inches or more of moist sand or earth, which is kept wet by sprinkling for from ten days to two weeks to prevent the concrete from drying out too rapidly. Under no circumstances should a concrete road be put in use until it is 14 days old and in cool weather a longer time is necessary. This is a brief summary of the essentials of the construction of a concrete road.

GOOD ROADS ARE PROFITABLE

Authorities Should Act to Meet Growing Demands Before Trade Goes Other Ways.

Good roads are a paying investment. Local authorities in cities, towns and counties should act without delay to meet the growing national and local demands before trade goes in other directions. It is almost impossible to get back the lost advantage after other districts have won it.

NOT AFFECTED BY WEATHER

Heat or Cold, Freezing and Thawing Does Not Injure Concrete Once It Is Hardened.

Concrete roads are not affected by heat or cold nor by freezing or thawing when it is once hardened. Other materials tracked upon concrete have no effect upon it. Heat does not soften the binder permitting it to flow; cold does not make it brittle, causing it to chip.

Proper Grade of Road.

The grade of the road is important, for on this depends the weight of the load which can be hauled economically.

"Why, my dear fellow, you look very familiar to me," the officer said. "I must have met you some place during the war."

BARRERE'S PLEA FOR UNITY

French Ambassador to Italy Denies His Government Has Intention of Aiding Austria.

Rome.—Considerable interest has been aroused here, following the recent disorders between Italian and French troops at Fiume over a speech delivered by Camille Barrere, the French ambassador, on receiving the French colony on the occasion of France's national holiday. M. Barrere recalled that this was the first time in five years that the French had celebrated July 14 in peace, but that now it was being celebrated with a peace restored by victory.

The great soldiers of the Allies, he declared, were passing over that avenue in Paris which has been renamed the "Avenue of Victory."

The ambassador added that he rejoiced with the Italians over the disappearance of that power, referring to Austria, in which the Italians "justly saw their hereditary enemy."

Continuing, the ambassador declared that contrary to reports that had been circulated, the French government never dreamed of the revivification of that power in any form; that French diplomacy had not lent itself to any act against which Italians would have a right to feel offended. The liquidation of the defunct Austro-Hungarian empire was going on and would continue, he said.

It has ceased to exist as an empire and its dismemberment would be rapid.

RELIEF WORK TO CONTINUE

American Efforts to Save Children of Baltic States From Starvation Will Go On.

New York.—There has been a terrible decrease, amounting to the average of 50 per cent in the birth rate in all the liberated countries of Europe, it is declared, and, in addition, the war conditions have materially increased the death rate among the children [illegible] the face of this situation it is necessary to keep alive and well nourished the children who have survived, as well as those to be born in the next few months.

Therefore, all the funds appropriated by congress for use in European food relief have been exhausted, the American relief administration, recognizing that its work for the saving of the children in the Baltic states, Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, Roumania, Jugo-Slavia and Armenia must go on, has decided to maintain its existence as distinct from a governmental organization, for the special purpose of continuing the child relief work.

It has effected a reorganization under the name of the American Relief Administration European Children's Relief with a highly efficient board of directors, with Herbert Hoover as chairman and Edgar Richard as acting chairman in America until the return of Mr. Hoover. The American headquarters are at 42 Broadway, New York city.

All the world is now alive to the necessity of protecting children.

FEW DEAD NOT IDENTIFIED

Almost Every Grave of a Soldier Who Fell in France Has Been Properly Marked.

Fewer than one-half of 1 per cent of the American soldiers who died on the battlefields of France were buried unidentified, according to Col. Joseph E. Herron of Cincinnati, commander of the 15,000 troops who interred the fallen Americans. The men under Colonel Herron's command removed the dead from the temporary graves dug for them under fire or at night on the field where they fell and laid them to rest in concentration centers.

Each cemetery is surrounded by a painted fence and the grass on the graves is kept green and cared for by a detachment of soldiers left on duty as caretakers. The largest is at Romagne, where lie 22,000 Americans who died in the Argonne and Meuse sectors, and the next largest is at Thiaucourt, where 4,300 soldiers who died at St. Mihiel and Toul are buried.

The advisability of bringing the American dead back from France was questioned by Baron d'Estournelles de Constant, member of the French senate, who sailed for France after a brief visit to this country. Baron de Constant, referring to the proposed removal of the war dead of the allied countries said: "In this time of confusion it would not be wise to attempt to remove the dead. There would be terrible mistakes made. In any event it is better to wait until times are more settled."

ISSUE ODD STAMPS

Philatelists Are Enthusiastic Over Latest Curios.

Small Nations of Europe Resort to Curious Experiment to Provide Postage Stamps.

London.—Stamp collectors, of which London has its full share, are enthusiastic over the curious postage stamps which are beginning to reach them from the smaller European states.

One example from Lithuania is of the first permanent issue of that country. It has been lithographed on heavy Silurian gray paper formerly used for the printing of bread tickets.

Lettland, Lithuania's neighbor, printed its first stamps on the backs of German ordnance maps, but these proved a little unwieldy and now its stamps are printed on the flimsiest of cigarette papers.

Czecho-Slovakia stamps recently received here are simply the united arms of Bohemia, Moravia and Silesia with the inscription "Ceska-Slovenska Statni" printed on the Magyar stamps. They were issued when the Czecho-Slovak troops invaded Hungary.

The disputed port of Fiume has been provided with a striking series of pictorial stamps, apparently in anticipation of an Italian mandate, for they all bear the words "Fiume proclaima l' annessione all Italia," and the date 30-10-1918. The four designs include the statue of Romulus and Remus fed by the she-wolf, the piazza of St. Mark, and ancient Venetian galleon and the portrait of Dr. Crossich.

AUGUST

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies. This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucus or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic cuts this slime and mucus and removes it. A nauceated feeling is sometimes experienced when this mucus is breaking loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appet te return and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

PACIFIC FLEET HAS BIG GUNS

Powerful 14-Inch Batteries Formidable Feature of Western Squadron.

DID GREAT SERVICE IN WAR

Big Naval Guns Mounted on Railway Carriages Were Strong Factor in Reducing the St. Mihiel Sector.

San Francisco, Cal.—Not the least interesting feature of the new Pacific fleet is the 14-inch guns, 12 of which are mounted on Admiral Hugh Rodman's flagship, the New Mexico, and several other ships of the fleet.

Design and construction of the 14-inch naval gun on railway mountings on the western front was one of the great accomplishments of the American navy during the war. The guns hurled 1,400-pound projectiles far behind the German lines, and were a strong factor in reducing the St. Mihiel salient.

Built in Record Time.

The gun was designed, built and delivered in less than four months. On December 26, 1917, according to Secretary Daniels' official report, not a drawing had been started. On April 25, 1918, a completed gun was rolled on its own wheels to Sandy Hook proving grounds for long-range tests.

The guns, Secretary Daniels said, originally were intended for the new battle cruisers, but a change in design of the vessels made the guns available for other use, and it was recommended they be mounted for land service.

The guns were mounted on carriages which could be moved freely over the French railroads. With them went their naval crews. Twelve cars were required for each gun—machine shop cars, armored ammunition cars, kitchen, berthing, crane and wireless cars. The batteries were sufficiently mobile that if an order came to move while in action, they could be on their way in an hour.

Greatest Range of Mobile Guns.

The 14-inchers had greater range than any gun ever before placed on mobile mountings. The German guns which fired on Paris were "freaks." They were built on permanent steel and concrete foundations. Their projectile was small and specially built for long flight. This reduced their efficiency and while they had moral effect, their military value was small. Because of their permanent position their location was discoverd by allied aviators and the guns silenced.

The German 15-inch gun in Flanders also became famous for its long-range bombardment of Dunkirk and other allied bases, but neither could be shifted from base to base without delay of weeks. The American 14-inch gun could move from one end of France to another and had a range of 30 miles. At range of 22,000 yards it pierces armor successfully.

WOULD EXTEND WAR CONTROL OF ALL FOOD

That, and Provision of Penalties for Profiteering, Advocated by the President.

TO FORCE SALE OF SURPLUS

In Address to Congress the Chief Executive Makes Assertion That We "Are Dealing With Very Critical and Difficult Matters."

Washington.—Addressing congress and proposing remedies to check the high cost of living, President Wilson declared existing laws were inadequate and high prices were not justified by shortage of supplies, present or prospective, but were created in many cases "artificially and deliberately" by "vicious practices."

He spoke practically as follows:

Gentlemen of the Congress:

I have sought this opportunity to address you because it is clearly my duty to call your attention to the present cost of living and to urge upon you with all the persuasive force of which I am capable the legislative measures which would be most effective in controlling it and bringing it down.

The prices the people of this country are paying for everything that it is necessary for them to use in order to live are not justified by a shortage in supply, either present or prospective, and are in many cases artificially and deliberately created by vicious practices which ought immediately to be checked by law.

Profiteers Lawbreakers.

Some of the methods by which these prices are produced are already illegal, some of them criminal, and those who employ them will be energetically proceeded against. But others have not yet been brought under the law, and should be dealt with at once by legislation.

With the increase in the prices of the necessaries of life come demands for increases in wages—demands which are justified if there be no other means of enabling men to live.

Upon the increase of wages there follows close an increase in the price of the products whose producers have been accorded the increase—not a proportionate increase, for the manufacturer does not content himself with that, but an increase considerably greater than the road added wage cost and for which the added wage cost is oftentimes hardly more than an excuse.

The laborers who do not get an increase in pay when they demand it are likely to strike, and the strike only makes matters worse.

It checks production; if it affects the railways it prevents distribution and stripe the markets; so that there is presently nothing to buy, and there is another excessive addition to prices resulting from the scarcity.

Conditions Not "Natural."

These are facts and forces with which we have become only too familiar; but we are not justified because of our familiarity with them or because of any hasty and shallow conclusion that they are "natural" and inevitable, in sitting inactively by and letting them work their fatal results if there is anything that we can do to check, correct or reverse them.

We must, I think, frankly admit that there is no complete immediate remedy to be had from legislation and executive action. The free processes of supply and demand will not operate of themselves, and no legislative or executive action can force them into full and natural operation until there is peace.

Must Know Terms of Peace.

There can be no confidence in industry, no calculable basis for credits, no confident buying of systematic selling, no certain prospect of employment, no normal restoration of business, no hopeful attempt at reconstruction or a proper reassembling of the dislocated elements of enterprise until peace has been established, and, so far as may be, guaranteed. Our national life has no doubt been less radically disturbed and dismembered than the national life of other peoples whom the war more directly affected, with all its terrible ravaging and destructive force, but it has been nevertheless profoundly affected and disarranged, and our industries, our credits, our productive capacity, our economic processes are inextricably interwoven with those of other nations and peoples—most intimately of all with the nations and peoples upon whom the chief burden and confusion of the war fell and who are now most dependent upon the cooperative action of the world.

Exports Greatest in History.

We are just now shipping more goods out of our ports to foreign markets than we ever shipped before—not foodstuffs merely, but stuffs and materials of every sort; but this is no index of what our foreign sales will continue to be or of the effect the volume of our exports will have on supplies and prices. It is impossible yet to predict how far or how long foreign purchasers will be able to find the money or the credit to pay for or sustain such purchases on such a scale; how soon or to what extent foreign manufacturers can resume their former production, foreign farmers get their accustomed crops from their own fields; foreign mines resume their former output, foreign merchants set up again their old machinery of trade with the ends of the earth. All these things must remain uncertain until peace is established and the nations of the world have concerted the methods by which normal life and industry are to be restored.

All that we shall do in the meantime to restrain profiteering and put the life of our people upon a tolerable footing will be makeshift and provisional. There can be no settled condition here or elsewhere until the treaty of peace is out of the way and the work of liquidating the war has become the chief concern of our government and of the other governments of the world.

"Europe will not cannot recoup her capital or put her restless, distracted peoples to work until she knows exactly where she stands in respect to peace; and what we will do is for her the chief question upon which her quietude of mind and confidence of purpose depends. While there is any possability that the peace terms may be changed or may be held long in abeyance, or may not be enforced because of divisions of opinion among the powers associated against Germany, it is idle to look for permanent relief.

Immediate Relief Measures.

By way of immediate relief, surplus stocks of both food and clothing in the hands of the government will be sold and of course sold at prices at which there is no profit. And by way of a more permanent correction of prices surplus stocks in private hands will be drawn out of storage and put upon the market. Fortunately under the terms of the food-control act the hoarding of foodstuffs can be checked and prevented, and they will be, with the greatest energy. Foodstuffs can be drawn out of storage and sold by legal action which the department of justice will institute wherever necessary; but as soon as the situation is systematically dealt with it is not likely that the courts will often have to be resorted to. Much of the accumulating of stocks has no doubt been due to the sort of speculation which always results from uncertainty.

Would Have Prices Plainly Marked.

I would also recommend that it be required that all goods destined for interstate commerce should in every case where their form or package makes it possible be plainly marked with the price at which they left the hands of the producer. Such a requirement would bear a close analogy to certain provisions of the pure food act, by which it is required that certain detailed information be given on the labels of packages of foods and drugs.

And it does not seem to me that we could confine ourselves to detailed measures of this kind, if it is indeed our purpose to assume national control of the processes of distribution. I take it for granted that that is our purpose and our duty. Nothing less will suffice. We need not hesitate to handle a national question in a national way. We should go beyond the measures I have suggested. We should formulate a law requiring a federal license of all corporations engaged in interstate commerce and embodying in the license, or in the conditions under which it is to be issued, specific regulations designed to secure competitive selling and prevent unconscionable profits in the method of marketing.

Law Would Do Much.

Such a law would afford a welcome opportunity to effect other much-needed reforms in the business of interstate shipment and in the methods of corporations which are engaged in it; but for the moment I confine my recommendations to the object immediately in hand, which is to lower the cost of living.

We are dealing, gentlemen of the congress, I need hardly say, with very critical and very difficult matters. We should go forward with confidence along the road we see, but we should also seek to comprehend the whole of the scene amidst which we act. There is no ground for some of the fearful forecasts I hear uttered about me, but the condition of the world is unquestionably very grave and we should face it comprehendingly. The situation of our own country is exceptionately fortunate. We of all peoples can afford to keep our heads and to determine upon moderate and sensible courses of action which will insure us against the passions and distempers which are working such deep unhappiness for some of the distressed nations on the other side of the sea.

But we may be involved in their distresses unless we help, and help with energy and intelligence.

Disregarding the surplus stock in the hands of the government, there was a greater supply of foodstuffs in this country on June 1 of this year than at the same date last year. In the combined total of a number of the most important foods in dry and cold storage the excess is quite 19 per cent. And yet prices have risen.

Law Department Active.

The attorney general has been making a careful study of the situation as a whole and of the laws that can be applied to better it and is convinced that, under the stimulation and temptation of exceptional circumstances, combinations of producers and combinations of traders have been formed for the control of supplies and of prices which are clearly in restraint of trade, and against these prosecutions will be promptly instituted and actively pushed which will in all likelihood have a prompt corrective effect. There is reason to believe that the prices of leather, of coal, of lumber and of textiles have been materially affected by forms of concert and co-operation among the producers and marketers of these and other universally necessary commodities which it will be possible to redress. No watchful or energetic effort will be spared to accomplish this necessary result. I trust that there will not be many cases in which prosecution will be necessary. Public action will no doubt cause many who have perhaps unwittingly adopted illegal methods to abandon them promptly and of their own motion.

The department of commerce, the department of agriculture, the department of labor and the federal trade commission can do a great deal toward supplying the public systematically and at short intervals, with information regarding the actual supply of particular commodities that is in existence and available with regard to supplies which are in existence but not with regard to the methods of price fixing which are being used by dealers in certain foodstuffs and other necessities.

Retailers in Part to Blame.

There can be little doubt that retailers are in part—sometimes in large part—responsible for exorbitant prices; and it is quite practicable for the government through the agencies I have mentioned to supply the public with full information as to the prices at which retailers buy and as to the costs of transportation they pay in order that it may be known just what margin of profit they are demanding. Opinion and concerted action on the part of purchasers can probably do the rest.

Let me urge, in the first place, that the present foodstuff control act should be extended both as to the period of time during which it shall remain in operation and as to the commodities to which it shall apply.

Its provision against hoarding should be made to apply not only to food but also to feed stuffs, to fuel, to clothing, and to many other commodities which are indisputably necessaries of life. As it stands now it is limited in operation to the period of the war and becomes inoperative upon the formal proclamation of peace. But I should judge that it was clearly within the constitutional power of the congress to make similar permanent provisions and regulations with regard to all goods destined for interstate commerce and to exclude them from interstate shipment if the requirements of the law are not complied with.

Some such regulation is imperatively necessary.

It would materially add to the serviceability of the law, for the purpose we now have in view, if it were also prescribed that all goods released from storage for interstate shipment should have plainly marked upon each package the selling or market price at which they went into storage. By this means the purchaser would always be able to learn what profits stood between him and the producer or the wholesale dealer.

The world must pay for the appalling destruction wrought by the great war, and we are part of the world. We must pay our share. For five years now the industry of all Europe has been slack and disordered. The normal crops have not been produced; the normal quantity of manufactured goods has not been turned out.

Not until there are the usual crops and the usual production of manufactured goods on the other side of the Atlantic can Europe return to the former conditions; and it was upon the former conditions, not the present, that our economic relations with Europe were built up.

We must face the fact that unless we help Europe to get back to her normal life and production a chaos will ensue there which will inevitably be communicated to this country. For the present, it is manifest, we must quicken, not slacken, our own production.

U. S. Must Hold World Steady.

We, and we almost alone, now hold the world steady. Upon our steadfastness and self-possession depend the affairs of nations everywhere. It is in this supreme crisis—this crisis for all mankind—that American must prove her mettle.

In the presence of a world confused, distracted, she must show herself self-possessed, self-contained, capable of sober and effective action. She saved Europe by her action in arms; she must now save it by her action in peace.

In saving Europe she will save herself, as she did upon the battlefields of the war. The calmness and capacity with which she deals with and masters the problems of peace will be the final test and proof of her place among the peoples of the world.

And, if only in our own interest, we must help the people overseas. Europe is our biggest customer. We must keep her going or thousands of our shops and scores of our mines must close. There is no such thing as letting her go to ruin without ourselves sharing in the disaster.

In such circumstances, face to face with such tests, passion must be discarded. Passion and a disregard for the rights of others have no place in the counsels of a free people. We need light, not heat, in these solemn times of self-examination and saving action.

Everyone who is in real touch with the silent masses of our great people knows that the old strong fiber and steady self-control are still there, firm against violence or any distempered action that would throw their affairs into confusion.

I am serenely confident that they will readily find themselves, no matter what the circumstances, and that they will address themselves to the tasks of peace with the same devotion and the same stalwart preference for what is right that they displayed to the admiration of the whole world in the midst of war.

Sinister Influences at Work.

And I enter another confident hope. I have spoken today chiefly of measures of imperative regulation and legal compulsion, of prosecutions and the sharp correction of selfish processes; and these no doubt are necessary.

But there are other forces that we may count on besides those resident in the department of justice. We have just fully awakened to what has been going on and to the influences, many of them very selfish and sinister, that have been producing high prices and imposing an intolerable burden on the mass of our people.

To have brought it all into the open will accomplish the greater part of the result we seek.

I appeal with entire confidence to our producers, our middlemen and our merchants to deal fairly with the people. It is their opportunity to show that they comprehend, that they intend to act justly, and that they have the public interest sincerely at heart.

Labor Must Consider.

I believe, too, that the more extreme leaders of organized labor will presently yield to a sober second thought, and like the great mass of their associates, think and act like true Americans. They will see that strikes undertaken at this critical time are certain to make matters worse, not better—worse for them and for everybody else.

The worst thing, the most fatal thing—that can be done now is to stop or interrupt production, or to interfere with the distribution of goods by the railways and the shipping of the country.

There are many things that ought to be corrected in the relations between capital and labor, in respect of wages and conditions of labor and other things even more far-reaching, and I, for one, am ready to go into conference about these matter with any group of my fellow countrymen who know what they are talking about and are willing to remedy existing conditions by frank counsel rather than by violent contest.

General Interest First.

No remedy is possible while men are in a temper, and there can be no settlement which does not have as its motive and standard the general interest.

Must All Work Together.

Threats and undue insistence upon the interest of a single class, make settlement impossible. I believe, as I have hitherto had occasion to say to the congress, that the industry and life of our people and of the world will suffer irreparable damage if employers and workmen are to go on in a perpetual contest, as antagonists. They must, on one plan or another, be effectively associated. Have we not steadiness and self-possession and business sense enough to work out that result?

In the meantime—now and in the days of readjustment and recuperation that are ahead of us—let us resort more and more to frank and intimate counsel and make ourselves a great and triumphal nation, making ourselves a united force in the life of the world. It will not then have looked to us for leadership in vain.

ALL TAKE EXCESSIVE PROFITS

Federal Trade Commission Makes Public Facts Concerning Present High Prices of Shoes.

Washington.—The federal trade commission, which recently conducted an investigation into the leather industry, inquiring especially into the prices of shoes, made public a summary of its report to congress.

In its introduction to the summary the commission says:

"The federal trade commission has found that the high price of shoes cannot be justified by underlying economic conditions. The commission after exhaustive inquiry into the price of hides, leather and shoes, is reporting to congress that the larger packers control the hide supply and have taken excessive profits and passed increased costs to subsequent steps in manufacture and distribution; that the tanner has taken exceptional profits; that the manufacturer of shoes has taken unusual margins, and the prices charged by the retailer are not justifiable, each factor in the industry adding to the burden he had to bear before he passed it on to the next."

Means for reducing the present high prices are recommended by the commission in this paragraph:

"Some relief from the intolerable prices paid by consumers for shoes may be had by (1) a rigid enforcement of the laws against monopolistic control of commodities, (2) legislation forbidding producers of hides engaging in the tanning business."

PIECES OF EIGHT

By Richard Le Gallienne

Being the Authentic Narrative of a Treasure Discovered in the Bahama Islands in the Year 1903. Now First Given to the Public.

Copyright by Doubleday, Page & Company.

TO THE SHARKS!

Synopsis—The man who tells this story—call him the hero, for short—is visiting his friend, John Saunders, British official in Nassau, Bahama Islands. Charlie Webster, a local merchant, completes the trio of friends. Conversation turning upon buried treasure, Saunders produces a written document purporting to be the death-bed statement of Henry P. Tobias, a successful pirate, made by him in 1859. It gives two spots where two millions and a half of treasure were buried by him and his companions. The conversation of the three friends is overheard by a pock-marked stranger. The document disappears. Saunders, however, has a copy. The hero, determined to seek the buried treasure, charters the auxiliary schooner Maggie Darling. The pock-marked man is taken on as a passenger for Spanish Wells. Negro Tom catches and cures a "sucking fish" as a mascot for the hero; it has the virtue of keeping off the ghost of the pirate who always guards pirate treasure. On the voyage somebody empties the gasoline tank and the hero starts things. He and the passenger clash. He lands the passenger, who leaves a manifesto bearing the signature, "Henry P. Tobias, Jr." With a new crew, the Maggie Darling sails and is passed by another schooner, the Susan B. The hero lands on Dead Men's Shoes.

"I can't afford to give you that, Theodore."

"I'd die for dat," he declared.

"Take this handkerchief instead;" but, meanwhile, my eyes were opening. "Take this instead, Theodore," I suggested.

"I'd die for dat," he repeated, touching the tie.

His voice and touch made me sick and afraid, just as people in a lunatic asylum make one afraid.

"Look out!" murmured Tom at my elbow.

And just then I noticed hiding in some bushes of seven-year apple trees, two faces I had good reason to know.

I had barely time to pull out the commandant's revolver from my pocket. I knew it was to be either the pockmarked genius or the engineer. But for the moment I was not to be sure which one I had hit. For, as my gun went off, something heavy came down on my head, and for the time I was shut off from whatever else was going on.

* * * * * * * *

"Which did I hit, Tom?" were my first words as I came back to the glory of the world; but I didn't say them for a long time, and, from what Tom told me, it was a wonder I ever said them at all.

"There he is, sar," said Tom, pointing to a long, dark figure stretched out near by. "I'm afraid he's not the man you were looking for."

"Poor fellow!" I said; it was George, the engineer; "I'm sorry—but I saw the muzzles of their guns sticking out of the bush there. It was they or me."

"That no lie, sar, and if it hadn't been for that suckin' fish's skin you wouldn't be here now."

"It didn't save me from a pretty good one on the head, Tom, did it?"

"No, sar, but that was just it—if it hadn't been for that knock on the head, pulling you down just that minute, that thar pockmarked fellow would have got you. As it was, he grazed your cheek and got one of his own men killed by mistake—the very fellow that hit you. There he is—over there."

"And who's that other, Tom?" I asked, pointing to another dark figure a few yards away.

"That's the captain, sar."

"The captain? Oh, I'm sorry for that. God knows I'm sorry for that."

"Yes, sar, he was one of the finest gentlemen I ever knowed was Captain Tominson; a brave man and a good navigator. And he'd taken a powerful fancy to you, for when you got that crack on the head he picked up your gun and began blazing away, with words I should never have expected from a religious man. The others, except our special friend—"

"Let's call him Tobias from now on, Tom," I interposed.

"Well, him, sar, kept his nerve, but the others ran for the boats as if the devil was after them; but the captain's gun was quicker, and only four of them got to the Susan B. The other two fell on their faces, as if something had tripped them up, in a couple of feet of water. But just then Tobias hit the captain in the heart; ah! if only he had one of those skins—but he always laughed off such things as superstitious.

"There was only me and Tobias then, and the dog, for the engineer boy had gone on his knees to the Susan B. fellows at the first crack, and begged them to take him away with them. There was no one left but Tobias and the dog and me, and I was sure my end was not far off, for I was never much of a shot.

"As God is my witness, sar, I was ready to die, and there was a moment when I thought that the time had come; but Tobias suddenly walked away to the top of the bluff and called out to the Susan B., that was just running up her sails. At his word they put out a boat for him, and while he waited he came down the hill toward me and the dog, that stood growling over you; and for sure I thought it was the end. But he said: 'Tell that fellow there that I'm not going to kill a defenseless man. He might have killed me once but he didn't. It's bound to be one of us some day or other, but, despise me all he likes—I'm not such carrion as he thinks me; and if he only likes to keep out of my way I'm willing to keep out of his. Tell him when he wakes up that as long as he gives up going after what belongs to me—for it was my grandfather's—he is safe, but the minute he sets his foot or hand on what is mine, it's either his life or mine.' And then he turned away and was rowed to the Susan B., and they soon sailed away."

"With the black flag at the peak, I suppose, Tom," said I. "Well, that was a fine speech, quite a flight of oratory, and I'm sure I'm obliged to him for the life that's still worth having, in spite of this ungodly aching in my head. But how about the poor captain there! Where does all his eloquence come in there? He can't call it self-defense. They were waiting ready to murder us, as you saw. I'm afraid the captain and the law between them are all that is necessary to cook the goose of our friend Henry P. Tobias, Jr., without any help from me—though, as the captain died for me, I should prefer they allowed me to make it a personal matter."

"It's the beginning of the price," said Tom.

"The beginning of the price?"

"It's the dead hand," continued Tom; "I told you, you'll remember, that wherever treasure is there's a ghost of a dead man keeping guard and waiting till another dead man comes along to take up sentry duty so to say. The ghost is getting busy. And it makes me think that we're coming pretty near to the treasure, or we wouldn't have had all this happen. Mark me, the treasure's near by—or the ghost wouldn't be so malicious."

And then, looking around where the captain and the engineer and Silly Theodore lay, I said:

"The first thing we've got to do is to bury these poor fellows; but where," I added, "are the other two that fell in the water?"

"Oh," said Tom, "a couple of sharks got them just before you woke up."

CHAPTER VII.

In Which Tom and I Attend Several Funerals.

When Tom and I came to look over the ground with a view to finding a burial place for the dead I realized with grim emphasis the truth of Charlie Webster's remarks—in those smuggery nights that seemed so remote and far away—on the nature of the soil which would have to be gone over in quest of my treasure. No wonder he had spoken of dynamite.

"Why, Tom," I said, "there isn't a wheelbarrow load of real soil in a square mile. We couldn't dig a grave for a dog in stuff like this," and, as I spoke, the pewterlike rock under my feet clanged and echoed with a metallic sound.

"Come along, Tom, I can't stand any more of this. We'll have to leave our funerals till tomorrow, and get aboard for the night"—for the Maggie Darling was still floating there serenely, as though men and their violence had no existence on the planet.

"We'd better cover them up, against the turkey buzzards," said Tom, two of those unsavory birds rising in the air as we returned to the shore. We did this as well as we were able with rocks and the wreckage of an old boat strewn on the beach.

I don't think two men were ever so glad of the morning, driving before it the haunted night. After breakfast our first thought was naturally to the sad and disagreeable business before us.

"I tell you what I've been thinking, sar," said Tom, as we rowed ashore, and I managed to pull down a turkey bussard that rose at our approach—happily our coverings had proved fairly effective—"I've been thinking that the only one of the three that really matters is the captain, and we can find sufficient soil for him in one of those big holes."

"How about the others?"

"Well, to tell the truth, I was thinking that sharks are good enough for them."

"They deserve no better, Tom, and I think we may as well get rid of them first."

So it was done as we said, and carrying them by the feet and shoulders to the edge of the bluff—George, and Silly Theodore, and the nameless giant who had knocked me down so opportunely—we skillfully flung them in, and they glided off with scarce a splash.

Then we turned to the poor captain and carried him as gently as we could over the rough ground to the biggest of the banana holes, as the natives call them, and there we were able to dig him a fairly respectable grave.

Tom and Sailor and I were now, to the best of our belief, alone on the island, and a lonesomer spot it would be hard to imagine, or one touched at certain hours with a fairer beauty—a beauty wraithlike and, like a sea shell, haunted with the marvel of the sea.

First we went over our stores, and, thanks to those poor dead mouths that did not need to be reckoned with any more, we had plenty of everything to last us for at least a month, not to speak of fishing, at which Tom was an expert.

When, however, we turned to our plans for the treasure hunting we soon came to a dead stop. The indications given by Tobias seemed, in the face of such a terrain, naive to a degree. Possibly the land had changed since his day. Some little, of course, it must have done. Tom and I went over Tobias' directions again and there was the compass carved on the rock, and the cross. There was something definite—something which, if it was ever there at all, was there still—for in that climate the weather leaves things unperished almost as in Egypt.

Sitting on the highest bluff we could find, Tom and I looked around.

"That compass is somewhere among these infernal rocks—if it ever was carved there at all—that's one thing certain, Tom; but look at the rocks!"

Over twenty miles of rocks north and south, and from two to six from east to west. A more hopeless job the mind of man could not conceive. Tom shook his head, and scratched his graying wool.

They Glided Off With Scarce a Splash.

"I go most by the ghost, sar," he said. "All these men had never been killed if the ghost hadn't been somewhere near. Mark me, if we find the treasure it'll be by the ghost."

"That's all very well," I laughed. "But how are we going to get the ghost to show his hand? He's got such bloodthirsty ways with him."

"They always have, sar," said Tom, no doubt with some ancestral shudder of voodoo worship in his blood. "Yes, sar, they always cry out for blood. It's all they've got to live on. They drink it like you and me drink coffee or rum. It's terrible to hear them in the night."

"Well, Tom," I remarked, "you may be right, but of one thing I'm certain; if the ghost's going to get any one, it sha'n't be you."

"We've both got one good chance against them—" Tom was beginning.

"Don't tell me again about that old sucking fish."

"Mind you keep it safe, for all that," said Tom gravely. "I wouldn't lose mine for a thousand pounds."

"Well, all right, but let's forget the damned old ghosts for the present."

We decided to try a plan that was really no plan at all; that is to say, to seek more or less at random, till we consumed all our stores except just enough to take us home. Meanwhile we would, each of us, every day, cut a sort of radiating swathe, working single-handed, from the cove entrance. Thus we would prospect as much of the country as possible in a sort of fan, both of us keeping our eyes open for a compass carved on a rock. In this way we might hope to cover no inconsiderable stretch of the country in the three weeks, and, moreover, the country most likely to give some results, as being that lying in a semicircle from the little harbor where the ships would have lain. It wasn't much of a plan perhaps, but it seemed the most possible among the impossibles.

Harder work than we had undertaken no men have ever set their hands to. It would have broken the back of the most able-bodied navvy; and when we reached the boat at sunset we had scarce strength left to eat our supper and roll into our bunks. A machete is a heavy weapon that needs no little skill in handling with economy of force, and Tom, who had been brought up to it, was, in spite of his years, a better practitioner than I.

I have already hinted at the kind of devil's underbrush we had to cut our way through, but no words can do justice to the almost intelligent stubbornness with which those weird growths opposed us. It really seemed as though they were inspired by a diabolic will-force pitting itself against our will, vegetable incarnation of evil strength and fury and cunning.

Day after day Tom and I returned home dead beat, with hardly a tired word to exchange with each other.

We had now been at it for about a fortnight, and I loved the old chap more every day for the grit and courage with which he supported our terrible labors and kept up his spirits. Once or twice we had made fancied discoveries which we called off the other to see, and once or twice we had tried some blasting on rocks that seemed to suggest mysterious tunnelings into the earth. But it had all proved a vain thing and a weariness of the flesh. And the ghost of John P. Tobias still kept his secret.

CHAPTER VIII.

An Unfinished Game of Cards.

One evening as I returned to the ship unusually worn out and disheartened I asked Tom how the stores were holding out. He answered cheerfully that they would last another week and leave us enough to get home.

"Well, shall we stick out the other week or not, Tom? I don't want to kill you, and I confess I'm nearly all in myself."

"May as well stick it out, sar, now we've gone so far. Then we'll have done all we can, and there's a certain satisfaction in doing that, sar."

So next morning we went at it again, and the next, and the next again, and then on the fourth day, when our week was drawing to its close, something at last happened to change the grim monotony of our days.

It was shortly after the lunch hour. Tom and I, who were now working too far apart to hear each other's halloos, had fired our revolvers once or twice to show that all was right with us. But, for no reason I can give, I suddenly got a feeling that all was not right with the old man, so I fired my revolver and gave him time for a reply. But there was no answer. Again I fired. Still no answer. I was on the point of firing again when I heard something coming through the brush behind me. It was Sailor racing toward me over the jagged rocks. Evidently there was something wrong.

"Something wrong with old Tom, Sailor?" I asked, as though he could answer me. And indeed he did answer as plainly as dog could do, wagging his tail and whining and turning to go back with me in the direction whence he had come.

"Off we go, then, old chap," and as he ran ahead, I followed him as fast as I could.

It took me the best part of an hour to get to where Tom had been working. Sailor brushed his way ahead, pushing through the scrub with canine importance. Presently, at the top of a slight elevation, I came among the bushes to a softer spot where the soil had given way, and saw that it was the mouth of a shaft like a wide chimney flue, the earth of which had evidently fallen in. Here Sailor stopped and whined, pawing the earth, and at the same time I heard a moaning underneath.

"Is that you, Tom?" I called. Thank God, the old chap was not dead at all events.

"Thank the Lord, it's you, sar," he cried. "I'm all right, but I've had a bad fall—and I can't seem able to move."

"Hold on and keep up your heart—I'll be with you in a minute," I called down to him.

A cave, a pirate's bones, a chest and—

Cure for Rheumatism.

A certain variety of seaweed, known in Ireland as "tope," has been recommended by a famous physician as a cure for rheumatism and throat affections if eaten hot, whilst in some parts of England and Wales a variety of seaweed, known as "laver," has been in demand for years as a vegetable. Served with roast meats it is said to be extremely palatable.

Critic Coins New Word.

Tired of the hackneyed phrase, a "gripping" story, originated by some weary critic and eagerly snatched up by book advertisers, it has remained for a Boston dramatic critic to discover a new term. He has found a play that is "riveting" in its intensity of interest.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR AUGUST 17

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.

LESSON TEXTS—Acts 1:8; 13:1; 14:28.

GOLDEN TEXT—Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature.—Mark 16:15.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Matthew 28:18-20; Luke 24:46-53; Acts 26:12-20.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Helping everybody to know Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The whole world needs Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—Taking the gospel to the whole world.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—Christian missions; aims and results.

I. The Obligation of Missions (Mark 16:15).

God saves men for a purpose. That purpose is to be laborers together with him in the salvation of others. Christ's parting message, yea, his final commission to the disciples was, "Go, preach the Gospel to every creature." This obligation still rests upon the church. Since the command is to preach the Gospel to every creature, this obligation will obtain as long as there is one unreached soul.

II. The Power of Missions (Acts 1:8).

This power is the supernatural inducement of the Holy Spirit. Missionary endeavor without the Holy Spirit is doomed to failure. Power to witness for Christ is the purpose of the gift of the Spirit. Success will crown the efforts of those who go forth under the leadership and power of the Holy Spirit. The Spirit was not given primarily to make Christians happy, but to make them strong to carry the Gospel to the heathen. However, those who go forth in this blessed service in the Spirit's power are truly happy.

III. The Scope of Missionary Endeavor (Acts 1:8).

The disciples were to begin their witnessing where they were when the Holy Spirit fell upon them—Jerusalem. But they were to go out from there to the "uttermost parts of the earth." This is the program for every disciple of Christ. Begin witnessing where Christ saves you, and then go to your neighbors next to you, and on to the remotest bounds of the earth. There is no such thing as "home missions," except that you begin at home.

IV. The First Foreign Missionaries (13:1-14; 28).

1. Who they were (13:2). Barnabas and Saul were selected—the very best two men in the church. The evangelization of the world is a task of such tremendous importance that it challenges the church to offer her best men and women. Since an institution is judged by its representatives, it becomes the church to put her most capable men to the front.

2. By whom sent (13:2, 4). The Holy Spirit chose these men and sent them forth to their work. The church at Antioch seemed to have deliberately planned this missionary enterprise. It was after prayer and fasting that the Spirit ordered the church to send forth these missionaries. It should be the business of the church to constantly seek the mind of God relative to sending forth laborers into the Lord's vineyard. The Spirit calls and sends men forth, but he does this through the church.

3. Some experiences of the first foreign missionaries:

(1) Withstood by Elymas the sorcerer (13:6-12). Elymas moved by the devil, sought to turn the mind of Sergius Paulus from the faith, thus barring the Gospel as it enters upon its widest mission of salvation. The most villainous act which one can commit is to turn a soul from the Gospel. (2). Worshiped as gods (14:8-18). (a) The occasion (vv. 8-10). God accompanied the testimony of these missionaries by his mighty power. He wrought a miracle through Paul. At his call the inveterate cripple—one who had never walked—leaped up and walked. The cure was instant. (b) The method (vv. 11-13). They called Barnabas, Jupiter, and Paul, Mercury, because he was the chief speaker. They declared that the gods had come down in the likeness of men, and they brought oxen and garlands to offer sacrifice. (c) Their efforts foiled (vv. 14-18). 1. The missionaries rent their clothes and ran in among the people, saying they were not divine but beings of like passions with themselves. 2. They urged the people to turn to God. 3. Paul stoned (vv. 19-22). Stirred up by wicked Jews from Antioch and Iconium, the rabble who a moment ago were worshiping are filled with satanic hate. Doubtless Paul remembered Stephen's experience. God raised him up and he went forth to discharge his duties as a missionary. Such men of courage are needed today.

Without Loyalty to Christ.

A Christianity without loyalty to the Christ, as its motive and inspiration, may be likened to—well, may we say, our solar system minus the sun.

An Inward Beauty.

There is an inward beauty, life, and loveliness in divine truth, which cannot be known but when it is digested into life and practice.—John Smith.

Take heed of the first stumble, for it is ominous; and at best there is a good step lost.—Benjamin Whichcote.

SCRAPS of HUMOR

Multitudinous Brain Fag.

"You don't mean to tell me you ever doubt the wisdom of the majority?"

"Well," responded Senator Sorghum with deliberation, "what is a majority? In many instances it is only a large number of people who have got tired out trying to think for themselves and have decided to accept somebody else's opinion."

Quite So.

She—Somebody said there was a painter aboard the boat.

He—Of course there is.

She—Do let me see him work. Is he one of those camouflage artists?

The Way.

"This writer in describing a fire says the flames ran along at a rapid rate. What sort of a path do you suppose they ran in?"

"I guess it was a cinder path."

Nothing to Fear.

Visitor—Oh, I stepped on that man's foot!

Studio Manager—Never mind. That wasn't the star; it was only the president of the company.—Film Fun.

Cruel Surmise.

"Why has Jinks that string tied around his finger?"

"From all I hear, I guess it is his wife's apron string."

PROFITEERING.

Ten thousand for an aeroplane
Or more than that is spent.
Which is a lot considering
They make them for ascent.

Hard Luck.

Life's hardest fate is this 'un:
When arguments expand
The more you try to listen
The less you understand.

Gallant Valuation.

She—Whoever wants me, must take me at my face value.

He—I'm sure that will be a fair estimate.

Well Mated.

"Are they well mated?"

"I should say so. He seems to be able to make money almost as fast as she can spend it."

Taking Chances.

"I'm afraid we're going to lose out."

"Why so?"

"We're trying an automobile case with a jury of pedestrians."

Startling Behavior.

"The florist I went to get plants boxed my ears."

"Boxed your ears!"

"Yes; my elephant's ears."

When Interest Is Awakened.

Problem—If you see a man with a smile on his face, cut a paragraph from a newspaper and place it carefully in his billfold, what is your deduction?

Answer—You are right. The clipping mentions him.—Judge.

A Timely Warning.

Mrs. Pester—Don't bother me. I'll be dressed as soon as I can."

Her Husband—I was just going to say if you don't speed up a little those clothes will be out of style by the time you get 'em on.

Prompt Work.

"Tom is certainly a man of action."

"What has he done?"

"Why, the very day after the heiress accepted him he gave up his job at the bank and joined the Don't Worry club."

Kept Several Feet Away.

Polly—Charlie says he thinks the floor is too rough.

Dolly—He surely does. I noticed he didn't venture upon it when he danced with me!

Taking a Suggestion.

"Our cook says she is afraid of ghosts."

"Thanks!" exclaimed Mr. Crosslots. "Ours isn't afraid of anything human being can say or do. I'll tip my wife off to try ghosts."

Good Waiter.

Maid: "I am sorry to disturb your sleep ma'am but here is your breakfast."

Debutante: "You don't disturb me. I have been lying here waiting for it for three hours."

Attacks Cost Of Living

In a sepcial message to congress President Wilson outlined his recommendations for legislation which he and his advisers believe will solve the high cost of living problem. It is a problem in which every American is vitally interested, and every one of our readers will wish to read what the president says about it. The message will be found on another page of this issue.

Half Shoes for Women in the Black and the Brown Kid.

Women are wearing half shoes this spring, both because the new oxfords are so attractive in appearance, and because the season has been favorable for the very general wearing of low shoes.

Those who do not buy their shoes by chance, but use discrimination in making a selection, enjoy exercising their choice among the several new styles at Lawrence's. These show distinctive character, assured style, correct fitting quality, fine leathers, high quality shoemaking. They set properly, without gaping at side and heel. Also made to keep their shape in service, and to wear well.

Obituary

Edna Kelley Washler, daughter of James and Melissa Kelley, was born in Stafford Township, DeKalb County, Indiana, March 15, 1887, and after a brief illness entered the Haven of Rest, August 3, 1919, at the age of 32 years, 4 months and 18 days, having lived practically all her life near the place of her birth, except a short time spent at Fayette, Ohio.

Several years ago she accepted Christ as her Savior under the ministry of Rev. F. A. Thomas, and became a member of the Newville Christian Church, living a devoted christian life, being active in the church and Sunday School. For a number of years she served as secretary of the Sunday School and at the time of her death she was secretary and treasurer of the Corner Stone class.

Too much cannot be said in her praise. She was never known to speak ill of any one. She was modest, unassuming, quiet and reserved, although always willing to help others. She was an obedient daughter and a loyal companion and helpmate, being energetic beyond her strength. It can truly be said, "Her sun has gone down while it is yet day."

March 6, 1917 she was united in marriage to Cleveland Washler, who with the mother, one brother, Bert Kelley and two sisters, Mrs. Ida Hartley and Mrs. Mary Scoville, survive. Her father having preceded her to the great beyond.

Funeral services were held at the Newville Christian Church, Tuesday, August 5, Rev. Denham officiating. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director.

Government Bulletin.

The last government crop bulletin contained some figures on the apple crop as estimated for this year and a comparison of the past five years, that might be of interest to some of our readers:—

On June 1st. the estimated apple crop for the United States was 166,334,000 bushels. On July 1st. this estimate was reduced by 10,726,000, owing to unfavorable weather in the meantime, making 155,608,000, the present estimate as against an actual crop last year of 169,911 and a five year average crop of 197,855,000.

The same bulletin reports the average country prices for July 1st. 1918 as $1.50 and for 1919, $1.98 compared with the average for the five previous years of $1.10.

It would seem that the high price this year and last was due at least partially to the scarcity of apples as compared with the average for the increased cost of producing and handling them.

PUTS PEACE UP TO U. S. SENATE

President Wilson Says Body Must Act on Treaty to End the War.

REPLIES TO FALL'S QUESTIONS

Executive Declares That He Has No Power to Declare Peace by Proclamation—German Colonies Taken in Trust.

Washington, Aug. 22.—President Wilson has not the power to declare peace by proclamation, nor could he consent in any circumstances to take such a course prior to the ratification of a formal treaty of peace by the senate. The president so wrote Senator Fall in answer to one of the 20 written questions the senator presented at the White House conference Tuesday.

Replying to another question, the president said the provision of the treaty that it should come into force after ratification by Germany and three of the principal associated powers operated merely to establish peace between those ratifying powers, and that it was "questionable whether it can be said that the League of Nations is in any true sense created by the association of only three of the allied and associated governments."

To Senator Fall's questions relating to the disposition of Germany's possessions, the president said the arrangement in the treaty conveyed no title to the allied or associated powers, but merely "intrusts disposition of the territory in question to their decision."

"Germany's renunciation in favor of the principal allied and associated powers," the president continued, "of her rights and titles to her overseas possessions is meant similarly to operate as vesting in those powers a trusteeship with respect to their final disposition and government."

Here Are the Twenty Queries.

The 20 questions answered by President Wilson, which were submitted to him by Senator Fall at the conference held at the White House Tuesday, are in brief as follows:

Questions I to IV—Could not the president, with the assent of congress, proclaim a status of peace with Germany and permit the resumption of trade?

Question V asks the president to define the establishment of the League of Nations and state "how many nations will have to ratify the peace treaty before such establishment will be perfected."

Question VI—Will the League of Nations reduce the high cost of living in the United States?

Asks About Neutrals.

Question VII—What do Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland and Switzerland think of the League of Nations? Will they join, and when?

Questions VIII and IX deal with resumption of commerce with Germany.

Question X asks if certain committees as stipulated in the league have been appointed and inquires to whom they make report.

Questions XI and XII—To whom does Germany renounce certain territorial rights which it is required to renounce under the treaty?

Question XIII inquires as to the disposition of overseas possessions by the United States.

Question XIV—What disposition is made of Germany's foreign possessions?

Questions XV, XVI and XVII ask for interpretations of certain phases of the league and the reason for the appointment of certain commissions.

Questions XVIII, XIX and XX—Why was the United States made a party in the appointment and fulfillment of certain missions in the settlement of foreign plebiscite questions?

The President's Reply.

President Wilson's letter to Senator Fall, replying to the senator's 20 questions on the treaty and the League of Nations, is as follows:

"My Dear Senator Fall:

"You left yesterday in my hands certain written questions which I promised you I would answer. I am hastening to fulfill that promise.

"I feel constrained to say in reply to your first question not only that in my judgment I have not the power by proclamation to declare that peace exists, but that I could in no circumstances consent to take such a course prior to the ratification of a formal treaty of peace. I feel it due to perfect frankness to say that it would in my opinion put a stain upon our national honor which we never could efface if, after sending our men to the battle field to fight the common cause, we should abandon our associates in the war in the settlement of the terms of peace and dissociate ourselves from all responsibility with regard to those terms.

"I respectfully suggest that, having said this, I have in effect answered also your second, third and fourth questions so far as I myself am concerned.

Peace When Treaty Is Ratified.

"Permit me to answer your fifth question by saying that the provisions of the treaty to which you refer operate merely to establish peace between the powers ratifying, and that it is questionable whether it can be said that the League of Nations is in any true sense created by the association of only three of the allied and associated governments.

"In reply to your sixth question, I can only express the confident opinion that the immediate adoption of the treaty, along with the articles of the covenant of the league as written, would certainly within the near future reduce the cost of living in this country as elsewhere, by restoring production and commerce to their normal strength and freedom.

"For your convenience, I will number the remaining paragraphs of this letter as the questions to which they are intended to reply are numbered.

"VII. I have had no official information as to whether Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, or Switzerland will join the league.

"VIII. I answered your eighth question in reply to a question asked me at our conference the other day. (This question referred to licensing of exports to Germany.)

"IX. In February, 1917, Spain was requested to take charge of American interests in Germany through her diplomatic and consular representatives, and no other arrangement has since been made.

"X. The committee to prepare plans for the organization of the league, for the establishment of the seat of the league and for the proceedings of the first meeting of the assembly, has been appointed, but has not reported.

"XI. Article 118 of the peace treaty, part IV, under which Germany renounces all her rights to territory formerly belonging to herself or to her allies was understood, so far as special provision was not made in the treaty itself, for its disposition, as constituting principal allied and associated powers the authority by which such disposition should ultimately be determined. It conveys no title to those powers, but merely intrusts the disposition of the territory in question to their decision.

"XII. Germany's renunciation in favor of the principal allied and associated powers of her rights and titles to her overseas possessions is meant similarly to operate as vesting in those powers a trusteeship with respect to their final disposition and government.

League to Pass on Disposition.

"XIII. There has been a provisional agreement as to the disposition of these overseas possessions, whose confirmation and execution is dependent upon the approval of the League of Nations, and the United States is a party to that provisional agreement.

"XIV. The only agreement between France and Great Britain with regard to African territory, of which I am cognizant, concerns the redisposition of rights already possessed by those countries on that continent. The provisional agreement referred to in the preceding paragraphs covers all the German overseas possessions in Africa as well as elsewhere.

"XV. No mention was made in connection with the settlement of the Saar basin of the service of an American member of the commission of five to be set up there.

"XVI. It was deemed wise that the United States should be represented by one member of the commission for settling the new frontier lines of Belgium and Germany, because of the universal opinion that America's representative would add to the commission a useful element of entirely disinterested judgment.

League to Pick Saar Commission.

"XVII. The choice of the commission for the Saar basin was left to the council of the League of Nations, because the Saar basin is for 15 years to be directly under the care and direction of the League of Nations.

"XVIII. Article 83 does in effect provide that five of the members of the commission of seven to fix the boundaries between Poland and Czecho-Slovakia should be nominated by certain countries because there are five principal allied and associated powers, and the nomination of five representatives by those powers means the nomination of one representative by each of those powers.

"XIX. No such commission has yet been appointed. (The commission referred to is that for the fixing of the Polish boundaries.)

"XX. It was deemed wise that the United States should have a representative on the commission set up to exercise authority over the plebiscite of Upper Silesia for the same reason that I have given with regard to the commission for settling the frontier line of Belgium and Germany.

"Sincerely yours,

"WOODROW WILSON."

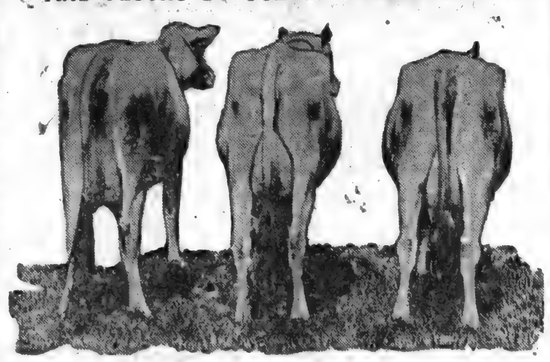
ALL FARMERS ASKED TO GRADE UP HERDS AND FLOCKS BY USE OF PURE-BRED SIRES



First Three Daughters of Sultana's Virginia Lad to Freshen.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Looking forward to future food needs of the country's increased population, the United States department of agriculture, in co-operation with the state agricultural colleges and other agencies interested in live stock improvement, announces a national better live stock crusade, to get actively in motion October 1 under the slogan of "Better Sires—Better Stock."

The plan is to hasten the replacement of the multitude of scrub domestic animals in the United States with purebred or high-grade stock and also to improve the quality of purebreds themselves. It has been evolved through long and careful observation of the live stock industry in this country and after extensive consultation with specialists and breeders.

Nation's Milk Average Low.

For many years this country has contained thousands of the finest specimens of live stock in the world, but in spite of that fact the quality and productive capacity of the average farm herd and flock is still low. For instance, the average dairy cow in the United States yields about 4,000 pounds of milk a year, a figure scarcely two-thirds the average production in some European countries, such as Denmark. The United States has thousands of cows which have milk yields of more than 12,000 pounds—double the Danish average—but on the other hand it has hundreds of thousands which are kept for milk and yet yield only a small fraction as much product as the best cows, though receiving nearly as much feed and care.

The difference in milk yield is due in large measure to a difference in breeding, but a herd of low production can be improved rapidly by the use of a purebred sire from a family of high producers.

More Sirloin on Well-Bred Cattle.

Among all classes of live stock a similar condition exists. Proper breeding of beef animals results in better and more uniform stock, having a greater percentage of desirable cuts of meat and a smaller quantity of bone, offal, and inedible parts. Likewise in swine, sheep, goats and poultry production, the kind of parent stock largely determines the quality and market value of the products. The crusade of improvement now to be undertaken is the outgrowth of investigations in genetics, of live stock observations in many countries, and a close study of public opinion. In most live stock regions of the world a gradual evolution toward better live stock has been taking place place for centuries. The rapidity of these changes has an important bearing on world commerce and on the prosperity of the nations in which improvement has been greatest.

Individual and community efforts in many cases have resulted in marked live stock progress in small areas. The islands of Jersey and Guernsey are familiar examples of this kind of accomplishment, but no large country so far has endeavored in an organized way to improve all its live stock simultaneously.

Live Stock Men Equal to Task.

Officials of the bureau of animal industry and others who have considered the problem from every angle are convinced that it is possible to hasten the natural course of live stock evolution with benefit to the nation. They are confident also that the live stock men of the country are eager to undertake the task.

The means of accomplishing most of the improvement, which affects about 200,000,000 head of live stock, besides poultry, will be through wider distribution and increased use of purebred sires and dams.

Once the use of purebred sires becomes general throughout the country, the process of grading up will be rapid. Many experiments and also practical experience, when good sires are used, show that within three generations most of the individuals in a scrub herd headed by a purebred male resemble purebred animals in appearance. In a few more generations, under skillful breeding, the former scrub stock is graded up to such an extent that for production of meat and other animal products, they are practically as useful as purebreds. The chief difference between a "high-grade" animal and a purebred is in the value for breeding. Only the latter can be used in producing purebred breeding stock. Moreover only purebreds are eligible to registry.

Official Emblem to Be Furnished.

The department of agriculture through its co-operative state agencies is preparing to supply live-stock raisers with printed information that tells in popular language the best animal breeding methods and the advantages to be derived from their use. In addition the department of agriculture is to furnish an official emblem, suitable for display, to every farmer agreeing to use only purebred sires and in other ways to co-operate in the better live stock effort. To obtain the emblem a farmer or breeder will be asked to fill out a simple blank showing the number and kind of live stock he possesses and also to declare that all his male breeding animals are purebreds. From the number and nature of the blanks received the department will be able to measure the progress of the crusade, and at the same time obtain valuable statistical information which will be made public at suitable intervals.

The betterment of the nation's live stock is by no means a new idea. The topic has been discussed at length from public platforms and in the agricultural press for many years. Agricultural colleges, breeders' associations, various live stock organizations, banking and business interests, live stock judges and experts—these and other forces are responsible chiefly for the progress already made and the sentiment for further development.

Organization of Campaign.

A general co-ordination of the work, however, now seems desirable, with a minimum of red tape and a maximum of red blood. So far as the activities of the department of agriculture in the crusade are concerned, the bureau of animal industry, in co-operation with the state colleges of agriculture, will be responsible for live stock policies, especially the breeding work and scientific problems. The states relations service of the department will work in co-operation with the colleges of agriculture for carrying the plan of action through the extension divisions to every live stock owner who can be reached. County agents and other field workers of the department and the colleges will be local sources of information and assistance.

While it is believed that stockmen of the country naturally look to agricultural officials to inaugurate a crusade of this kind, the problem primarily is one of adequate production and effective distribution. Responsibility for success depends accordingly on breeders and all live stock owners.

Response to Will of People.

For several months the department has been making an analysis of live stock sentiment as expressed in the farm press and in correspondence received in its various offices. Of all the topics discussed the need for a better quality of domestic animals has been pre-eminent.

To make the crusade against scrub live stock most effective the department welcomes constructive ideas and suggestions from all sources. The following classes of live stock are to be included in the campaign for improvement: Cattle, horses, asses, swine, sheep, goats, and poultry.

In spite of the conspicuous merits of the task about to be undertaken, there are also a number of obstacles. It is recognized that sentiment in favor of purebred sires, while strong, is by no means unanimous. To win the support of those who, through lack of interest or opposition, fail to take their part in the crusade against scrub live stock is one of the problems to be met.

The cost of desirable purebred sires is another important factor which has long been an obstacle to live stock improvement. Co-operative ownership divides the expense considerably, and the increased value of the young stock raised also helps to overcome that objection. In addition the campaign is expected to stimulate a greater production of purebred breeding stock of good quality.

Average Yearly Production of Two-Year Olds:

	Milk. Lbs.	Butterfat. Lbs.
Daughters	9,676	519
Dams	4,992	269

PUBLIC ROADS

EQUIPMENT FOR ROAD WORK

Tractors, Rollers, Concrete Mixers and Other Implements to Be Returned From France.

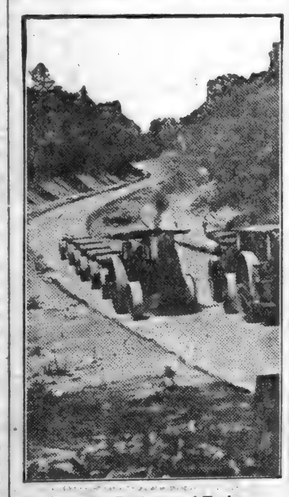
(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

At the request of the department of agriculture, the war department has ordered to be returned from France as soon as possible a large quantity of engineering equipment to be distributed by the department of agriculture, through the bureau of public roads, to the states for use in the construction and maintenance of federal aid highways. The equipment will be distributed to the states without charge, in accordance with recent legislation empowering the secretary of war to turn over to the secretary of agriculture surplus military equipment not needed for military purposes but valuable in highway construction work. The equipment will be apportioned on the basis of the allotments in the federal aid road act, in the same way that 20,000 army motortrucks are now being distributed by the bureau of public roads at the request of the state highway department.

The equipment which the secretary of war has been requested to return from France includes about 1,500 caterpillar tractors; about 400 road rollers, steam and gas driven; and a large number of concrete mixers, road graders, elevating graders, rock crushers, industrial locomotives, industrial railway track, dump cars, steam shovels, hoisting engines, electric motors, and quantities of smaller equipment.

In his letter requesting the return of this equipment the secretary of agriculture said:

"The highway construction program which the federal government and the states propose to begin immediately is the largest public undertaking contemplated in the near future. It offers an immediate field for the employment of labor and the use of materials that will help to stabilize business along a number of lines. The work has been expanded so suddenly that it has not been possible to make adequate provision for furnishing the necessary equipment, and previously all the available supply was absorbed by the demands of the war department.



Traction Engines and Trains.

"I am sending you this list as a result of a conference which I have just held with the executive of the American Association of State Highway officials, at which it was represented that the various states are very anxious to secure additional equipment of the kind indicated.

"I am thoroughly in sympathy with the efforts that are being made by the war department to aid returning soldiers in securing employment, and I am convinced that, if the equipment and supplies listed are made available, it will facilitate highway construction and thereby stimulate the employment of labor."

Newark, N. J.—"For about three years I suffered from nervous breakdown and got so weak I could hardly stand, and had headaches every day. I tried everything I could think of and was under a physician's care for two years. A girl friend had used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and she told me about it. From the first day I took it I began to feel better and now I am well and able to do most any kind of work. I have been recommending the Compound ever since and give you my permission to publish this letter."—Miss FLO KELLY, 476 So. 14th St., Newark, N. J.

The reason this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, was so successful in Miss Kelly's case was because it went to the root of her trouble, restored her to a normal healthy condition and as a result her nervousness disappeared.

PALESTINE LAND OF BEAUTY

Everywhere Nature Seems to Have Expressed Determination to Make the Country Lovely.

Palestine, in its endless variety of Nature, seems like a miniature land God made himself, a tiny epitome of the whole world. Or is it a lovely woman with a lovely soul?

Under a dazzling sky it curves in swift changing beauty through hill and valley from the river to the sea. Eve's mystery lurks in the sand stretches of Sinai. Feminine lure is in the purple-tinted mountains of Moab, a virgin calm in the Lake of Galilee under its misty veil. Jewels shine in Palestine's bosom, the emerald Garden of Gethsemane and the sapphire sea that clasps the fast-flowing Jordan by breathless Jericho.

In the spring the land is decked in garlands of orange and almond blossoms amid myrinds of tiny, vivid-hued flowers. And the indomitable will of Judea speaks in the low, stony, rounded hills with their determined tufts of growth. It is as if Judea said ot the world: "No ravager can despoil me. I WILL bloom."

Palestine is ageless running the gamut of the years in budding Galilee, in fertile Sharon, and touching eternity in the hoary loveliness of Jerusalem, where the century-old crevices are as beautiful as a mother's wrinkles to her son.

STIRRED IRE OF BOY SCOUT

Youngster Properly Rebuked Woman Who Threw Sacred Flag Into a Rubbish Receptacle.

Here is a pretty boy scout story. H. S. Hera of Germantown told it to Edward Bok, who passes it on to me.

"One thing I have always admired about the scouts," said Mr. Hera, "is that they are eager to teach the etiquette of the American flag.

"Some time ago I heard a woman storekeeper say that she had thoughtlessly thrown away a small American flag, and it somehow found its way into some rubbish about to be collected by the street cleaners.

"But only a short time after a box with waste, containing that soiled flag, had been put out on the curb, a wee little scout came into the store, saluted in grand military style and said:

"Madam, I found this flag out there in your rubbish. Don't you know that you should not insult the American flag that way? Then he handed the woman the flag and told her please not to let that occur again."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Envy.

Nineteen-year-old Henry has just come home from his first year in an Eastern college. His sixteen-year-old brother Bill looks on many changes in him with scorn, one which is responsible for the most of this scorn being Henry's bit of mustache. The other day Henry went into the bathroom to trim the edges of that imitation of a mustache and Bill happened in while the operation was in progress. For a few minutes he watched his brother in silence, and then he called to his mother:

"Oh, mother, be sure to have Jennie sweep up the bathroom immediately. Henry is trimming his beard and I don't want the little kids to get their feet all cut up!"—Indianapolis News.

SELF CONTROL (Temperance).

LESSON TEXT—Daniel 1:8-21.

GOLDEN TEXT—Every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things.—I Cor. 9:25.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Romans 14: 1-23; I Cor. 9:24-27.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Keeping away from things which may harm us.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The story of a boy who became a strong man.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC — Learning self-mastery.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—Self-control the secret of success.

It is somewhat strange that the lesson committee should select this Scripture as a temperance lesson, for it says nothing about temperance as ordinarily understood. Total abstinence from intoxicating liquor should be the law of every Christian's life, but it is not so taught in this Scripture.

I. Daniel Tested (vv. 5-7).

Daniel, while a tender youth, was torn from home ties and made a captive in a foreign land to be trained for service at the royal court. In order to be of the largest service it was necessary that he be brought to love the king and nation, and be detached from his own people and religion. To accomplish this they—

1. Appointed him a daily provision of the king's meat and wine (v. 5). This was for a twofold purpose: (1) To gain the good will of Daniel and his friends. Such recognition would encourage them to give themselves up to the king's service. (2) To supply them with food deemed suitable for their physical and mental development. To partake of the food offered was against Daniel's religion. His conscience would not allow him to partake thereof. Doubtless the meat and wine had connection with heathen feasts.

2. Changed name (v. 7).

The object of this was to obliterate national and religious connection, and to identify them with the heathen people. Daniel, which means "God is my Judge," was changed to Belteshazzar, meaning Bel's prince; Hananiah, which means "The gift of Jehovah," to Shadrach, meaning illumined by the sun god Rak; Mishael, which means "Who is as God," to Meshach, meaning who is like the goddess Sheshach; Azariah, which means "Jehovah is our help," to Abed-nego, meaning the servant of Nego. Behind this change of names was the attempt of Satan to wipe from the minds of these young men the name of the true God and to cause them to lose their place of separation.

II. Daniel Standing the Test (vv. 8-14).

Though a captive in a foreign land, Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the king's meat and wine. His home training was such that in this trying hour he had the decision of character to stand firm for his conviction. He obeyed the dictates of his conscience. While unflinchingly loyal to God he did not lose his gentlemanly courtesy. He requested to be tested ten days in the food which the law of his God allowed, agreeing to abide by the results. Loyalty to God and conscience need not interfere with gentlemanly behavior.

III. Daniel's Reward (vv. 15-21).

1. Physical health (v. 15). Godly and temperate living pays. The king's meat and wine would have been very palatable, but to have partaken would have been a compromise with his conscience. The exercise of self-control in this matter kept his conscience pure, and also improved his physical health.

2. Mental growth (vv. 17-20). He was ten times the superior of his associates.

3. Socially (v. 19). He stood before the king. He not only was next to the king, but became president of the college of wise men, and prime minister of the empire, continuing through several dynasties (v. 21).

4. Spiritually (v. 17). God revealed to him Nebuchadnezzar's dream and gave him visions stretching across the history of the world.

The secret of Daniel's success was (1) conscientiousness; (2) loyalty to God; (3) decision of character; (4) prayerfulness; (5) diligence; (6) courtesy.

Our Heavenly Father.

All of heaven and all of earth cannot contain God. There is something of himself left for the hearts of men. Just as the water which spills out of the full bucket is as good as any of the water in the bucket, so that part of God which dwells in the hearts of men is just as much of God as that of himself which dwells in heaven.

Living Influence.

Whatever definitions men have given of religion, I find none so accurately descriptive of it as this; that it is such a belief of the Bible as maintains a living influence on the heart and life.—Cecil.

Result of Christian Temper.

Peace is the proper result of the Christian temper. It is the great kindness which our religion doth us, that it brings us to a settledness of mind, and a consistency within ourselves.—Bishop Patrick.

Imitations Are Dangerous.

AN OHIO druggist writes to "The Practical Druggist," a prominent New York Drug Journal, as follows: "Please furnish formula for Castoria. All the formulas I have worked with are either ineffective or disagreeable to administer."

To this "The Practical Druggist" replies: "We do not supply formulas for proprietary articles. We couldn't if we wanted to. Your experience with imitative formulas is not surprising, but just what is to be expected. When Castoria is wanted, why not supply the genuine? If you make a substitute, it is not fair or right to label it Castoria. We can give you all sorts of laxative preparations for children, but not Castoria, and we think a mother who asks for Castoria would not feel kindly toward you if you gave her your own product under such a name."

No mother with a spark of affection for her child will overlook the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher when buying Castoria.

Children Cry For Fletcher's CASTORIA

Mothers Must Use Care.

Why do we so often call your attention to imitations of Fletcher's Castoria? Because it is a baby's medicine and imitations are always dangerous, particularly imitations of a remedy for infants.

Your druggist may not keep an imitation but they are to be found on drug-store shelves. Reliable druggists think only of the welfare of their customers. The other kind only of the greater profit to be made on imitations.

Your own judgment tells you that Fletcher's Castoria having for over thirty years at great expense held up its reputation, must jealously guard it. Then, it follows that this company must use the very best of material. Must employ experts in the selection of the herbs. Must retain skilled chemists in its manufacture.

Your same good judgment must tell you that these irresponsible imitators are trading on your credulity and the reputation built up by Mr. Fletcher, during all these years, for his Castoria.

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies, This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucus or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic cuts this slime and mucus and removes it. A nauceated feeling is sometimes experienced when this mucus is breaking loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appet te return and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

RATIFY PACT TO SAVE THE WORLD

Wilson Tells Senators That All Hinges on Action They Take on Treaty.

UNDER FIRE OF QUESTIONS

Declares Japan Not to Rule Shantung —Denies That Treaty Is a War Pact—Says Congress the Only War Maker.

Washington, Aug. 20.—In a conference at the White House unprecedented in American history, President Wilson discussed the peace treaty with the senate foreign relations committee, answered questions put by senators and gave out a stenographic transcript of the proceedings to the public.

Some of the inside details of the peace conference, how the League of Nations covenant was drawn, and other historic happenings were handed out verbatim for the world to read, in contrast to the time-honored procedure of secrecy, presidential and senatorial "confidence."

Nothing approaching the conference in that respect is recalled since George Washington went to the senate to discuss troubles with the Indians.

Urges Speedy Ratification.

Making a plea for ratification of the treaty that the world might be turned wholly back to a peace basis, the president said he saw no reasonable objection to the senate expressing its interpretation of the League of Nations covenant so long as those interpretations did not actually become part of the act of ratification.

If interpretations were part of the formal ratification, the president contended, long delays would follow, as other governments would have to "accept in effect the language of the senate as the language of the treaty before ratification would be complete." Most of the interpretations, the president said, seemed to him to suggest the "plain meaning of the instrument itself."

Must Get U. S. Consent.

The much-discussed article ten, the president told the senators, was not of doubtful interpretation when read in connection with the whole covenant. The council, he said, could only "advise," and as its action must be unanimous, the affirmative vote of the United States would be necessary for any question affecting it.

Article sixteen, the president said, provided that where there is a dispute found to be solely within the jurisdiction of one of the parties, under international law, the league council shall so report and make no recommendation for its settlement. Immigration, tariffs and the like, the president said, clearly came under that provision.

The plan for the league, finally submitted in Paris, the president said, had been built up first from a plan drawn by a British committee headed by a Mr. Phillimore and later included ideas from a plan drawn by General Smuts. From these and other discussions, coupled with the president's own ideas, the league plan was made.

Own Redraft Not Submitted.

His own private redraft of the Phillimore plan, the president said, was not submitted to the American peace mission. He had seen Secretary Lansing's proposals only informally.

The president said the United States would have "complete freedom of choice as to the application of force" in carrying out article ten of the league covenant.

The president told the committee the league council would have "nothing whatever" to do with deciding whether the United States had fulfilled its obligations in case of withdrawal from the league.

The conference was not held in the blue room, as had been planned, the president taking his visitors into the east room, where they were seated around a big table. Senator Lodge sat next to the president.

Japan Won't Rule Shantung.

To a query as to what sovereignty Japan retained in Shantung President Wilson said:

"She has not retained sovereignty over anything. I mean she has promised not to. Senator Borah has asked whether this understanding was oral or otherwise. I do not like to describe the operation exactly if it is not perfectly discreet. As a matter of fact, this was technically oral, but literally written and formulated and the formulation agreed upon."

President Wilson said he disagreed with the opinion given the committee by Secretary Lansing that Japan would have signed the treaty regardless of whether it contained the Shantung provision.

"When is the return (of Shantung to China) to be made?" asked Senator Johnson.

"That was left undecided, but we were assured at the time that it would be as soon as possible."

"Did not the Japanese decline to fix any date?"

"They did at that time, yes; but I think it is fair to them to say they could not at that time say when it would be."

Senator New—Mr. President, does not this indefinite promise of Japan's suggest the somewhat analogous case of England's occupation of Malta? She has occupied Malta for something like a century, I believe, under a very similar promise.

Declines to Answer.

The President—I hope you will pardon me if I do not answer that question.

Senator Fall asked who would defend the mandate territories against external aggression under the league, and the president replied that primarily the duty would rest with the mandatory power.

Only through action by congress shall the United States lend any military assistance to other members of the League of Nations. This was stated emphatically by the president.

The United States is only under moral obligations to the other nations, the president said, declaring that the league covenant does not in any way detract from the power of the congress.

Asks About Other Treaties.

After the president had delivered his statement, Senator Lodge said:

"Mr. President, so far as I am personally concerned—and I think I represent perhaps the majority of the committee in that respect—we have no thought of entering upon arguments as to interpretations or points of that character; but the committee was very desirous of getting information on certain points which seem not clear and on which they thought information would be of value to have in consideration of the treaty which they, I think I may say for myself and others, desire to hasten in every possible way.

"Your reference to the necessity of action leads me to ask one question. If we have to restore peace to the world, it is necessary, I assume, that there should be treaties with Austria, Hungary, Turkey and Bulgaria. Those treaties are all more or less connected with the treaty with Germany. The question I should like to ask is, what the prospect is of receiving those treaties for action?"

Senate Cause of Delay.

The President—I think it is very good, sir, and so far as I can judge from the contents of the dispatches from my colleagues on the other side of the water, the chief delay is due to the uncertainty as to what is going to happen to this treaty. This treaty is a model of the others. I saw enough of the others before I left Paris to know that they are being framed on the same set of principles and the treaty with Germany is the model. I think that is the chief element of delay, sir.

Senator Lodge—They are not regarded as essential to the consideration of this treaty?

The President—They are not regarded as such, no sir; they follow this treaty.

Senator Lodge—I do not know about the other treaties, but the treaty with Poland, for example, has been completed.

Treaty With Poland Signed.

The President—Yes and signed; but it is dependent upon this treaty. My thought was to submit it upon the action on this treaty.

Senator Lodge then asked whether the president could show the committee the tentative League of Nations drafts submitted by Great Britain, France and Italy.

The President—I would have sent them to the committee with pleasure, senator, if I had found that I had them. I took it for granted that I had them; but the papers that remain in my hands remain there in a haphazard way. I can tell you the character of the other drafts. The British draft was the only one as I remember that was in the form of a definite constitution of a league. The French and Italian drafts were in the form of a series of propositions laying down general rules and assuming that the commission, or whatever body made the final formulations would build upon those principles if they were adopted. They were principles quite consistent with the final action.

In reply to Senator McCumber the president repeated that he felt it would be a mistake to embody interpretations in the resolution of ratification, saying: "We can interpret only a moral obligation. The legal obligation can be enforced by such machinery as there is to enforce it. We are therefore at liberty to interpret the sense in which we undertake a moral obligation."

The president said if reservations were embodied in the ratification "there would have to be either explicit acquiescence or the elapsing of a long enough time for us to know whether they (the other governments) were implicitly acquiescing or not."

One Common Tongue.

"There was one word," wrote an American Red Cross nurse serving in a French army hospital, "that we quickly learned in five languages. It was the word that came most often to the lips of sick or wounded soldiers when suffering or delirium wrung utterance from them. It is Mutter, mere, moeder, madre and mother."

Bird Rebuked.

Marguerite was accustomed to being told by her mother to keep still when any grown-up person present was speaking. One day her mother was telling something interesting when a canary in the room commenced singing at its loudest. Marguerite climbed upon a chair to the cage and shaking her finger at the bird said in a commanding tone, "You keep still! Don't you hear my mamma talking?"

State Happenings

Indianapolis.—"We will have fought to little purpose to destroy the autocracy of the kaiser if we are to submit in our own land to the autocracy of the mob," declared Gov. James P. Goodrich, addressing state troops mobilized here for duty at Hammond in connection with strike disorders there. The governor charged the militiamen to use "most vigorous exercise of force" should the occasion demand. "More than 140,000 of the young men of Indiana were recently called to defend the honor and integrity of the nation in a foreign war," he said. "You are now called upon a less glorious but no less important mission. Ours is a government of laws and not of men. If men are to be permitted to substitute the inclination of their own wills and their own selfish desires for obedience to the law, then we must soon reach the unhappy condition which now obtains in Russia. I trust that it will not be necessary to resort to extreme measures, but those who have arrayed themselves against society should be taught that they cannot do so with impunity."

Hammond.—Every striking employee of the Standard Steel Car company plant in Hammond awoke on Friday to find an Indiana militiaman at his door. While the military guards held the 1,700 strikers to their homes the gates of the shops were thrown open and imported strikebreakers walked in unmolested. The strikers were to be prevented from gathering in the streets. A double guard was placed about the homes of several particularly violent I. W. W. agitators. If the men were to meet it would be under police surveillance in a hall outside the city limits or among the sand dunes. The strikers rejected the company's offer of compromise and the determination to fill the ranks with strikebreakers resulted. Officials of the unions have urged the men not to resort to violence.

Shelbyville.—James P. Rowe of this city and Samuel D. Rowe of Eaton his brother are the oldest living twins who are veterans of the Civil war. The announcement was made by Mr. Rowe of this city, after he had been notified of the fact by the United States pension bureau. The men are also believed to be the oldest set of twins in the state. They were born November 11, 1835, in Franklin county. James Rowe went to Greensburg Tuesday to attend the reunion of his regiment, the Thirty-seventh Indiana infantry. Both men were members of Company G and enlisted in 1861.

Indianapolis.—How cost prices of about forty principal food articles have varied since last year and how they have varied in the last six years is shown in tabulations prepared by Dr. George F. Edenharter, superintendent of the Central Hospital for the Insane, Indianapolis. Doctor Edenharter is one of the state institution's biggest buyers and his years of experience at the Central hospital have given him an exceptional opportunity to observe price trends from the near-household standpoint.

Marion.—Many firemen attended the convention of the Indiana State Firemen's association, which opened in the Elks' hall with the address of welcome by Elkanah Hulley, mayor of Marion. Rev. John C. White gave the invocation which was followed by an address by Alfred Hogston, state senator. One of the important matters before the meeting was the platoon system or two 12-hour shifts which was advocated before the last legislature but failed to become a law.

Sullivan.—James R. Riggs of Sullivan wired Vice President Thomas R. Marshall his acceptance of the appointment as assistant secretary of the department of agriculture of the United States. Mr. Riggs was called to Washington, D. C., last week by Vice President Marshall and offered the position. He returned to Sullivan Saturday. Mr. Riggs is an extensive land owner, farmer, banker and general business man of Sullivan.

Hammond.—In a mysterious explosion three persons were probably fatally injured at the Victor Photo company at Griffith, six miles east of here. The injured are: Henry Plogh, superintendent, burned about face and body; Alvin Lightfoot, workman, skull fractured, and Miss Vera Wray, stenographer, internal injuries and scalp torn.

Anderson.—The sale of government food at the post office here is not meeting with the demand expected, but J. L. Fraley, postmaster, believes that several family clubs now being organized to buy food in large quantities will soon increase the number of orders filed here.

Greenfield.—The eightieth session of the Indiana Methodist Protestant conference opened in this city with Dr. W. W. Lineberry of Jonesboro, president of the conference, 45 ministers and 30 lay delegates answering roll call.

Indianapolis.—The sugar situation in Indiana is even worse than it was last week and worse than it was at any time during the war, according to Stanley Wyckoff, federal sugar distributer for Indiana. It may be that many persons will have to go without sugar in their coffee before the shortage is relieved. The supplies of retail dealers are running low and there is not enough sugar in sight to replenish them. The sugar equilization board policy is to distribute sugar in a way to keep canneries and other manufacturing industries from closing down and throwing labor out of work.

Indianapolis.—A. Mitchell Palmer, attorney general of the United States, has recommended that congress extend federal control to clothing and other necessities through a new law, similar to the act which gave the government supervision over the production and distribution of food during the war. Dr. Harry E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana, announced on his return from New York, where he was in conference with the attorney general and food administrators of several states. "The attorney general informed us," said Doctor Barnard, "that he has asked congress to establish federal control over clothing and other necessities, which will prevent speculation and the taking of unreasonable profit." That profiteering in sugar, which was widespread and flagrant, according to reports, is abating in Indiana and that the movement for making public other cases where unfair prices are charged for commodities has already had an influence in the state, was the opinion of Doctor Barnard on the Indiana situation.

Indianapolis.—The state highway commission advertised for bids for the improvement of six more roads of an aggregate mileage of 57,188 miles. This is to be the last of the road contracts let for construction beginning this year. Bids for the improving of the roads by brick, concrete or bituminous concrete will be received by the commission until 10 a. m., September 4. The roads to be contracted for are: Lincoln highway, Lake county, Schererville east to Porter county line, 11.382 miles; National road, Vigo county, West Terre Haute, west to Illinois state line, 4.66 miles; Range line road, Howard and Tipton counties, from south line of Center township, Howard county, south seven miles; from north line Center township, north to Miami county line, 2.98 miles; French Lick road, Warrick county Boonville to Vanderburg county line, 10.275 miles, French Lick road, Lawrence county, Bedford to Orange county line, 12.436 miles; Jackson highway, Johnson county, Greenwood to Franklin, 8.452 miles.

Hammond.—The most important development in the Standard Steel Car strike riots here was that the United States Housing corporation of Hammond, which had 450 government houses built at the car plant during the war for use of ordnance employees, wired to the government at Washington that its property is jeopardized by the strike disorders and that the Hammond police are unable to prevent rioting. It is possible that this telegram may result in bringing federal instead of state troops to Hammond. Conferences were held between strikers and car plant officials, with the hope that an agreement may be reached, with Mayor Brown acting as mediator, whereby the men can go back to work soon.

Crawfordsville.—At a mass meeting of school patrons resolutions were adopted calling for the resignations of Dr. E. W. Ream and W. B. Walkup, members of the school board, and also for the resignation of D. H. Elkenberry of Wishawaka, who was chosen recently to succeed Miss Anna Willson, school principal. The reinstatement of Miss Willson is also asked. Three mass meetings have been held in behalf of the deposed principal. The School Welfare Association of Crawfordsville was formed with the following officers: John C. Snyder, president; Arthur A. McCain, secretary, and Isaac C. Elston, treasurer.

Washington.—Twenty business and professional men were made defendants in a suit of $25,000 damages filed in the circuit court here by Walter C. Forster, proprietor of the Atlas hotel. The litigation is the outgrowth of a sensational incident in the Liberty loan campaign in September, 1918, when Rev. J. W. Darby, pastor of the First Christian church, and another canvasser, called at the hotel to solicit Forster to purchase bonds. An argument ensued, it is said, and ended, Rev. Darby says, by Forster threatening him with a butcher knife.

Darlington.—A large grain elevator owned by the Farmers' company at Kirkpatrick, eight miles north of here, was destroyed by fire, entailing a loss estimated at more than $75,000. The elevator was built within the last year at a cost of more than $20,000. It was filled with grain, said to be worth about $60,000. The building and grain were insured.

Franklin.—The engagement of Prof. Roscoe Abbett of this city to Miss Pearl Stutsman of Goshen has been announced. The wedding will take place at Goshen, August 28. Professor Abbett is instructor of physical education in the Goshen high school and Miss Stutsman has been connected with the schools of Nappanee for four years.

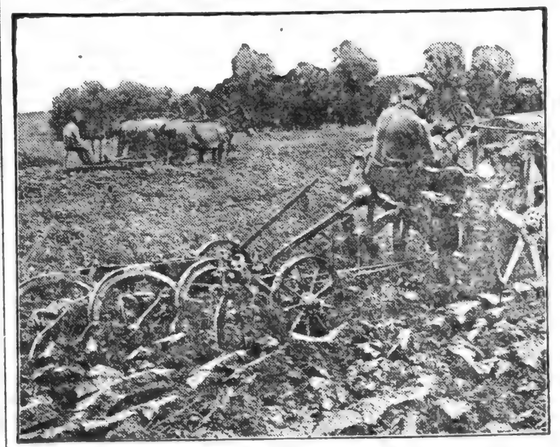
Wabash.—Six forward and four backward somersaults with a passenger in his plane is the record claimed by Pilot Sweeney, flyer for an aviation company here. Miss Vesta Golding, newspaper woman, was the passenger.

Shelbyville, Aug. 23.—Shelby county crops were benefited greatly by .55-inch of rain which fell in the county during the last twenty-four hours.

Indianapolis.—A. R. Heiser, seventy, member of the Indianapolis livestock firm of Clark, Wysong & Co., was crushed to death when his automobile, said to have been driving at terrific speed, went wild on a road near Martinsville, skidded into a bank and turned over. Two men and two women in the car were only slightly hurt.

Richmond.—A call has been extended to the Rev. Howard Brown of Moorsville, Ind., by the East Main Street Friends church here. He has accepted the call, according to Timothy Nicholson, a prominent member of the church.

PREPARING GOOD SEED BED FOR WHEAT REQUIRES MUCH TIME AND HARD WORK



This Man Is Doing Right—While the Tractor Plows the Mules Do the Harrowing and Plow Out the Corners That the Tractor Cannot Reach.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A good seed bed for wheat can not be made unless the work is begun early, and a good seed bed is the most important thing in growing wheat.

Many things are necessary in preparing a good seed bed, but the first essential is time. It can not be done in a day nor yet in a week. There must be many days of settling. There must be some good, packing rains. And there ought to be frequent cultivation of the soil.

Those things are necessary because a good seed bed for wheat must be firm and it must be moist. The upper 3 inches of soil must be mellow and finely divided, and the portion beneath must be well compacted.

Plowing May Vary.

Essentials to successful wheat growing vary widely in different sections of the country, but the United States department of agriculture regards these things as basic essentials anywhere that wheat is grown in the United States. The wheat experts of the department may recommend one type of plowing for one section and other kinds of plowing for other sections, and even no plowing at all under some conditions, but a finely pulverized top soil well packed down and forming a perfect union with the subsoil is urged for every section.

Early plowing and thorough tillage of the plowed soil results in retaining the water that is in the soil and catching and storing the water that falls after cultivation is begun. A firm seed bed under this mulch enables the young wheat plants to make use of the subsoil waters. Sufficient moisture is thus assured for the germination of the seed and for the early fall growth of the seedlings—a much more important thing, the experts say, than many wheat growers consider it. It does not apply, as some might think, just to the semi-arid regions.

"If the importance of this thing were generally recognized throughout the so-called humid areas," says one of the wheat experts of the department of agriculture, "there would be less frequent losses from drought and better wheat crops would result. In this area, the mistake is often made of thinking that there will always be enough moisture present for a maximum crop of wheat. The result is that poor crops are often harvested where a little more attention to moisture preservation would have assured good crops."

Harrow Close After Plow.

If wheat is to be grown on stubble land, the ground should be plowed at least 7 inches deep immediately after harvesting the crop of grain. The harrow should closely follow the plow, both operations being done the same day and as close together as possible. After that, cultivation should be given as often as necessary—which usually means as often as possible—until the wheat is sown. The cultivation may be with harrow or disk or drag or roller. It accomplishes several desirable things. It kills the weeds. It settles the subsoil and makes it firm. It maintains a soil mulch above. And none of these things can be done if the ground is not plowed early.

Now, "early plowing" is an indefinite term. It may mean one thing to one farmer and an entirely different thing to another farmer. But it is a thing for which exact dates can hardly be set. July plowing is certainly early plowing for winter wheat. The first half of August is early plowing. Later than that is likely to be late plowing. "As early as possible" is the safe rule. As soon as the wheat or oats or clover is off, is the time to begin plowing.

Disking a Help.

Some makeshifts may help a good deal. If it is absolutely impossible to begin plowing as soon as the ground is clear of this year's crop, double disking should be restored to at once. That chops up and at least partly pulverizes the top soil—makes a passable mulch and retains much of the moisture until the plowing can be done. Also, it kills the weeds or, at least, cripples them enough to minimize the damage they can do by sucking the moisture out of the soil.

If wheat is to follow a cultivated crop, such as corn or soy beans, frequent cultivation given to that crop will maintain a soil mulch and preserve moisture. If level cultivation is practiced, a good seed bed usually can be prepared by disking and harrowing after the crop is removed. For wheat are present, however, it may be advisable to go over the ground with a disk harrow, plow shallow and disk again.

If wheat is to follow cotton, the stalks should be plowed under as soon as picking can be finished and the plowing should be deep enough to bury the stalks completely—that by way of destroying the boll weevil. Disking or harrowing is not advisable, as it unearths the buried stalks. The land should be firmed with a roller and the wheat sown with a disk drill.

Late Plowing Should Be Shallow.

There are said to be exceptions to all general rules, and there may be one or two exceptions to this rule of early plowing for wheat. If it rains a great deal during July and early August, early plowing can not be done. But, fortunately, the exception appears to come in just there. Early plowing is not so essential in wet seasons. But it may be well to observe this caution: If you have to plow late, plow shallow where there is danger of winter killing. Shallow plowing makes the firming of the seed bed an easier matter and is a measure of insurance against winter killing.

TRACTOR USEFUL FOR PLOWING WHEAT LAND

Larger Number of Farmers Using Machines This Year.

Main Objects Sought Are High Quality of Work and Economy of Time —Greater Thought in Laying Out Plans Needed.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The tractor will be used for plowing wheat land this year by a larger number of farmers than ever before perhaps. The farmer who is using a tractor for the first time will have to solve a great many problems. And many farmers who have used tractors for one or more years have not yet found the best way of avoiding all the difficulties of tractor plowing.

The two main things to be considered in tractor plowing, as in any other kind of plowing, are high quality of work and economy of time. They are somewhat harder to attain with the tractor than with horse plows, or, to put it more accurately, greater care in planning is necessary to attain them.

The initial problem is to lay out the field in such a way as to attain a two-fold result—a high-class job of plowing over the entire field with as little use as possible of horse-drawn plows in starting and finishing, and to consume as little time as possible in turning and in running with the plows out of the ground.

To lay out a field exactly right for tractor plowing is something of an engineering feat, but the United States department of agriculture has undertaken to simplify it as much as possible. Bulletin 1045, Laying Out Fields for Tractor Plowing, contains diagrams of 18 ways of laying out fields. Nine of these are methods in which the plows are lifted at the ends. The other four are methods in which the plows are left in the ground in going across the ends. They are designed for both rectangular and irregular fields, and one or another of them will be found adapted to practically any piece of ground that is to be plowed. The bulletin is free.

"READING THE FUTURE."

Synopsis—The man who tells this story—call him the hero, for short—is visiting his friend, John Saunders, British official in Nassau, Bahama Islands. Charles Webster, a local merchant, completes the trio of friends. Conversation turning upon buried treasure, Saunders produces a written document purporting to be the death-bed statement of Henry P. Tobias, a successful pirate, made by him in 1859. It gives two spots where two millions and a half of treasure were buried by him and his companions. The conversation of the three friends is overheard by a pock-marked stranger. The document disappears, Saunders, however, has a copy. The hero, determined to seek the buried treasure, charters the auxiliary schooner Maggie Darling. The pock-marked man is taken on as a passenger for Spanish Wells. Negro Tom catches and cures a "sucking fish" as a mascot for the hero; it has the virtue of keeping off the ghost of the pirate who always guards pirate treasure. On the voyage somebody empties the gasoline tank and the hero starts things. He and the passenger clash. He lands the passenger, who leaves a manifesto bearing the signature, "Henry P. Tobias, Jr." With a new crew, the Maggie Darling sails and is passed by another schooner, the Susan B. The hero lands on Dead Men's Shoes. The "sucking fish" proves a mascot indeed and carries the hero through a fight, which is followed by several funerals. He searches for buried treasure and Old Tom falls into a pirates' cave.

"Mind yourself, sar," he called cheerily, and indeed it was a problem to get down to him without precipitating the loose earth and rock that were ready to make a landslide down the hole, and perhaps bury him forever.

But, looking about, I found another natural tunnel in the side of the hill. Into this I was able to worm myself, and in the dim light found the old man and put my flask to his lips.

"Anything broken, do you think?"

Tom didn't think so. He had evidently been stunned by his fall, and another pull at my flask set him on his feet. But as I helped him up, and, striking a light, we began to look around the hole he had tumbled into, he gave a piercing shriek and fell on his knees, jabbering with fear.

"The ghosts! the ghosts!" he screamed.

And the sight that met our eyes was certainly one to try the nerves. Two figures sat at a table—one with his hat tilted slightly and one leaning sideways in his chair in a careless sort of attitude. They seemed to be playing cards, and they were strangely white—for they were skeletons.

I stood hushed, while Tom's teeth rattled at my side. The fantastic awe of the thing was beyond telling. And then, not without a qualm or two, which I would be a liar to deny, I went and stood nearer to them. Nearly all their clothes had fallen away, hanging but in shreds here and there. That the hat had so jauntily kept its place was one of those grim touches Death, that terrible humorist, loves to add to his jests. The cards which had apparently just been dealt, had suffered scarcely from decay—only a little dirt had sifted down upon them, as it had into the rum glasses that stood, too, at each man's side. And as I looked at the skeleton jauntily facing me, I noticed that a bullet hole had been made as clean as if by a drill in his forehead of bone—while, turning to examine more closely his silent partner, I noticed a rusty sailor's knife hanging from the ribs where the lungs had been. Then I looked on the floor and found the key to the whole story. For there, within a few yards, stood a heavy sailor's chest, strongly bound around with iron. Its lid was thrown back and a few coins lay scattered at the bottom, while a few lay about on the floor. I picked them up.

They were pieces of eight!

Meanwhile Tom had stopped jabbering and had come nearer, looking on in awed silence. I showed him the pieces of eight.

"I guess these are all we'll see of one John P. Tobias' treasure, Tom," I said. And it looks as if these poor fellows saw as little of it as ourselves. Can't you imagine them with it there at their feet—perhaps playing to divide it on a gamble, and meanwhile the other fellows stealing in through some of these rabbit runs—one with a knife, the other with a gun—and then: off with the loot and up with the sails. Poor devils! It strikes me as a very pretty tragedy—doesn't it you?"

Suddenly—perhaps with the vibration of our voices—the hat toppled off the head of the fellow facing us in the most weird and comical fashion—and that was too much for Tom, and he screamed and made for the exit hole. But I waited a minute to replace the hat on the rakish one's head. As I was likely often to think of him in the future I preferred to remember him at the moment of our first strange acquaintance.

Book II.

CHAPTER I.

Once More in John Saunders' Snuggery.

Need I say that it was a great occasion when I was once more back safe in John Saunders' snuggery, telling my story to my two friends, John and Charlie Webster, all just as if I had never stirred from my easy chair, instead of having spent an exciting month or so among sharks, dead men, blood-lapping ghosts, card-playing skeletons and such like?

My friends listened to my yarn in characteristic fashion, John Saunders' eyes like mice peeping out of a cupboard, and Charlie Webster's huge bulk poised almost threatening, as it were, with the keenness of his attention. His deep-set kind brown eyes glowed like a boy's as I went on, but by their dangerous kindling at certain points of the story, those dealing with our pockmarked friend, Henry P. Tobias, Jr., I soon realized where, for him, the chief interest of the story lay.

"The —— rebel!" he roared out once or twice, using an adjective peculiarly English.

For him my story had but one moral—the treason of Henry P. Tobias, Jr. The treasure might as well have had no existence, so far as he was concerned, and the grim climax in the cave drew nothing from him but a preoccupied nod. And John Saunders was little more satisfactory. Both of them allowed me to end in silence. They both seemed to be thinking deeply.

"I must say you two are a great audience," I said presently, perhaps rather childishly nettled.

"It's a very serious matter," said John Saunders, and I realized that it was not my crony but the secretary to the treasury of his Britannic majesty's government at Nassau that was talking. As he spoke he looked across at Charlie Webster, almost as if forgetting me. "Something should be done about it, eh, Charlie?" he continued.

"—— traitor!" roared Charlie, once more employing that British adjective. And then he turned to me:

"Look here, old pal, I'll make a bargain with you, if you like. I suppose you're keen for that other treasure now, eh?"

"I am," said I, rather stiffly.

"Well, then, I'll go after it with you—on one condition. You can keep the treasure, if you'll give me Tobias. It would do my heart good to get him, as you had the chance of doing that afternoon. Whatever were you doing to miss him?"

"I proposed to myself the satisfaction of making good that mistake," I said, "on our next meeting. I feel I owe it to the poor old captain."

"Never mind; hand the captain's rights over to me—and I'll help you all I know with your treasure. Besides, Tobias is a job for an Englishman—eh, John? It's a matter of 'king and country' with me. With you it would be mere private vengeance. With me it will be an execution; with you it would be a murder. Isn't that so, John?"

"Exactly," John nodded.

"Since you were away," Charlie began again, "I've bought the prettiest yawl you ever set eyes on—the Flamingo—forty-five over all, and this time the very fastest boat in the harbor. Yes! she's faster even than the Susan B. Now I've a holiday due me in about a fortnight. Say the word, and the Flamingo's yours for a couple of months, and her captain too. I make only that one condition."

"All right, Charlie," I agreed; "he's yours."

Whereat Charlie shot out a huge paw like a shoulder of mutton and grabbed my hand with as much fervor as though I had saved his life or done him some other unimaginable kindness. And as he did so his broad, sweet smile came back again. He was thinking of Tobias.

While Charlie Webster was arranging his affairs so that he might be able to take his holiday with a free mind I busied myself with provisioning the Flamingo, and in casually chatting with one and another along the water front, in the hope of gathering some hint that might guide us on our coming expedition. I thought it possible, too, that chance might thus bring me some information as to the recent movements of Tobias.

In this way I made the acquaintance of several old salts, both white and black, one or two of whom time and their neighbors had invested with a legendary savor of the old "wrecking days," which, if rumor speaks true, are not entirely vanished from the remoter corners of the islands. But either their romantic halos were entirely due to imaginative gossip, or they themselves were too shrewd to be drawn, for I got nothing out of them to my purpose.

One afternoon in the course of these rather fruitless if interesting investigations among the picturesque shipyards of Bay street I had wandered farther along that historic water front than is customary with sightseeing pedestrians, and had come to where the road begins to be left alone with the sea, except for a few country houses here and there among the surrounding scrub—when my eye was caught by a little store that seemed to have strayed away from the others—a small timber erection painted in blue and white with a sort of sea-wildness and loneliness about it, and with large, naive lettering across its lintel announcing itself as an "Emporium" (I think that was the word) "of Marine Curiosities."

I pushed open the door. There was no one there. The little store was evidently left to take care of itself. Inside it was like an old curiosity shop of the sea, every available inch of space, rough tables and walls littered and hung with the queer and lovely bric-a-brac of the sea. Presently a tiny girl came in, as it seemed, from nowhere and said she would fetch her father. In a moment or two he came, a tall, weathered Englishman of the sailor type, brown and lean, with lonely blue eyes.

"You don't seem afraid of thieves," I remarked.

"It ain't a jewelry store," he said, with the curious soft sing-song intonation of the Nassau "conch."

"That's just what I was thinking it was," I said.

"I know what you mean," he replied, his lonely face lighting up as faces do at unexpected understanding in a stranger. "Of course there are some that feel that way, but they're few and far between."

"Not enough to make a fortune out of?"

"Oh! I do pretty well," he said; "I mustn't complain. Money's not everything, you see, in a business like this. There's going after the things, you know. One's got to count that in too."

I looked at him in some surprise. I had met something even rarer than the things he traded in. I had met a merchant of dreams, to whom the mere handling of his merchandise seemed sufficient profit: "There's going after the things, you know. One's got to count that in too."

Naturally we were neck-deep in talk in a moment. I wanted to hear all he cared to tell me about "going after the things"—such "things!"—and he was nothing loth, as he took up one strange or beautiful object after another, his face aglow, and he quite evidently without a thought of doing business, and told me all about them—how and where he got them, and so forth.

"But," he said presently, encouraged by my unfeigned interest, "I should like to show you a few rarer things I have in the house, and which I wouldn't sell, or even show to everyone. If you'd honor me by taking a cup of tea we might look them over."

So we left the little store, with its door unlocked as I had found it, and a few steps brought us to a little house I had not before noticed, with a neat garden in front of it, all the garden beds symmetrically bordered with conch shells. Shells were evidently the simple-hearted fellow's mania, his revelation of the beauty of the world. Here in a neat parlor, also much decorated with shells, tea was served to us by the little girl I had first seen and an older sister, who, I gathered, made all the lonely dreamer's family. Then, shyly pressing on me a cigar, he turned to show me the promised treasures. He also told me more of his manner of finding them, and of the long trips which he had to take in seeking them, to out-of-the-way cays and in dangerous waters.

He was showing me the last and rarest of his specimens. He had kept, he said, the best to the last. To me, as a layman, it was not nearly so attractive as other things he had shown me—little more to my eye than a rather commonplace though pretty shell; but he explained that it was found, or had so far been found, only in one spot in the islands, a lovely, seldom-visited cay several miles to the northeast of Andros island.

"What is it called?" I asked, for it was part of our plan for Charlie to do a little duck shooting on Andros, before we tackled the business of Tobias and the treasure.

"It's called —— Cay nowadays," he answered, "but it used to be called Short Shrift island."

"Short Shrift island!" I cried in spite of myself, immediately annoyed at my lack of presence of mind.

"Certainly," he rejoined, looking a little surprised, but evidently without suspicion. He was too simple and too taken up with his shell.

"It is such an odd name," I said, trying to recover myself.

"Yes! those old pirate chaps certainly did think up some of the rummiest names."

"One of the pirate haunts, was it?" I queried with assumed indifference.

"Supposed to be. But one hears that of every other cay in the Bahamas. I take no stock in such yarns. My shells are all the treasure I expect to find."

"What did you call that shell?" I asked.

He told me the name, but I forgot it immediately. Of course I had asked it only for the sake of learning more precisely about Short Shrift island. He told me innocently enough just where it lay.

"Are you going after it?" he laughed.

"Oh! well," I replied, "I am going on a duck-shooting trip to Andros before long, and I thought I might drop around to your cay and pick a few of them up for you."

"You Don't Seem Afraid of Thieves."

"It would be mighty kind of you, but they're not easy to find. I'll tell you exactly—" He went off, dear fellow, into the minutest description of the habits of ——, while all the time I was eager to rush off to Charlie Webster and John Saunders and shout into their ears—as later I did at the first possible moment that evening: "I've found our missing cay! Short Shrift island is ——" (I mentioned the name of a cay, which, as in the case of "Dead Man's Shoes," I am unable to divulge.)

"Maybe!" said Charlie, "maybe! We can try it. But," he added, "did you find out anything about Tobias?"

CHAPTER II.

In Which I Am Afforded Glimpses Into Futurity—Possibly Useful.

Two or three evenings before we were due to sail, at one of our snuggery conclaves, I put the question whether anyone had ever tried the divining rod for treasure in the islands.

Old John nodded and said he knew the man I wanted, a half-crazy old negro back there in Grant's Town—the negro quarter spreading out into the brush behind the ridge on which the town of Nassau proper is built.

"He calls himself a 'king,'" he added, "and the natives do, I believe, regard him as the head of a certain tribe. The lads call him 'Old King Coffee'—a memory I suppose of the Ashantee war. Anyone will tell you where he lives. He has a name as a preacher—among the Holy Jumpers!—but he's getting too old to do much preaching nowadays. Go and see him for fun anyway."

So next morning I went.

I had hardly been prepared for the plunge into "Darkest Africa" which I found myself taking, as, leaving Government house behind, perched on the crest of its white ridge, I walked a few yards inland and entered a region which, for all its green palms, made a similar sudden impression of pervading blackness on the mind which one gets on suddenly entering a coal-mining district after traveling through fields and meadows.

"Old King Coffee" predicts an interesting future for the hero.

Didn't Get the Point.

One morning while teaching school, I noticed that Willie was wearing his rubbers while the lessons were in progress. I remonstrated with him, telling him to take off his rubbers or they would injure his eyes.

"But they are new!" exclaimed Willie. I patiently explained why that was all the more reason why they should hurt his eyes."

"But please," said Willie in a pleading voice, "I won't look at them."—Exchange.

Lift off Corns!

Doesn't hurt a bit and Freezone costs only a few cents.

With your fingers! You can lift off any hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the hard skin calluses from bottom of feet.

A tiny bottle of "Freezone" costs little at any drug store; apply a few drops upon the corn or callus. Instantly it stops hurting, then shortly you lift that bothersome corn or callus right off, root and all, without one bit of pain or soreness. Truly! No humbug!

Unappreciated Attention.

"Gwendolyn must be very fond of you.

"What makes you think so?" said Miss Cayenne coldly.

"Every year she gets up a birthday party for you."

"Merely a delicate method of calling attention to my age."

IF THIN AND NERVOUS, TRY PHOSPHATE

Nothing Like Plain Bitro-Phosphate to Put on Firm, Healthy Flesh and to Increase Strength, Vigor and Nerve Force.

When one stops to consider the host of thin people who are searching continually for some method by which they may increase their flesh to normal proportions by the filling out of ugly hollows, the rounding off of protruding angles with the attendant bloom of health and attractiveness, it is no wonder that many and varied suggestions along this line appear from time to time in public print.

While excessive thinness might be attributed to various and subtle causes in different individuals it is a well-known fact that the lack of sufficient phosphorous in the human system is very largely responsible for this condition. Experiments on humans and animals by many scientists have demonstrated beyond question of doubt that a body deficient in phosphorous becomes nervous, sickly and thin. A noted author and professor in his book, "Chemistry and Food Nutrition," published in 1918, says: "* * * that the amount of phosphorous required for the normal nutrition of man is seriously underestimated in many of our standard text books."

It seems to be well established that this deficiency in phosphorous may now be met by the use of an organic phosphate known throughout English speaking countries as Bitro-Phosphate. Through the assimilation of this phosphate by the nerve tissue the phosphoric content when absorbed in the amount normally required by nature soon produces a welcome change in our body and mind. Nerve tension disappears, vigor and strength replace weakness and lack of energy, and the whole body soon loses its ugly hollows and abrupt angles, becoming enveloped in a glow of perfect health and beauty and the will and strength to be up and doing.

CAUTION:—While Bitro-Phosphate is unsurpassed for the relief of nervousness, general debility, etc., those taking it who do not desire to put on flesh should use extra care in avoiding fat-producing foods.

E. R. KINSEY

Life of Walter Whitehurst

Private Walter Scott Whitehurst, son of John and Mary Whitehurst, was born in Newville, Ind., August 30, 1893, and spent his entire life in this community. He was kind, obliging and courteous, loyal to his friends, and well liked by young and old.

About four years ago he joined the fraternal order of Knights of Pythias, being a member of the Newville K. of P. lodge, No. 487, serving one year as Keeper of Records and Seals

He answered his country's call May 27, 1918, leaving Auburn for Camp Taylor, Ky., where he entered Fifth Company, Second Battalion, 137th Infantry. Here he remained until June 20th, when he was sent to Camp Beauregard, Louisiana. He was here changed to Company G, 154th Infantry, 39th Division, remaining till August, being then sent to Newport News, Va., and from there direct to Quincy, France, arriving about August 22, being there but seven weeks and one day, when he received multiple gunshot wounds October 11, 1918, from which he died the following day at Field Hospital No. 127; aged 25 years, 1 month and 12 days, being absent from home only nineteen weeks and 4 days.

His letters home were always cheerful, telling his relatives not to worry, as he was all right, and only doing his duty by obeying his country's call. He never complained about camp life, often speaking of it as not being as happy as home life, but that the war must be won as soon as possible. And thus the life of one of Newville's brave young men was sacrificed upon the altar of his country.

The communication from the National Headquarters of the American Red Cross at Washington, D. C., in answer to inquiries concerning him, states that he received a military burial, his grave being marked with a cross and his identification tag, and the address of the chief of the Registration Service was also sent, to secure the exact location of his grave. The entire community sympathizes with the family, and hopes in time, that they will be comforted by the thought that he did not give his life in vain. He is one of the heroes whom the whole world is honoring, and to whom we owe our blessing of peace.

Surviving him are his mother and three sisters, Mrs. Hazel Tustison, his twin sister, Mrs. Inez Cramer, and Mrs. Lucille Shroyer. His father and four sisters have preceded him to the Great Beyond.

"Soldier, rest! Thy warfare o'er,
Sleep the sleep that knows not breaking;
Dream of battle-fields no more,
Days of danger, nights of waking.
In the land beyond the sea,
Hands unseen thy couch are strewing,
Fairy strains of music fall,
Every sense in slumber dewing.
Soldier, rest! Thy warfare o'er,
Dream of battle-fields no more,
Sleep the sleep that knows not breaking,
Morn of toil, nor night of waking."

Chastine Victorious

Word was received by J. E. Pomeroy and J. M. Life, attorneys for Chastine Johnston Thursday in the case of the State vs. Johnson, that the supreme court has upheld the decision of DeKalb court in quashing the indictment of the DeKalb county grand jury for perjury against Mr. Johnston.

Mr. Johnston was indicted in the filing of an affidavit with the DeKalb county exemption board that Almond Burns was evading the conscription act. Later it was shown that Mr. Burns was above the draft age.) The first indictment was quashed. The grand jury was then recalled and Mr. Johnston was re-indicted. This indictment was also quashed. The state then appealed the case to the supreme court with the above result.

Former Citizen Dies.

Word has been received from Mrs. Frank Harper of Wooster, Ohio, stating that Mrs. Susana Huffman, formerly of St. Joe, passed away on August 17th., with dropsy and Brights disease. She was very poorly for five weeks preceeding her death, so much so that she was unable to lie down but a few minutes at a time, sitting in her chair most of the time. She was 82 years, 3 months and 24 days old and in her long sickness she was never heard to complain in the least. She had many friends here who will be shocked to learn of her passing away. She had all arrangements made for her leaving and had chosen her text from Hebrews 4:9. Her songs chosen were as follows: "I will sing you a song of that beautiful land," "Asleep in Jesus" and "Jesus Lover of My Soul."

Mr. George does not know what he will do yet but he expects to call on the company this week and make arrangements for his future work The routes at this place, through the summer season demand driving twice a week, and once through the winter.

The Hadsell family reunion was held on Wednesday of last week at the Fair grounds, Hicksville, and was attended by 80 members. The reunion next year will be held at Robison Park, Ft. Wayne.

Word reached St. Joe, Monday, that the barn on the old Betz farm south of Spencerville, was burned, destroying about 50 tons of hay and about 250 bushels of wheat besides many other valuables about the barn. It is also reported that the cause is thought to be contributed to smoking. During the day a man had stopped to see Mr. Miller, who lives there, and in their conversation at the barn, the man lighted his pipe and not long after this it was discovered that the barn was on fire. This is the supposition.

WILSON GREETED BY BIG CROWDS

Indianapolis Gathering So Large It Made Speaking Almost Impossible.

MEETS THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

President Runs Whole Gamut of Human Emotions on the First Day of His Trip—Substance of His Platform Speech.

Indianapolis, Sept. 5.—President Wilson's address in the coliseum of the state fair grounds here was practically a failure because of the size of the crowd on hand to hear him.

It was estimated at 12,000 to 15,000 persons and was so huge it was unmanageable. Added to this feature was the unfortunate occurrence which befell Governor Goodrich of Indiana, who was intended to introduce the president. The governor made the mistake of talking too long and the crowd resented it, causing great confusion.

Meets American People.

The president ran the whole gamut of human emotions on the first day of his transcontinental trip. Figuratively, he met the American people at every waystation and crossroads where his special train stopped. And the American people congratulated him, called him by his first name, shouted for him, whistled in his honor and asked him all manner of questions.

All along the route, whenever the train would stop, and the president would appear on the observation platform, there would be calls for Mrs. Wilson. And each time Mrs. Wilson would appear.

"It's much more worth your while to see her than to see me," said the president several times to his audiences, and the audiences, with many a "by cracky" to spare, would allow that the president was right.

Not a Candidate?

It was at Dennison that some one in the crowd reminded the president that in 1916 Mr. Hughes fared better in the country than he did.

"Well, you'll have things your own way in 1920, though," was the added assurance.

"Oh, no, no," laughed the president.

The president's confidence in his fight was shown better, perhaps, at Urbana, O., than any other place, in response to a question from the crowd regarding Shantung. Japan, he said, could not begin to return the province to China until three months after the ratification of the treaty.

The president was escorted to the Coliseum at the state fair grounds here by a committee which included Gov. James P. Goodrich, Mayor Jewett, Indianapolis; Thomas Taggart, former Gov. Samuel L. Ralston, and Franklin McCray, president of the Indiana branch of the League to Enforce Peace. Thousands of persons, including many visitors to the state fair, crowded the streets and cheered lustily as the president passed.

What the President Said.

"I have come upon a very sober errand—indeed, I have come to report to you upon the work which the representatives of the United States attempted to do at the conference of peace on the other side of the sea, because I realize, my fellow citizens, that my colleagues and I, in the task we attempted over there, were your servants."

Thus the president opened his address, continuing: "We went there with a distinct errand, which it was our duty to perform in the spirit which you have displayed in the prosecution of the war and in conceiving the purposes and objects of that war."

After recalling some of the circumstances of the war and the conditions under which the treaty was formulated, the president said:

"I want to point out to you what apparently has escaped the attention of some of the critics of the League of Nations, that the heart of the League of Nations does not lie in any of the portions which have been discussed in public debate.

"The great bulk of the provisions of that covenant contained these engagements and promises on the part of the states which undertook to become members of it.

"That in no circumstances will they go to war without first having either submitted the question to arbitration—in which case they agree to abide by the result, or having submitted the question to discussion by the council of the League of Nations, in which case they will allow six months for the discussion, and engage not to go to war until three months after the council has announced its opinion upon the subject under dispute.

"So that the heart of the covenant of the league is that the nations solemnly covenant not to go to war for nine months after a controversy becomes acute."

Defends Article X.

Later, taking up article X, he said: "You have heard a great deal about article X of the covenant of the League of Nations. Article X speaks the conscience of the world. Article X is the article which goes to the heart of this whole bad business, for that article says that the members of this league—and that is intended to be all the great nations of the world—engage to resist and preserve against all external aggression the territorial integrity and political independence of the nations concerned.

"That promise is necessary in order to prevent this sort of war recurring, and we are absolutely discredited if we fought this war and then neglect the essential safeguard against it.

"We engage, in the first sentence of article X, to respect and preserve from external aggression the territorial integrity and the existing political independence, not only of the other member states, but of all states, and if any member of the league disregards that promise, then what happens?

"The council of the league advises what should be done to enforce the respect for that covenant, on the part of the nation attempting to violate it. And there is no compulsion upon us to take that advice—except the compulsion of our good conscience and judgment.

"So that it is perfectly evident that if, in the judgment of the people of the United States, the council adjudged this was not an occasion for the use of force, there would be no necessity on the part of the congress of the United States to vote the use of force. But there could be no advice of the council on any such subject, without a unanimous vote, and the unanimous vote would include our own."

Force of Economic Boycott.

The president called attention to the provisions in the treaty for an absolute economic boycott of recalcitrant nations and predicted the complete efficacy of such action, continuing:

"I dare say that some of those ideas are new to you, because it is true, as I said this forenoon, in Columbus, that apparently nobody has taken the pains to say what is in the covenant of the League of Nations.

"They have discussed three—chiefly three—out of twenty-six articles, and the other articles contain the heart of the matter; that instead of war there shall be arbitration; instead of war there shall be discussion; instead of war there shall be the closure of intercourse; that instead of war there shall be the irresistible pressure of the opinion of all mankind.

"I am arguing this thing with you, my fellow citizens, as if I had any doubt of what the verdict of the American people would be. I haven't the slightest doubt. I just wanted to have the pleasure of pointing out to you how absolutely ignorant of the treaty, and of the covenant, some of the men are who have been opposing it.

"If they do read the English language they do not understand the English language as I understand it. If they have really read this treaty and this covenant they only amaze me by their inability to understand what is plainly expressed. So that my errand upon this journey is not to argue these matters, but to recall you to the real issues which are involved."

Touches on Irish Question.

Alluding evidently to the Irish question, Mr. Wilson said:

"There were a good many delegations that visited Paris waiting to be heard by the peace conference who had real causes to present and which ought to be presented to the view of the world.

"But we had to point out to them that they did not happen, unfortunately, to come within the area of settlement; that their questions were not questions which were necessarily drawn into the things that we were deciding. . . .

"I therefore want to call your attention, if you will turn it up when you go home, to article XI, following article X of the covenant of the League of Nations.

"That article XI, let me say, is the favorite article in the treaty so far as I am concerned. It says that every matter which is likely to affect the peace of the world is everybody's business and that it shall be the friendly right of any nation to call attention in the league to anything that is likely to affect the peace of the world or the good understanding between nations, upon which the peace of the world depends, whether that matter immediately concerns the nation drawing attention to it or not.

"There is not an oppressed people in the world which cannot, henceforth, get a hearing at that forum."

In closing, the president explained the necessity for the Shantung settlement, and then challenged the opponents of the treaty and league to suggest a better way to secure world peace.

SCRAPS

Floating mooring buoys have been made of concrete by an English inventor.

It has been estimated that 100,000,000 rubber stamps are in use in the United States.

The science of bell-casting has been practiced in one English foundry for nearly 350 years.

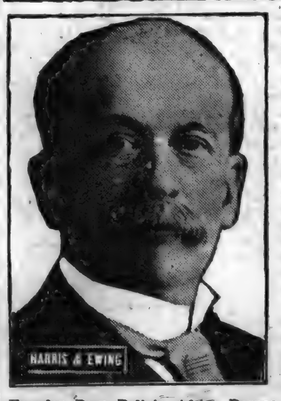
The British and Foreign Bible society issues the Scriptures in upwards of 370 languages and dialects.

When Legislators "Pair."

When a legislator wishes to be absent at the time when an important vote is to be taken, he finds some member who intends to vote on the other side of the question and arranges a "pair" with him. That is, the second legislator agrees to refrain from voting, as an accommodation to the first. The net result when neither vote is cast is the same as if both had voted on opposite sides. Both legislators can then be absent if they wish without loss or gain to either side.

WHO'S WHO in the WORLD

C. D. WALCOTT AND THE SMITHSONIAN



Charles D. Walcott, secretary of the Smithsonian institution in Washington, has issued an illustrated account of the field work of the last year by its staff and collaborators. The Smithsonian was established by federal statute in 1846 under the terms of the will of James Smithson (1765-1829), who bequeathed in 1826 the sum of $540,000 to the United States "for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men." Smithson was the natural son of the duke of Northumberland and said that his bequest would make his name better known than his father's. The income of the Smithsonian is now about $100,000 a year.

One of the most important activities of the Smithsonian institution is the exploration of little-known regions of the world. Among the regions visited by the 22 separate expeditions are many states in this country, Chile, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, Africa, Borneo and Celebes. The explorations, all of which were in the interest of science, include work in geology, botany, zoology, anthropology, archeology, ethnology and astrophysics.

United States field parties and special investigators looked into many interesting things. The botanical work consisted largely of investigation of grasses and timber in the Southwest, including timberline (11,000 feet) on Longs Peak in Rocky Mountain National park, Colorado, where the exhibit is unexcelled. The little-known region of the Ten Thousand Islands in Florida furnished new information concerning the Seminole Indians there.

WILL JUDGE LINDSEY GO TO JAIL?

Two hundred and fifty days in jail for a principle. That is the penalty that Judge Ben B. Lindsey, the famous "kids' judge" of Denver, expects to pay for holding inviolate the confidence of a small boy. The supreme court of the state has ruled that he must carry out the sentence. Judge Lindsey has taken an appeal to the United States Supreme court, but lawyers say there is no federal question involved and they expect the Supreme court to deny jurisdiction.

The only alternative is the payment of a fine of $500. Judge Lindsey has flatly refused to pay this fine and says that he will go to jail for life rather than do so. He maintains that in spite of his conviction he is not guilty of contempt of court. Friends have offered to pay the fine and costs for him, and even the children have offered to raise the money.

The "kid" in the case is Neal Wright, who is now in the United States army in France. His father was murdered. His mother confessed to the murder. Then Neal confessed that he killed his father. What he told Judge Lindsey is the nub of the case. The state contended that the boy's confession to the judge would have convicted his mother.

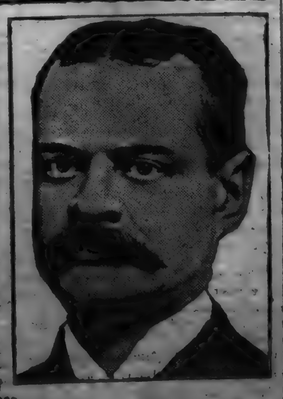
While the trial of Mrs. Wright was in progress, Judge Lindsey was called to the witness stand. He refused to relate Neal Wright's confession.

SENATOR KELLOGG'S LICENSING BILL

Senator Kellogg of Minnesota has introduced a bill that has stirred up much discussion. In presenting it Senator Kellogg said, among other things:

"The bill requires all corporations engaged in interstate commerce and having a capital or assets of $10,000,000 or over to take out a federal license. It further provides for a forfeiture of the license if the corporation shall enter into any contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade, or shall monopolize commerce, or attempt to monopolize it. This would give the federal trade commission a supervisory jurisdiction over such corporations, and their license would be subject to forfeiture if they engage in a combination to raise or fix prices, engage in unfair methods of competition for the sake of crushing out their competitors, or any of the other abuses which have been in the past commonly employed to monopolize commerce. It is my opinion that prosecution under the present antitrust act is not a sufficient remedy. There should be a department of the government having power of supervision, not necessarily interfering with the business of the country, but possessing the power to investigate, publish the facts, and take immediate action to revoke a license if a corporation abuses its power."

ASTOR GIVES HIS SONS MILLIONS



Deeds of trust have been filed in the registrar's office in New York city on behalf of William Waldorf Astor, conveying all of his real estate in New York city, or elsewhere, to the Farmers' Loan and Trust company as trustee in trust for his two sons, Waldorf Astor and Capt. John Jacob Astor.

No statement could be obtained from Viscount Astor's lawyers as to the cause of this big transfer, but it is evidently in keeping with his policy to escape a heavy inheritance tax law, which is 5 per cent on bequests over $1,000,000.

Under the transfer in trust are land and buildings valued at more than $50,000,000, this would mean a saving to the estate of $2,500,000 in inheritance taxation.

Among the more valuable properties transferred are the Hotel Astor, assessed at $4,050,000; the Astor theater, assessed at $1,002,000, and the Astor apartments, assessed at $1,525,000.

Viscount Astor was born in New York in 1848. He was United States minister to Italy, 1882-85. He has lived in England since 1890, became a British subject in 1900 and was given his title in 1916.

INDIANA STATE NEWS

Indianapolis.—Sweeping increases in the valuations of a number of corporations in Indiana were announced at Indianapolis by the state board of tax commissioners as the result of corporation assessment reviews during the third session of the board, which closed Thursday. Assessments of approximately 2,000 corporations were reviewed by the board. A comparatively small number received a reduction in the assessments made by the county boards of review and in some instances the valuation was not changed. In the large majority of cases, however, material increases were made by the board. On the whole the action of the board on corporation assessments will add millions of dollars to the state tax duplicate. A number of Indianapolis concerns came in for an increase in valuations. In some cases the valuations were increased more than 300 per cent. Firms in Fort Wayne, Anderson, Richmond, Marion, Evansville, Terre Haute and in the Calumet region of the Lake county and other populous centers were given substantial increases in valuations. The Indiana Steel company of Gary was increased about $6,500,000. Nearly $2,000,000 was added to the valuation of the Gary Land company. One of the large Fort Wayne concerns to come in four a big increase was the Bass Foundry and Machinery company, which was boosted about $1,500,000.

Richmond.—High cost of living and the war are directly responsible for shortage of ministers, according to the Rev. Somerville Light, district superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal church, Richmond district. "The war caused a large number of men that were in the ministry to leave their pulpits to enter the service either in the Y. M. C. A., the Red Cross or as chaplains, and a large number of these have not returned," the Rev. Mr. Light said. "The highly commercial attitude taken by many during the war depleted the ranks of the ministry. When calls came for men to take highly lucrative positions a number of men left the pulpit for more remunerative work. "Here, too, the cost of living comes in. With the ever-increasing cost of living, ministers became unable to support themselves on their salaries, and as a result were forced to seek employment in order to maintain their homes."

Indianapolis.—The Indiana state fair, overcrowded with exhibits in all departments and with a program overflowing each day with attractions, opened its gates at Indianapolis on Monday. The exposition was nearer ready for visitors than it ever was on the opening day, and the preparation of exhibits was rushed through the morning. The new women's building, from which the construction force was withdrawn to complete its work after the fair is over, contained a large force of exhibitors who were busy arranging displays of fine arts, flowers and culinary products. The whole exposition hummed with industry over Sunday, live stock arriving in the barns and pavilions. The "midway" carnival shows pitched their tents, and a tractor and grader lent by the Marion county board of commissioners remade the drives which had been torn up in building a sewer system.

Indianapolis.— Arraignment of 12 Indianapolis food handling firms indicted by the Marion county grand jury on charges of violating the Indiana cold storage law, will take place in criminal court about Sept. 15. Meat packing houses, commission firms and storage companies and their managers are named in the 96 indictments returned. Prosecutor Carlis Adams asserted that the firms and managers would be placed on trial during September. Violations of the 1911 cold storage law are charged in the indictments, especially that section of the statute which provides that foodstuffs must be stamped with the date of entry and departure from cold storage warehouses. Another provision of the law to prevent food hoarding specifies that the products shall not remain in storage more than nine months.

Anderson.—Because of a shortage of help at the plant of the Fame Canning company at Anderson, mechanical husking machines are being used to husk sweet corn from 1,200 acres in the vicinity of Anderson. Farmers who sell corn to the factory at $15 a ton are permitted to take home husks and cobs for live stock feed. The Fame company is also paying $15 a ton for tomatoes.

Terre Haute.—The Indiana Bituminous Coal Operators' association announced at Terre Haute that the production of coal by Indiana mines for the week ended August 23 was 514,262 tons. This was the greatest output for any week of the year except one in January. The operators say the demand for coal keeps increasing and that there is still a shortage of coal cars.

Evansville.—John H. Barton of Evansville was arrested here on a bigamy charge at Washington, D. C. Word was received from that city to arrest Barton, but no particulars were received. Barton will be taken to Washington for trial.

Portland—The Detamore plant, belonging to the Union Traction company, has been offered to the city of Portland for $18,000, and a deal probably will be closed up in a few days. This move has been approved by the citizens of Portland and the factory owners, who have been demanding more light and power current.

Indianapolis—"The American labor movement has fought every iam that did not stand for Americanism since its inception," declared James C. Shanessy, of the labor trades department of the American Federation of Labor, in the opening address of the thirty-fifth annual convention of the Indiana State Federation of Labor at Tomlinson hall in Indianapolis. More than 500 delegates attended. Mr. Shanessy laid part of the blame for "the present social unrest" on the lack of sufficient immigration restrictions in past years. A paid lobby of laboring men had been in Washington for several years, he said, trying to impress on the legislators the importance of restricting immigration until the foreigners that had already come to this country could be educated. Restrictions were not passed, he declared, and as a result the country has been flooded with workers who have had no chance to learn American ideals. "American laboring men can never resort to force to gain the rights they seek," Mr. Shanessy declared. "The 4,000,000 workingmen under the Federation of Labor do not wish brutally to force their beliefs down the throats of other men and women."

Indianapolis. — Pamphlets said to have been issued by a German publishing house containing pro-German propaganda, which were introduced at the weekly luncheon of the American club, were filed in the office of L. Ert Slack, United States district attorney, by George Standke, president of the club. The pamphlets were received by one of the members of the club. They asked whether the reader knew the 21 reasons why President Wilson should be impeached, if he knew why trying the kaiser would be a dangerous precedent, if he knew that the British first used poison gas, and told "how to ship food to Germany." Mr. Slack is not in the city, and the pamphlets will be referred to him on his return.

Newcastle.—The high cost of fish was lowered substantially in Newcastle and Henry county when the six-acre pond, on the farm of Walter Hogue, four miles west of Newcastle, was drained, and hundreds of pounds of fish were distributed free of charge. When Mr. Hogue decided to reclaim the land, he gave the people of the county an opportunity to obtain the free fish. More than 1,000 persons were supplied with fish. Some had to be content with carp, which is not recognized as the best kind for eating, but black bass were distributed equally as freely. One man who knew nothing about fish except that it was being given away without charge, had to be content with "suckers." He took about a bushel and seemed satisfied.

Terre Haute—The Vigo County War Fund association closed its books and the members of the office force resumed their prewar occupations. The last act was to forward to the different organizations $76,427.29. The association collected $310,447.04, which was disbursed as follows: American Red Cross (Terre Haute chapter), $25,000; American Red Cross (canteen department), $1,469.75; Young Men's Christian Association, $108,782.45; Young Women's Christian Association, $16,322; Knights of Columbus, $48,644; Jewish Welfare Board, $6,302.28; American Library Association, $3,802.28; War Camp Community Service, smileage books, $5,000.

Rome City.—Citizens of Noble and Lagrange counties have begun a period of waiting, pending the outcome of a visit of Richard Lieber of Indianapolis, director of the Indiana conservation commission and chairman of an investigating committee, which met here Monday and Tuesday to hear pleas for and against a drainage law passed by the 1919 state legislature. This act, which is commonly known as the Noble and Lagrange counties drainage bill, has become a point of issue in which hundreds of persons are taking active sides because of its possible effect on the numerous scenic lakes of the two counties.

Indianapolis.—The Home Telephone company, Fort Wayne, has filed with the public service commission a petition for an increase in telephone rates at Fort Wayne and New Haven. The company proposes for Fort Wayne $5 a month for business telephones, $3 for residence telephones, $1.75 for rural telephones; for New Haven $2.50 for business, $2 for residence and $1.50 for rural telephones. The rates are higher than federal rates ordered effective last June. The federal rates were higher than the previous rates.

Indianapolis.—Paul H. Krauss, Sr., who had been identified with downtown business interests of Indianapolis for almost half a century, died at Sheboygan, Wis., after a long illness. The body will be brought to Indianapolis by Paul H. Krauss, Jr., a son, who has been with him throughout his illness.

Goshen.—Hiram McDaniel, sixty-six years old, a railway crossing watchman at Goshen, was struck by a New York Central freight train and instantly killed. There are six tracks at the crossing. McDaniel is the third crossing watchman to meet death while on duty in this city. His wife for years has been an invalid.

Churubusco.—Mrs. William Jacquay, sixty-five years old, is dead at Churubusco from burns suffered when a can of oil exploded. She was cleaning a bed with the fluid and lighted a match to see better. The match fell into the can and the explosion followed, setting fire to her clothing.

Indianapolis.—An appeal to rally to labor's standard was addressed to 85,000 craftsmen of the Indiana Federation of Labor by John Fox, president, in an address at the convention of the organization here. More than 500 delegates were present. Report of election tellers will be made public later.

PIECES OF EIGHT

By Richard Le Gallienne

Being the Authentic Narrative of a Treasure Discovered in the Bahama Islands in the Year 1903. Now First Given to the Public.

Copyright by Doubleday, Page & Company.

"YOU YOUNG FOOL!"

Synopsis—The man who tells this story—call him the hero, for short—is visiting his friend, John Saunders, British official in Nassau, Bahama islands. Charles Webster, a local merchant, completes the trio of friends. Saunders produces a written document purporting to be the death-bed statement of Henry P. Tobias, a successful pirate, made by him in 1859. It gives two spots where two millions and a half of treasure were buried by him and his companions. The conversation of the three friends is overheard by a pock-marked stranger. The document disappears. Saunders, however, has a copy. The hero, determined to seek the buried treasure, charters a schooner. The pock-marked man is taken on as a passenger. On the voyage somebody empties the gasoline tank. The hero and the passenger clash, the passenger leaving a manifesto bearing the signature, "Henry P. Tobias, Jr." The hero lands on Dead Men's Shoes. There is a fight, which is followed by several funerals. The hero finds a cave containing the skeletons of two pirates and a massive chest—empty save for a few pieces of eight scattered on the bottom. The hero returns to Nassau and by good luck learns the location of Short Shrift island. Webster buys the yawl Flamingo, and he and the hero sail for Short Shrift island. As the Flamingo leaves the wharf a young fellow, "Jack Harkaway," jumps aboard and is allowed to remain.

"Fire away," answered the youth, blowing a cloud of cigarette smoke in a delicate spiral up into the morning sky; "but I've really told you all I have to tell."

"No; you haven't told us how you came to know of our trip, what we were supposed to be after, and when we were starting."

"That's true!" flushed the lad, momentarily losing his composure. Then, partly regaining it: "Is it necessary to answer that question?"

"Absolutely," answered Charlie, beginning to look really serious.

"Because, if you don't mind . . . well, I'd just as soon not."

"For that very reason I want to know. We are out on a more serious business than perhaps you realize, and your answer may mean more to us than you think."

"I'm sure it cannot be of such importance to you. Really, it's hardly fair for me to tell. I should have to give away a friend."

"I'm sorry, but I shall have to insist," replied Charlie, looking very grim.

"All right, then," answered the youth, looking him straight in the eyes, "put me ashore."

"No; I won't do that now, either," declared Charlie, sternly setting his jaw. "I'll put you in irons, rather—and keep you on bread and water—till you answer my questions."

"You will, eh?" retorted the youth, flashing fire from his fine eyes. And as he spoke, quick as thought, he leaped up on to the gunwale and, without hesitation, dived into the great glassy rollers.

"You Young Fool!" Exclaimed Charlie.

But Charlie was quick, too. Like a flash he grabbed one of the boy's ankles, so that the beautiful dive was spoiled; and there was the boy, hanging by an imprisoned leg over the ship's side, a helpless captive—his arms in the water and his leg struggling to get free. But he might as well have struggled against the grip of Hercules. In another moment Charlie had him hauled aboard again, his eyes full of tears of boyish rage and humiliation.

"You young fool!" exclaimed Charlie. "The water round here is thick with sharks; you wouldn't have gone fifty yards without one of them getting you."

"Sharks!" gasped out the boy, contemptuously. "I know more about sharks than you do."

"You seem to know a good many things I don't," said Charlie, whose grimness had evidently relaxed a little at the lad's display of mettle. Meanwhile, my temper was beginning to rise on behalf of our young passenger.

"I tell you what, Charlie," I interposed; "if you are going to keep this up, you'd better count me out on this trip and set us both ashore at West End. You're making a fool of yourself. The lad's all right."

The boy shot me a warm glance of gratitude.

"All right," agreed Charlie, beginning to lose his temper, too. "I'm damned if I don't." And, his hand on the tiller, he made as if to turn the boat about and tack for the shore.

"No! no!" cried the boy, springing between us and appealingly laying one hand on Charlie's shoulder, the other on mine. "You mustn't let me spoil your trip. I'll compromise. And, skipper, I'll tell your friend here all there is to tell—everything—I swear—if you will leave it to his judgment."

"Right-o!" agreed Charlie at last; so our passenger and I thereupon withdrew for our conference.

It was soon over and I couldn't help laughing aloud at the simplicity of it all.

"Just as I told you, Charlie," I exclaimed; "it's innocence itself." Turning to the lad, I said: "Dear boy, there is really no need to keep such a small secret as that from the skipper here. You'll really have to let me tell him."

The boy nodded acquiescence.

"All the same, I gave my word," he said.

When I told Charlie the innocent secret, he laughed as I had done, and his usual good humor instantly returned.

The stubbornly held secret had merely amounted to this: Our lad was acquainted with my conchologist, and had paid him a visit the very afternoon I did, had in fact seen me leaving the house. Answering to the boy's romantic talk of buried treasure and so forth, the shell enthusiast had thought no harm to tell him of our projected trip; and that was the whole of the mysterious matter.

Yet the day was not to end without a little incident which, slight though indeed it was, was momentarily to arouse Charlie's suspicions of our charming young companion once more.

Presently, in the far southwest, tiny points like a row of pins began very faintly to range themselves along the sky-line. They were palm trees, though you could not make them out to be such, or anything in particular, till long after. One darker point seemed closer than the rest.

"There's High Cay!" rang out the rich young voice of our passenger, whom we'd half forgotten in our tense scanning of the horizon. Charlie and I both turned to him together in surprise—and his face certainly betrayed the confusion of one who has let something slip involuntarily.

"Ho! ho! young man," cried Charlie, his face darkening again, "what do you know about High Cay? I thought this was your first trip."

"So it is," answered the boy, "on the sea."

"What do you mean: 'on the sea?'"

"I mean that I've done it many a time—on the chart. I know every bluff and roof and shoal and cay around Andros from Morgan's Bluff to Washington's Cut—"

"You do, eh?"

"On the chart. Why, I've studied charts since I was a kid, and gone every kind of voyage you can think of—playing at buccaneering or whaling, or discovering the north pole. Every kid does that."

"They do, eh?" said Charlie, evidently quite unimpressed. "I never did."

"That's because you've about as much imagination as a turnip in that head of yours," I broke in, in defense of my young Apollo.

"Maybe, if you're so smart," continued Charlie, paying no attention to me, "you can navigate us through the North Bight?"

"Maybe!" answered our youngster pertly, with an odd little smile. He had evidently recovered his nerve, and seemed to take pleasure in piquing Charlie's suspicions.

CHAPTER IV.

In Which We Enter the Wilderness.

Andros, as no other of the islands, is surrounded by a ring of reefs stretching all around its coasts. We were inside the breakwater of the reefs and the rolling swell of ocean gave way at once to a millpond calmness. We were at the entrance of North bight, one of the three bights which, dotted with numerous low-lying cays, breaks up Andros island in the middle and allows a passage through a maze-like archipelago direct to the northwest end of Cuba. Here on the northwest shore is a small and very lonely settlement—one of the two or three settlements on the else-deserted island—Behring's point.

Here we dropped anchor and Charlie, who had some business ashore, proposed our landing with him; but here again our passenger aroused his suspicions—though Heaven knows why—by preferring to remain aboard.

"Please let me off," he requested in his most top-lofty English accent. "You can see for yourself that there's nothing of interest—nothing but a beastly lot of nigger cabins, and dirty coral rock that will cut your boots to pieces. I'd much rather smoke and wait for you in peace;" and, taking out his case and lighting a cigarette, he waved it gaily to us as we rowed off.

He had certainly been right about Behring's point—Charlie was absurdly certain that he had known it before, and had some reason for not landing—for a more forlorn and poverty-stricken foothold of humanity could hardly be conceived; a poor little cluster of negro cabins, indeed, scrambling up from the beach, and with no streets but craggy pathways in and out among the gray clinker-like coral.

But it was touching to find even here that, though the whole worldly goods of the community would scarcely have fetched ten dollars, the souls of men were still held worth caring for; for presently we came upon a pretty little church, with a schoolhouse near by, while from the roof of an adjacent building we were hailed by a pleasant-faced white man, busy with some shingling.

It was the good priest of the little place, Father Serapion, disguised in overalls and the honest grime of his labor; like a true Benedictine, praying with his strong and skillful hands.

Father Serapion and Charlie were old friends, and Charlie took occasion to confide in him with regard to Tobias, and, to his huge delight, discovered that a man answering very closely to his description had dropped in there with a large sponger two days before. He had only stopped long enough to buy rum at the little store near the landing and had been off again through the bight, sailing west. Father Serapion, who knew Charlie Webster's shooting ground, promised to send a swift messenger should anything further of interest to us come to his knowledge within the next week or so.

Then we sailed away from Behring's point, due west through the North bight. Morning found us sailing through a maze of low-lying desert islands of a bewildering sameness of shape and size, with practically nothing to distinguish one from another.

We had hoped to reach our camp, out on the other side of the island, that evening, but that dodging the shoals and sticking in the mud had considerably delayed us. Besides, though Charlie and the captain both hated to admit it, we had lost our way. So night began to fall and, as there is no sailing in such waters at night, we once more cast anchor under a gloomy, black shape of land, exceedingly lonesome and forgotten-looking, which we agreed to call "Little Wood cay"—till morning.

Soon all were asleep except Sailor and me. I lay awake for a long time watching the square yard of stars that shone down through the hatch in our cabin ceiling like a little window looking into eternity, while the waters lapped and lapped outside, and the night talked strangely to itself. Next morning Charlie and the captain were forced to own up that the island, discovered to the day, was not Little Wood cay. No humiliation goes deeper with a sailing man than having to ask his way. Besides, who was there to ask in that solitude? Doubtless a cormorant flying overhead knew it, but no one thought to ask him.

However, we were in luck, for, after sailing about a bit, we came upon two lonely negroes standing up in their boats and thrusting long poles into the water. They were sponging—most melancholy of occupations—and they looked forlorn enough in the still dawn. But they had a smile for our plight. It was evidently a good joke to have mistaken Sapodilla cay for Little Wood cay. Of course we should have gone—"so." And "so" we presently went, not without rewarding them for their information with two generous drinks of old Jamaica rum.

One of our reasons for seeking Little Wood cay, which it proved had been close all the time, was that it is one of the few cays where one can get fresh water. "Good water here," says the chart. We wanted to refill some of our jars, and so we landed there, glad to stretch our legs, while old Tom cooked our breakfast on the beach, under a sapodilla tree.

Now that we knew where we were, it was clear, but by no means careless sailing to our camp. We were making for what is known as the Wide Opening, a sort of estuary into which a listless stream or two crawl through mangrove bushes from the interior swamps.

Here, a short distance from the bank, on some slightly ascending rocky ground, under the spreading shade of something like a stretch of woodland, Charlie, several years ago, had built a rough log shanty for his camp—one of two or three camps he had thus scattered for himself up and down the "out islands," where nearly all the land is no man's, and so every man's land. The particular camp at which we now arrived he had not visited for a long time.

Here Tom brought us our dinner and the dark began to settle down upon us, thrillingly lonely, and full of strange, desolate cries of night creatures from the mangrove swamps that surrounded our little oasis for miles. Sailor lay at our feet, dreaming of tomorrow's duck. His master's thoughts were evidently in the same direction.

"How are you with a gun?" he asked, turning to the boy.

"Oh, I won't brag. I had better wait till tomorrow. But, of course, you will have to lend me a gun."

"I have a beauty for you—just your weight," replied Charlie, his face beaming as it did only at the thought of his guns, which he kept polished like jewels and guarded as jealously as a violinist his violin, or an Arab his harem.

They Were Sponging.

Dawn was just breaking as I felt Charlie's great paw on my shoulder next morning. He was very serious. For a moment, as I sat up, still half asleep, I thought he had news of Tobias. But it was only duck.

I was scarcely dressed when Tom arrived with breakfast, and in a few minutes we had shouldered our guns and were crossing the half-mile of peaty waste that divided us from the marl lakes. Ahead of us, the crew were carrying the skiffs on their shoulders, and very soon we were each seated in regulation fashion on a canvas chair in front of our respective skiffs, with our guns across our knees and a negro behind us to do the poling.

Charlie went ahead, with Sailor standing in the bow quivering with excitement. The necessity of absolute silence, of course, had been impressed upon us all by the most severe of all sportsmen. Tom (who was poling me) and I understood that our job, and also that of my companion, was to steal behind one mangrove copse after another till we had got on the other side of a quacking flock of teal—which might then be expected to take flight in Charlie's direction and rush by him in a terrified whirlwind. This not very easy feat of stalking we were able to accomplish, thereby winning Charlie's immense approval and putting him in a splendid temper for the rest of the day; for, as the wild cloud swept over him, he was able to bring down no less than seven. Like a true sportsman, in telling the story afterward in John Saunders' smuggery, he averred that the number was nine!

The days that now followed for a week might be said to be accurate copies of that first day. But they were none the less delightful for that—for there is a sameness that is far indeed from monotony—though I will confess that, for my own tastes, toward the week-end the carnage of duck began to partake a little of that latter quality. Still, Charlie and Sailor were so happy that I wouldn't have let them suspect that for the world.

SCRAPS of HUMOR

Liked the Model.

"Oh, Mr. Kipling, is that your child?" said a gushing dame, stopping the poet on one occasion.

"Yes, madam," he answered, none too graciously.

"What a delightfully beautiful and healthy child she is."

"I am reasonably satisfied with her make," returned Kipling, and on he went.

Bad Influences.

"I wish," said Mr. Chuggins, morosely, "that they would succeed in rounding up all the auto bandits and rum runners in the world."

"They do a great deal of harm."

"Yes. And what frets me is to find every time I surrender for violating a traffic regulation that my greater fellow criminals have utterly spoiled the dispositions of the police."

Operating.

Church—Is your friend the doctor operating much now?

Gotham—Oh, yes; every day.

"Must be making a lot of money, then?"

"On the contrary, he's losing money. He's doing his operating in Wall street."

HER HOPES.

Alice—It's quite a secret, but I was married last week to Dick Gay!

Jane—Indeed! I should have thought you'd be the last person in the world to marry him.

Alice—Well, I hope I am.

Belated Recognition.

For genius so despised in life
A wondrous epitaph they plan.
'Tis strange how in this vale of strife
A funeral will improve a man.

Over the Garden Wall.

"She asked me to meet her by the garden wall."

"Yet you seem apprehensive."

"Yes; I'm afraid she intends to throw me over!"—London Tit-Bits.

Cruel Words.

Mrs. Eaton (after dining at the Socony's)—What did you think of that awful salad they compounded?

Mr. Eaton (fiercely)—Salad? What they compounded was a felony!

In at the Finish.

Askitt—What a long neck Miss Lanky has. Did you ever see her in a low-cut costume?

Tellit—Yes. Once.

Askitt—What did she look like?

Tellitt—She looked as though her dressmaker had her skinned a mile.

A Cheaper Way.

"My dear sir, nothing but an operation will save your life."

"What will it cost?"

"About 500."

"But I have only $150."

"In that case let's try what those pills will do."

An Unfashionable Problem.

Teacher—Johnny, if four men are working eleven hours a day—

Modern Youth—A moment, miss. None of those nonunion problems, please!—London Answers.

A Prudent Retreat.

"The young novelist they are lionizing here tonight has a very successful touch."

"Then let's go before they want us to meet him."

In Complete Accord.

"Did you ever try to lay down the law to your wife?"

"Yes," declared Mr. Meekton.

"Did you get by with it?"

"I did. After I had agreed to all the amendments she demanded she was perfectly satisfied to do as I said."

Quite Natural.

"Why do famous pianists always wear their hair long?"

"How stupid you are not to know. Isn't there a practical affinity between locks and keys?"

Can You Afford That Bad Back?

Nowadays, to be half crippled with a lame, aching back is mighty expensive. If you suffer with constant backache, feel lame, weak and all-played out; have dizzy, nervous spells and fits of "blues"—look to your kidneys. You can't do a full day's work without well kidneys and a sound, strong, back. Use Doan's Kidney Pills. Doan's have helped thousands of workers. Ask your neighbor!

An Indiana Case

John L. Richardson, carpenter, Main St., Redkey, Ind., says: "My back pained me so I thought it would break. My head ached, I was very nervous and my eyes were bad. My kidneys were in such bad condition that I could hardly pass the kidney secretions and they contained sediment. I tried different remedies but grew worse. I finally used Doan's Kidney Pills and the first box relieved me and in three months I was completely cured."

INDIGESTION

Caused by

Acid-Stomach

Millions of people—in fact about 9 out of 10—suffer more or less from indigestion, acute or chronic. Nearly every case is caused by Acid-Stomach.

There are other stomach disorders which also are sure signs of Acid-Stomach—belching, heartburn, bloat after eating, food repeating, sour, gassy stomach. There are many ailments which, while they do not cause much distress in the stomach itself, are, nevertheless, traceable to an acid-stomach. Among these are nervousness, biliousness, cirrhosis of the liver, rheumatism, impoverished blood, weakness, insomnia, melancholia and a long train of physical and mental miseries that keep the victims in miserable health year after year.

The right thing to do is to attack these ailments at their source—get rid of the acid-stomach. A wonderful modern remedy called EATONIC now makes it easy to do this.

One of hundreds of thousands of grateful users of EATONIC writes: "I have been troubled with intestinal indigestion for about nine years and have spent quite a sum for medicine, but without relief. After using EATONIC for a few days the gas and pains in my bowels disappeared. EATONIC is just the remedy I needed."

We have thousands of letters telling of these marvelous benefits. Try EATONIC and you, too, will be just as enthusiastic in its praise.

THE A B C OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

By DR. FRANK CRANE.

1. What is the League of Nations?

A. A union of the strongest civilized nations formed at the conclusion of the great war.

2. What is its object?

A. First, to promote the Peace of the World by agreeing not to resort to war. Second, to deal openly with each other, not by secret treaties. Third, to improve international law. Fourth, to co-operate in all matters of common concern.

3. Does it presume to end war?

A. No more than any government can end crime. It claims to reduce the liability of war.

4. What will be done to any nation that makes war?

A. It will be boycotted and otherwise penalized.

5. How else will the probability of war be lessened?

A. By voluntary, mutual and proportionate disarmament; by exchanging military information, by providing for arbitration, by protecting each nation's territorial integrity and by educating public opinion to see the folly of war.

6. What else does the League propose to do for Mankind?

A. (1) Secure fair treatment for labor,
(2) suppress the White Slave Traffic, the sale of dangerous Drugs, and the traffic in War Munitions,
(3) control and prevent Disease,
(4) promote the work of the Red Cross, and
(5) establish International Bureaus for other Causes that concern the human race.

7. Who are to be Charter Members of the League?

A. The United States of America, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, British Empire, Canada, Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, India, China, Cuba, Czecho-Slovakia, Ecuador, France, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Hedjaz, Honduras, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Serbia, Siam, Uruguay and the following states which are invited to accede to the covenant: Argentine Republic, Chili, Colombia, Denmark, Netherlands, Norway, Paraguay, Persia, Salvador, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Venezuela.

8. What other nations may join?

A. Any self-governing State which will agree to the rules of the League, provided the League accepts it.

9. What Agencies will the League have?

A. (1) An Assembly, composed of representatives of all the member Nations,
(2) a Council of Nine,
(3) a Secretary-General,
(4) a Mandatary Commission, to look after colonies, etc.,
(5) a Permanent Commission, for military questions,
(6) various International Bureaus; such as the Postal Union, etc.,
(7) Mandataries.

10. What is a Mandatary?

A. Some one nation designated by the League to attend to the welfare of "backward peoples residing in colonies of the Central Empires, or in territories taken from them." This is to be a "sacred trust," and in selecting a mandatary the wishes of the people of the area in question shall be the principal consideration.

11. Does the League mean a Supernation?

A. No. It interferes in no way with any Nation's Sovereignty, except to limit its power to attack other nations.

12. Can any Nation withdraw when it wishes?

A. Yes. The League is Advisory and Co-operative, not coercive.

13. Does the League put Peace above Justice and National Honor?

A. No. It puts Reason before Violence.

14. Does not the League take away the Constitutional right of Congress to declare war?

A. No. The League can advise war; Congress alone can Declare war.

15. Does it destroy the Monroe Doctrine?

A. Exactly the contrary. For the first time in history the other nations recognize the Monroe Doctrine; and extend it to all the world.

16. Does it not interfere with Treaty Making Powers of the United States?

A. No. It is a Treaty. We can make any Treaty we please.

17. Would we have had the Great War if we had had this League?

A. No. That War cost the world over 7,000,000 lives and 200,000,000,000 dollars.

18. Of what importance is the League?

A. It is the greatest deed of mankind in the history of the world.

19. Has not anyone a right to object to the League?

A. Yes. This is a free country. Anyone has a right to any opinion he cooses.

20. Why is the League so bitterly posed by a few?

A. Because, unfortunately, any eaty or League must be made by the esident, and a President is chosen a political party and many mems of the opposite party think they ot decry whatever he does.

Canning Compounds Are Harmful to Health and Regarded Unnecessary

Canning compounds sold under various trade names for use in home canning are often harmful to health and should never be used by housewives, say the specialists of the bureau of chemistry, United States department of agriculture. These preparations, which are usually in powdered form and contain salicylic acid or boric acid, are unnecessary since fruits and vegetables can be kept for long periods in perfect condition without any chemical preservatives whatever if proper methods of canning are followed.

The federal food and drugs act prohibits the use of harmful preservatives in foods which come within its juriadiction. The food laws of nearly every state in the Union forbid the sale within the state of foods which have been preserved with harmful substances. Although neither the federal or state laws apply to foods canned in the home and consumed there, it would seem that the housewife would not knowingly use, in the foods she preserves for her family, substances that are prohibited by law in foods for sale because the substances are injurious to health.

Menagerie Minus Water Feature of an Island Northeast of Pitcairn

Investigations recently made on the little-known Henderson or Elizabeth islands have led to the discovery of a curious little colony of zoological total abstainers. The island, which is uninhabited, is situated about 120 miles northeast of Pitcairn island—itself sufficiently out of the way, but famous as the home of the descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty. There is no water on it, not even a swamp, and it is only six miles long; yet it harbors quite a menagerie—a kind of rat, a lizard, described as very abundant, and no fewer than four kinds of birds, all peculiar to the island. These are a fruit-pigeon, a lorikeet, or honey-eating parakeet, a little rail or crake, and a reed-warbler. The strange thing about the inmates of this curious natural aviary of coral rock, surrounded by waves instead of wires, is that two of its inmates are birds usually associated with fresh water—the rail and the warbler. These, like the rest, must do without drinking, unless the dew can slake their thirst.

Familiar Loan Bank Sign Was Part of Coat of Arms

The famous Medici family, who practically ruled Florence during the thirteenth century, possessed a wonderful business instinct. Besides owning a large number of banks, this family had a monopoly of the loan business of that part of Italy. Their coat of arms was a shield with six balls emblazoned on it, but as the loan business spread to other parts of the world and slipped from the Medici grasp, three balls and the shield were dropped and the remaining three, suspended over a doorway, have always sufficed to indicate that within money can be borrowed.

SCHOOL DAYS

School starts this month and it is very important that all children should have their eyes examined before entering school. Slight defects, corrected in time, will prevent many years of suffering from nervous and kindred disorders arising from eyestrain.

Great injustice is done to many children by accusing them of obstinacy, inattention and stupidity, when, as a matter of fact they are only subjects of physical defects of sight. At the first glance they are slow to recognize a word, but it seems to come to them afterwards. Such children, with a proper adjustment of glasses, often become the brightest of scholars, so bring the children in NOW.

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies. This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucus or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic cuts this slime and mucus and removes it. A nauceated feeling is sometimes experienced when this mucus is breaking loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appet te return and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

AMERICA'S PLEDGE SACRED--WILSON

PRESIDENT SAYS OUR PROMISE TO TRY TO PREVENT FUTURE WARS SHOULD BE KEPT.

ONLY HOPE IS IN WORLD LEAGUE

Says Germany Would Not Have Dared to Strike If Nations Had Been Banded Against Aggression.

(By Mt. Clemens News Bureau.)

St. Louis—Displaying a high confidence that his fellow citizens in the great majority agree with him in his desire to end war forever, and that the peace treaty with its League of Nations inclusion is ratified by the senate, President Wilson is making a successful way across the country on the long journey he has undertaken for the purpose of laying before the plain people a report of his work in Paris and explaining to them just what the League means.

Thus far in his travels he has everywhere met with warm greetings, both in the great halls where he has spoken formally and in the little cross road hamlets where his train has halted at times and he has exchanged words with the villagers who pressed forward to greet him. He feels, and does not hesitate to say so when chatting with his traveling companions, that the American people want no more of war and want to become part of the League so that there may be no more war. He struck his keynote when he said in his first address, in Columbus, Ohio:

"This treaty was not intended merely to end this single war. It is meant as a notice to every government who in the future will attempt this thing (what Germany attempted) that mankind will unite to inflict the same punishment. There is no national triumph to be recorded in this treaty. There is no glory sought for any particular nation. The thought of the statesmen collectd around that table was of their people, of the sufferings they had gone through; of the losses they had incurred, of that great throbbing heart which was so depressed, so forlorn, so sad in every memory it had of the five tragical years that have gone by. Let us never forget those years, my fellow countrymen; let us never forget the purpose, high and disinterested, with which America lent its strength, not for its own glory but for the defense of mankind.

"As I said, this treaty was not meant merely to end this war. It is intended to prevent any similar war. I wonder if some of the opponents of the League of Nations have forgotten the promises we made our people before we went to that peace table? We had taken by process of law the flower of our youth from every countryside, from every household, and we told those mothers and fathers and sisters and wives and sweethearts that we were taking those men to fight a war which would end business of that sort, and if we do not end it, if we do not do the best that human concert of action can do to end it, we are of all men the most unfaithful—the most unfaithful to the loving hearts who suffered in this war, the most unfaithful to those households bowed in grief and yet lifted with the feeling that the lad laid down his life for a great thing, and, among other things, in order that other lads might never have to do the same thing.

"That is what the League of Nations is for—to end this war justly and then not merely to serve notice on governments which could contemplate that they will do so at their peril, but also concerning the combination of power which will prove to them that they will do it at their peril. It is idle to say the worlds will combine against you; but it is persuasive to say the world is combined against you; The League of Nations is the only thing that can prevent the recurrence of this dreadful catastrophe and redeem our promises."

A League of Nations would have prevented the late conflict, the president asserted, explaining:

"I did not meet a single public man who did not admit these things; that Germany would not have gone into this war if she thought Great Britain was going into it, and she most certainly would never have gone into it had she dreamed America was going into it. And they all admit that a notice beforehand that the greatest powers of the world would combine to prevent this sort of thing would prevent it absolutely."

Applause and cheers greeted each declaration of the president that wars might be avoided in the future by operations of the League. He pointed out other important features of the Peace Treaty, how it was the redemption of weak nations, giving them freedom which otherwise they never could have won; how it says "These people have a right to live their own lives under governments which they themselves choose", and how "that is the American Principle and I was glad to fight for it", and that was the very heart of the Treaty, he said.

He drew attention to the section of the Treaty which is a "Magna Charta of Labor," which shall dispose of the hours, conditions and remunerations of labor.

"It forecasts the day", he said "which ought to have come long ago, when statesmen will realise that no nation is fortunate which is not happy, whose people are not contented, contented in their lives and fortunate in the circumstances of their lives".

In conclusion the president said he felt certain the Treaty will be accepted, and was only impatient of the delay. He added: "Do you realize, my fellow citizens, that the whole world is waiting on America? The only country in the world that is trusted today is the United States and the world is awaiting to see if its trust is justified."

SKIRTS FULLER ACROSS HIPS

Feature That Is Now Insisted On by Leading Parisian Dressmakers.

SOME GIVE PANNIER EFFECT

Startling Novelties, It Is Sure, Will Figure in the Gowns for Autumn, but Long-Waisted Bodice Will Be Retained.

The most striking feature of the autumn suits and gowns is the increasing fullness at the top of the skirts. The ways in which the great French dressmakers achieve this fullness are interesting. One point on which most of them agree is that the fullness must be massed across the hips, leaving both front and back perfectly flat.

Bullox, however, has departed from this by introducing fullness across the front of his new skirts, thereby differing from the other designers. He makes one skirt with a full front panel gathered across the top. A little above the knee this panel has its fullness joined to a shaped flounce cut so that the greatest fullness of the flounce is at the edge where it joins the panel.

An instance in which Bullox, like the other designers, placed the fullness at the sides appears in a skirt which has winglike pockets to give the effect of panniers. This is decidedly new and unusual on a suit skirt. The jacket which accompanies it flares from the waist, giving such fullness about the hips that it approaches the point of clumsiness. But although both skirt and coat are so very full at the hips the skirt still remains narrow at the hem.

Mme. Jenny does something novel in the way of achieving hip fullness by making a skirt of very slim outline and applying to it rolled plaits which stand out over the hips. To make them even more pronounced she pads these rolls, which swing loose from the belt and disappear gradually into the narrowing fullness of the skirt lower down.

The chemise dress, which has held the center of the fashion stage for so long, was originally launched by Jenny. She still makes chemise dresses, which have been her favorites for the last three years, but she does something which fits them to hold their own among the wider hip models. Now Jenny's chemise dresses have wide panels hung at the sides and turned up in a way that gives the effect of a bunching hip basque. She also puts bulging pockets on the skirts of her tailored suits and lines these pockets with satin, arranging them to look as if they were turned inside out.

FOR AFTERNOON WEAR.
Dress of cream georgette over flesh crepe de chine. Lace and delicately tinted ribbons make this charming.

Side Gore Trimmings.

Bernard's method of adding width and attaining the full effect in the skirts of tailored suits is by side gore trimmings which take the form of ruffled pocket flaps standing away from the figure. This is not an entirely new idea, for these outstanding pockets have been used on the front of skirts, but this creator gives them further elaboration by the ruffled flap. The coats which accompany skirts of this sort are three-quarter length and cut flaring with the fullness falling over the hips. On these coats are placed fringed pocket flaps and sometimes dangling button trimming. All of these things are applied to further accentuate the width at the hips.

Paris dressmakers are vying with one another in introducing startling novelties that are just now having their first showing. A crase of the moment is the frock from Premet shown at the extreme right. Jade green satin is the material used for it and the embroidery is of jade and silver. Premet, in this model, obtains the breadth across the hips by placing double frills of silver lace down the sides of the skirt, bordering a tablier panel; thus creating an entirely new silhouette. The satin bodice is snugly molded to the figure and a sash of the satin placed about the waist disappears beneath the panel at the front.

Latest Hip Flare.

The fluted or plaited tunic is another method of producing the fashionable hip flare now so characteristic of the newest frocks. Taffeta is frequently used for models of this sort.

The long-waisted bodice appears in almost all of these models. A black taffeta day gown featuring such a bodice and the fluted tunic is sketched today. The half low neck is round in outline and embroidered with claret colored bugle beads. The sash, which is really a continuation of the long bodice, has its ends fringed with deep red bugles.

Evening dresses still have very little in the way of bodices. Black satin skirts topped only by bright colored sashes produce some of the new dance frocks. From the house of Brandt in Paris comes such a dance frock. It is simply a black satin skirt attached to a sash. The long, slender train is made of ribbon. A vivid bit of color is introduced by having the sash corsage and train of orchidee pink satin ribbon. The ribbon used for the train is very much narrower than that which forms the sash bodice. The shoulder straps are of jet beads. Slippers of orchidee satin with stockings to match are worn with this frock.

Autumn hats are neither large nor small but of medium size. The Chinese note is conspicuous in them, bright Chinese silk embroideries being used to form round crowns which are completed by small uprolling brims of fur.

Hint From Russia.

It is some time since Russia has been looked to as a source of fashion, but that designers are turning their thoughts toward that country is evinced by a high draped Russian turban formed of gray felt and trimmed at the front with full sprays of fancy gray feathers.

Still another hat showing Russian influence has a small crown with an upturned brim curved high in front. Softly draped satin forms both the crown and brim which are embroidered in heavy threads of blue silk.

To correspond with the flaring hip frills of frocks, many of which have wider edges, are bell shaped hats having as their trimming wired ruffles of taffeta which cross the top of the crown.

FOR THE MAID AT SCHOOL

Coming Season's Styles Sufficiently Advanced to Allow of a Judicious Selection Now.

Preparation of the wardrobe of the girl who goes away to school should be begun early. Fortunately fall styles have already been sufficiently settled so that making up simple dresses, blouses, etc., for school wear may be done along next season style specifications.

Smocks now being brought out for fall emphasize the strong hold this garment has acquired. The Cossack smock is an interesting model. This is cut on straight lines and is somewhat longer than the conventional smock. The jersey weaves either in silk or wool (fiber silk is more frequently employed than pure silk) are popular fabrics, and brilliantly contrasting silk floss, heavy wool or chenille is used to embroider the garment.

One of these smocks will be found excellent for sport wear during the late summer or early fall days. The young college or high-school girl will find such a garment matched with a plain wool fabric skirt very useful.

Fancy Handkerchiefs.

Your handkerchief, to be up-to-date, may be in a delicate shade of color, or if it is white, the border may be in checked blue, red, pink or khaki. Fancy motifs of embroidery continue to be used in the corners of dainty handkerchiefs, instead of monograms.

SMALL CAKES.

Hermits.—Take three-fourths of a cupful of sweet fat, add one and one-half cupfuls of sugar, two beaten eggs, one teaspoonful of soda in a tablespoonful of sour milk, one teaspoonful each of cloves, cinnamon and nutmeg and one cupful of currants, knead hard, roll and sprinkle with granulated sugar before cutting the cookies.

Sugar Cookies.—Take two cupfuls of sugar, one cupful of shortening, one teaspoonful of soda and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder sifted into one quart of flour, four well beaten eggs and a teaspoonful of vanilla. Roll, cut and bake quickly.

Oatmeal Cookies.—Take three cupfuls of oatmeal, one-half cupful of sugar, one cupful of water or cold coffee, and one cupful of shortening, half a teaspoonful of salt and flour enough to roll. Bake in a quick oven.

Coconut Cookies.—Take one cupful of shortening, one and one-half cupfuls of sugar, two eggs, one cupful of grated coconut, one-half cupful of sweet milk, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, one teaspoonful of vanilla, flour enough to make a soft dough; roll as usual, using as little flour as possible. Bake in a quick oven.

Coconut Macaroons.—Cream one tablespoonful of butter with half a cupful of sugar, add one beaten egg, one and one-half cupfuls of oatmeal and half a cup of coconut. Drop by spoonfuls on a buttered sheet and bake in a hot oven. This recipe makes twenty-four.

Nut Titbits.—Beat the whites of two eggs until stiff, add a cupful of sugar gradually and fold in one cupful of chopped nuts and two cupfuls of cornflakes. Bake on a sheet in a moderate oven. Drop the cakes from a teaspoon and leave space to spread.

The same patriotism which sent American men to die for a democratic ideal is today demanding that American children be given an opportunity to live out that ideal.—Dr. L. Emmett Holt.

ABERGINES AND SALSIFY, FALL VEGETABLES.

Abergines or egg plant and salsify or vegetable oysters are found in the markets during the late summer or early winter. They are both becoming more popular as they are being oftener grown in the home gardens. The egg plant belongs to the potato and tobacco family, and has a flavor peculiar to itself. The purple skinned varieties are usually considered of better flavor than the white.

Salsify has a flavor similar to oysters, hence its name vegetable "oysters." When salsify is cooked and served with a little codfish the flavor of the oyster is heightened. It is a root which must be scraped and kept under water to keep it from turning dark colored. It should never be cooked in an iron vessel.

Egg Plant With Mushroom Stuffing.—Cut the egg plant in halves lengthwise and parboil in salted water until the pulp is tender. Scoop out the pulp to within an inch from the skin. Chop the pulp fine; add half its bulk of chopped mushrooms which have been sauted in a little butter five minutes, the same amount of soaked bread crumbs, half a tablespoonful of minced onion, a tablespoonful of butter, and salt and pepper to taste. Fill the shells with the mixture; lay in a well-buttered pan, sprinkle with buttered crumbs and bake three-quarters of an hour. Minced ham may be used in place of the mushrooms and the onion may be omitted. This dish is a delicious accompaniment to steak or game.

Mashed Egg Plant.—Boil an egg plant whole, without paring. When tender drain and remove the skin. Mash smooth; add half a cupful of bread crumbs, two tablespoonfuls of butter, salt and pepper to taste, a little grated onion, or a clove of garlic cut and used to rub the inside of the baking dish. Fill the dish and smooth the top. Cover with buttered crumbs and bake until the crumbs are brown.

Salsify, Stewed.—Cover two bunches of salsify with cold water; let stand for an hour. Scrape and drop each piece into water to which a tablespoonful of vinegar has been added. Cut in small slices and cook in boiling salted water with an inch-piece of codfish. Cook until tender and most of the liquor evaporated; add cream or milk, butter salt and pepper and serve hot.

As the Great Spirit bills creation teem
With conscious being and intelligence,
So man, his miniature resemblance, gives
To matter's every form a speaking soul,
An emanation from his spirit's fount,
The impress true of its peculiar seal.
Here finds he thy best image, sympathy.

CHOICE VEGETABLES, NOT WELL KNOWN.

The egg plant is such an attractive looking vegetable, and when nicely cooked, seasoned and served, so appetising that it should be more commonly grown in our gardens.

Creamed Egg Plant.—Pare the egg plant, cut in slices then in cubes. Cook until tender in boiling salted water; drain and put into a rich white sauce; add a little lemon juice and a bit of onion for flavor. Serve on toast or in timbales.

Broiled Egg Plant.—Cut egg plant lengthwise into quarter-inch slices after paring. Cover with boiling salted water. Cool and dry in a napkin; dip each slice in a melted butter; season with salt and pepper; arrange on a hot broiler and broil five minutes on each side; place on a hot dish, spread with the sauce and serve at once.

Sauce.—Put two tablespoonfuls of butter into a bowl; add a teaspoonful of chopped parsley and the juice of half a lemon. Beat to a cream and set away in a cool place until needed.

Mock Fried Oysters.—Prepare, scrape and boil until tender a bunch or two of salsify or vegetable oysters, with a small piece of codfish; when cooked mash, season; add egg, a tablespoonful of flour and a bit of cream for two cupfuls of mashed salsify. Mold into flat cakes and dip in egg and crumbs; fry as oysters. Serve very hot.

Salsify may be escalloped, creamed, added to omelet or cooked and mixed with celery and served on lettuce as a salad.

Salsify Soup.—Prepare the salsify for any dish and cook until tender; add a thin white sauce well seasoned and thickened with a tablespoonful each of flour and butter cooked together.

Creamed Hazelnuts.—Shell and blanch a cupful of hazelnuts; boil until soft. Drop them into well-seasoned white sauce and serve in patty shells or in ramekins. These nuts are nice blanched and salted as one does almonds or peanuts.

As I look upon the lives of men, it seems to me that more fail to make a success of living through delay than through haste, and that what is called prudence results in more disappointments than what is called daring. There is always some hazard in life, and there must be if life is to have any accomplishment.—Mackenzie.

VARIETY IN DIET.

What we need to stress in these days is a larger variety or more attention given to food combinations and seasonings. The average housewife confines herself to a few dishes and repeats them so often that the family rebels. Where there is infinite variety from which to choose, even for the simple liver, it shows lack of progression to continue with monotony.

In the serving of meat, fish or game the sauce which accompanies it is most important. Commonly such foods are well cooked, but an appropriate sauce served with the dish is not so common.

With fish the favorite sauce has some acid, to make it appetizing, for meat and game highly seasoned sauce formed from stock as a basis are liked, although sweet sauces also hold favor. For a thick, juicy broiled steak there is nothing more tasty than Maitre d'Hotel Butter.—Put one-fourth of a cupful of butter into a bowl and cream it with a wooden spoon; add half a teaspoonful of finely minced parsley and lastly, adding very slowly, three-fourths of a tablespoonful of lemon juice.

A sauce which makes a dish of boiled or steamed fish out of the ordinary is

Olive and Almond Sauce.—Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter, add the same amount of flour, and when well mixed add one cupful of white stock. Cook until smooth and just before serving add half a cupful of cream, one-fourth of a cupful of shredded almonds, one teaspoonful of beef extract, eight olives, stoned and cut in quarters, half a tablespoonful of lemon juice and salt and cayenne to taste.

As a garnish for duck or a salad to serve with game, sliced oranges with a well-seasoned French dressing is especially good.

A most tasty tomato sauce may be prepared by using a cupful or less of the canned tomato soup. It is strained, seasoned and slightly thickened, so with other seasonings for variety, the sauce is ready to serve.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 14

THE JUDGMENT OF THE NATIONS.

LESSON TEXT—Matt. 25:31-46.
GOLDEN TEXT—For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ.—II Cor. 5:10.

The subject selected by the lesson committee is "The Future Life," but at best such a statement would be the use of the term in an accommodated sense. According to legitimate textual and contextual signification it is the judgment of the living nations which lies still in the future (v. 32). The idea of a general judgment which is of such frequent occurrence in religious literature and teaching is a fundamental error. It is not once found in the Bible, neither the idea which it is intended to convey. Doctor Pentecost most distinctively says, "It is a mischievous habit that has led the Christian world to speak of the judgment as being one great event taking place at the end of the world, when all human beings, saints, sinners, Jews and Gentiles, the living and the dead, shall stand up before the great white throne and there be judged. Nothing can be more wide of the Scriptures." The Bible speaks of different judgments, differing in respect to the subjects to be judged, the place of judgment, the time of judgment and the result of the judgment. This is not the judgment set forth in Revelation 20:11-14, but precedes that one at least one thousand years.

I. The Judge (v. 31.).

It is the Son of Man, the one who came and died to redeem the human race, and who now being clothed with majesty and power will act as judge. Those who accept him now shall not come into the judgment (John 5:24).

II. The Time (v. 31).

This will be when the Lord comes in his glory, accompanied by a retinue of glorious angels. This will take place after he has gathered the elect remnant of Israel. There will be no resurrection in connection with this judgment.

III. The Place (v. 31).

It will be on his glorious throne. This throne will be most surely in the land of Israel. The Prophecy of Joel, third chapter, and Zechariah 14:1-5, make it to be in or near Jerusalem. The angel said to Mary, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus; he shall be great and shall be called the son of the highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." (Luke 1:31-33). Just as there was a literal place and a literal king there shall be a literal throne.

IV. The People Judged (vv. 32-45).

These will be the living nations upon the earth after the church has been translated (I Thess. 4:16, 17). These are the nations to whom the gospel of the kingdom shall be preached, just prior to the coming of the end. "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end come" (Matt. 24:14). This gospel is distinguished from the gospel of the grace of God which is now being preached. The preachers of this gospel will be Jews (Rev. 7 and Rom. 11). These are the brethren in the flesh, of the Lord, they that move among the nations of the world with the startling message of the news of the Lord's approaching kingdom. Some of the nations will gladly receive the message and most kindly receive the king's messengers, giving them clothing, food, shelter, etc. Others will persecute them, thrusting them into prison, etc. Here the former will visit these messengers of the king and provide for their wants. At this time the judge will separate the nations, placing the sheep on the right and the goats on the left. The "sheep" are those who have given proper treatment to Christ's brethren. The goats are those who rejected and ill-treated his brethren. If these three classes, the "sheep," "goats," "brethren," be kept separate all confusion will be avoided.

V. The Issue of the Judgment. (v. 46, cf. 24-41).

1. The sheep enter upon the inheritance of a prepared kingdom (v. 34).

2. The goats go into an everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels (v. 46). This judgment shall determine their destiny.

The Secret of Comfort.

The chief secret of comfort lies in not suffering trifles to vex us, and in prudently cultivating our undergrowth of small pleasures, since very few great ones, alas! are let on long leases. —Sharp.

Long Term for Murder.

Marshall, Mo.—James Garrett's third trial for murder has ended, in the criminal court. The jury returned a verdict of guilty and imposed 99 years' imprisonment in the state penitentiary. GRAPES PACKED FOR MARKET

Fruit Should Not Be Gathered Until Nearly Mature—Cut Stems With Sharp Knife.

If you have grapes for sale see that they are properly gathered and packed before being put on the market. The fruit should not be gathered until nearly mature, as it ripens very little after it is taken from the vine. In gathering, the stems should be cut with a knife or scissors and the bunches laid on shallow trays or baskets. Allow the fruit to remain a few hours so that the stems will become limp, then remove all unripe, bruised and diseased berries before packing is begun. The best and most attractive package in use is the four or eight-pound basket, which is neat, inexpensive and convenient for the customer to handle. Place the bunches in the basket with the stems downward and pack snugly, using the small bunches to fill in the spaces between the larger bunches. The top of the fruit should be even and level and about one-half inch above the top of the basket, making necessary the use of some pressure in getting the cover in place. If the basket is not carefully and closely packed it will not carry the fruit in perfect condition nor will it have the proper weight. It is important that the name of the variety and the growers' name and address be placed on the cover of each basket.—Clemson College.

GOOSEBERRIES FOR A GARDEN

Ohio Station Recommends Three American Varieties as Being Most Profitable.

The gooseberry sometimes is regarded as a neglected fruit. The Ohio station has tested out a number of varieties for garden growing, the following being recommended and described as profitable: With the American varieties the Downing, Red Jacket and Carrie stand out as being most desirable. The Downing produces large green berries; its bushes are of good size and the variety is productive. The Red Jacket is similar to the Downing, with reddish berries, but fewer canes in the bushes. The branches of the Carrie are long, loaded with berries and easy to pick.

HORTICULTURAL NOTES

Plant a cover crop of cowpeas in your orchard to turn under next fall.

Fruit trees should be pruned, but the work should be upon proper principles.

A cover crop is particularly valuable to the fruit grower as he seldom has enough manure.

Summer pruning is probably of most importance with young trees where it may help in shaping the framework.

Most fruits can be grown on a great variety of soils, but where possible it is better to avoid light, sandy soils, and heavy clays.

Winter vetch does best as a cover crop if a little rye is seeded with it. One bushel of vetch to one-half bushel of rye an acre is about right. In mild climates crimson clover can be used instead of vetch.

* * *

Fire blight is less severe on apples than on pears and usually attacks only the new wood. The only method of control is to cut it out as fast as it appears, making the cut somewhat below the affected part.

Poor Time to "Butt In."

The pale gentleman in the frock coat bore down on the red-faced, rumply-haired fellow lying across a seat on the "down" platform.

"My friend," remonstrated the pale gentleman, "did you ever reckon up that if you had placed the price of one drink out at compound interest at the time of the beginning of the Christian era you would have $15,460,284?"

The red-faced, rumply-haired man raised himself on one elbow.

"No," he replied. "I haven't figured it out. But I'm something of a calculator, all the same, and if you don't go away about 137 yards in nine and a half seconds I'll hit you 17 times and make you see 42,196 stars. I've just had four teeth pulled out and you'd better go away before the arithmetic class gets over the ropes and calls time."

Panama Canal Traffic.

According to the report of the governor of the canal zone for a recent month, the number of ocean-going commercial vessels passing through the Panama canal for the month was 161, exclusive of eight United States government ships on which on tolls were levied, other naval ships and launches. Net tonnage of the 161 commercial ships aggregated 480,867, Panama canal measurement.

MAINTAIN ROAD AFTER BUILT

Improper Methods Have Placed Economical Types in Disrepute, Says Colorado Expert.

Prof. E. B. House of the Colorado Agricultural College is a firm believer in the importance of maintaining a road after it is built. He supplies the following, taken from The Engineering News-Record, and says of it "it is so true and hits the nail so squarely that I quote it direct":

"The tendency in road improvement is to select types of roads which require very little annual maintenance. The general feeling among laymen seems to be that when a road surface requires some annual maintenance to keep it in good shape, it is an expensive type and should be avoided. Yet, if the interest on investment and the repairs are taken into consideration, the cheaper wearing surface may in many cases prove to be the more satisfactory and economical.

"It is not uncommon to see roads of a good type constructed and then, after they begin to show signs of wear, to see them neglected entirely or some method of repair or maintenance imposed which has been found by long practice to be defective. When we see mud holes in earth roads filled with riprap, crushed stone or cinders, it is not the engineer's fault that an enormous price is paid for the repair material; the road engineer knows that proper drainage, and repairing with earth from the side of the road, are the economical methods of maintenance.

"Old gravel and macadam roads are often repaired by filling ruts and depressions with inferior material that is readily displaced by traffic or ground to dust. Bituminous surfaces are often patched, if patched at all, with loose stone or gravel, and in some cases with concrete. In a number of streets and roads recently inspected, brick was used to patch concrete surfaces, and concrete used to patch brick surfaces.

"When careless methods of this kind are applied to the maintenance of public highways, the result is that a good type of road is made to appear unsatisfactory and uneconomical, and road improvement is discouraged—particularly the cheaper types of improvement, which in most localities are the best if properly maintained. It is the utter neglect of maintenance and the many improper methods of repair that have molded public sentiment against types of roads requiring annual maintenance, and have led road promoters and officials to disregard many economical types."

IMPROVED ROADS IN QUEBEC

In Five Years Government Spent $15,774,369 for Development and Improvement.

The development of good roads in Quebec is a subject at present much discussed from one end of the province to the other. In the five years from 1911 to 1916 the Quebec government spent $15,774,369 for good roads. The following figures show the number of miles of roads systematically maintained by the municipalities of Quebec, with the aid of subsidies from the government of the provinces: In 1907, 1,000 miles; in 1909, 2,000 miles; in 1911, 8,500 miles; in 1913, 15,000 miles; in 1916, 18,000 miles. Since 1911 more than 1,214 miles of macadam and 497 miles of gravel roads have been made in Quebec.

Proof that Some Women do Avoid Operations

Mrs. Etta Dorion, of Ogdensburg, Wis., says: "I suffered from female troubles which caused piercing pains like a knife through my back and side. I finally lost all my strength so I had to go to bed. The doctor advised an operation but I would not listen to it. I thought of what I had read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and tried it. The first bottle brought great relief and six bottles have entirely cured me. All women who have female trouble of any kind should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

How Mrs. Boyd Avoided an Operation.

Canton, Ohio.—"I suffered from a female trouble which caused me much suffering, and two doctors decided that I would have to go through an operation before I could get well.

"My mother, who had been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, advised me to try it before submitting to an operation. It relieved me from my troubles so I can do my house work without any difficulty. I advise any woman who is afflicted with female troubles to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial and it will do as much for them."—Mrs. MARIE BOYD, 1431 5th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio.

INVESTING MADE SAFE FOR THE SMALL SAVER

War Savings Stamps Minimizing the Menace of Fraudulent Promotions Which Wipe Out "Rainy Day Funds."

This is the day of the small investor. The war opened the eyes of some 50,000,000 Americans to the benefits of investing in government securities; it minimized to the same extent the menace of fraudulent promotions in which many life's savings have been sunk. War Savings stamps are making investing safe for the small saver.

"There is nothing more disheartening than to undergo self-denial for years, to save money and then to see the 'rainy day fund' wiped out by the failure of some 'wildcat' scheme," says Robert E. Springsteen, director of the War Savings Organization for Indiana.

"Widows and hard-working men are credulous. They listen to the oily promises of 'get-rich-quick' promoters and hand over their savings to salesmen promising impossible profits.

"When the crash comes the savings of years disappear in an instant and there is nothing to do but begin life over again—often at a time when earning capacity has begun to ebb."

Whatever the temptation for "wildcat" speculation in the past, there is no excuse for it now.

Every small investor should realize that a dollar saved while money is the cheapest commodity being offered will purchase twice as much of most any other commodity within four or five years, so that, in addition to the interest that War Savings or other government securities yield, the investor really has earned 100 per cent in the purchasing power of the dollar saved.

Small sums certainly are worth saving. Amounts that seem insignificant soon pile up into figures that are impressive.

A great French banker was once asked the secret of French thrift, and he replied, "Compound interest." Just as constant waste, even in little things, may change one's life from success to failure, so the steady saving of money will eventually bring independence, if not actual wealth.

There are very few persons who cannot, without any inconvenience whatever, lay aside 10 cents a day. Within ten years one's daily savings of this insignificant sum will amount to $365, in addition to $80.86 compound interest, making a total of $445.86 to show for one's saving just 10 cents a day for ten years.

By saving 15 cents a day for ten years, with interest compounded at 4 per cent, one will have the comfortable sum of $668.18; 20 cents a day will net $890.99. Save 50 cents a day for ten years and there is $2,227.75. A dollar a day will make a total of $4,455.74 for the ten-year period.

All these figures are based on the savings being put out at 4 per cent compound interest. War Savings stamps yield a trifle more than 4 per cent.

NO WASTE IN THIS FAMILY.

PULL TOGETHER FOR W. S. S.

Indianapolis, Ind., June.—Co-operation of the lodge organizations in Indiana for the Thrift campaign of 1919 is being asked by State Director Robert E. Springsteen of the Indiana War Savings committee. He reports that the lodges are turning in gladly to help.

Alfred M. Beasley of Linton, supreme arch of the Druids, has sent a letter to all groves of the order in behalf of the W. S. S. campaign. He says: "It is wise to cultivate habits of thrift at all times. It does not only assist in the great emergencies at hand but trains the mind of the individual in the habits that will have a tendency to debar emergencies."

Among others appealing to members of their lodges is James S. Wright of Vevay, who is great sachem of the Great Council of Indiana, Improved Order of Red Men.

St. Joe has some improvements that are worthy of consideration. During the past few weeks cement walks were built in front of the Sam Kees property on Spencerville street and the town has put in its crossing and no doubt it will be extended to the Wm. Smith corners soon. Claude Mason and George Wilmot have also laid their walks in Hamburg which means that soon there will be other walks built that will give the people on the north side a good dry walk to town. This outlet to the walks is badly needed. Just what direction this walk will run, we are unable to say.

Sunday afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Welter Peterson were given a real surprise upon the arrival of the latter's son, Emmett Carson and son of Connelsville, Pa., for a few days visit. Charles had just returned from France where he had been serving his country for the past thirteen months in the base hospital. Chas. is a real American as all the boys were who went across. He made the fourth attempt at enlisting before he was admitted and then after he was sent across he was not allowed to even smell the powder fresh from the front, and this made him mad and he was ready to come home, but he served for thirteen long months and no doubt it was as essential as being at the front, but he went across for the purpose of meeting some of those Germans face to face. Of course it was impossible for Uncle Sam to put all of his sons at the front and that was his misfortune.

Making New Tax Levies

The tax levies for the townships are now being figured out and to date we are only able to give a few items as the work has not been completed. Because of the increase in the valuation of the taxible property the levies are being lowered in order to produce the same revenue in 1920 that was necessary for 1919. St. Joe, 30 cents, last year, 70 cents; Concord township, 55½ cents, last year, $1.35.

Jackson township, 39 cents. Last year, $1.03. Wilmington township 33 cents. Last year, 93 cents. Newville township, 40 cents. Last year, $1.37.

Have War Orphans.

BIG AUDIENCES HEAR PRESIDENT

Leading Democrat Presents California Senator at St. Louis.

BLAMES H. C. L. ON PRESIDENT

Senator Johnson Analyzes League of Nations Covenant—Declares Americans Are Not Quitters—Borah Replies to President's Speeches.

St. Louis, Sept. 13.—Introduced by Dr. John H. Simon, former Democratic candidate for mayor, to one of the largest audiences that ever filled the Coliseum, Senator Hiram Johnson of California pounded home argument after argument against the League of Nations until the vast assemblage was brought to its feet cheering time and again.

Speaking from the same platform where a week ago President Wilson hurled the epithet of "quitters" at his opponents, Senator Johnson termed the president a dictator who had "arrogated to himself the right to dispose of our blood through secrecy," and pictured the proposed covenants a patchwork of secret treaties entered into by the various nations before we enby the various nations before we entered the war.

Speaks at Indianapolis.

Indianapolis, Sept. 12.—Undeniably the people of Indianapolis are concerned over the arguments for and against ratification of the League of Nations covenant. When President Wilson spoke here last Friday he contributed to that concern by assuring his audience that the high cost of living would be reduced through immediate acceptance of the covenant without reservations.

But it was evident at Tomlinson hall that the president did not convert permanently all of the city to his point of view. Senator Hiram Johnson of California, delivering his second address on his speaking campaign in behalf of the senate reservationists, obtained from his audience definitely expressed agreement when he declared; "If any single individual can be charged with the high cost of living, that man is Wopdrow Wilson."

The senator devoted a large share of his speech to answering the president's charge that delay in ratification was sustaining the living cost.

"He taxes the two months that the league and treaty have been before the American people and senate with the high cost of living," Senator Johnson said. "But he conveniently forgets the eight months he spent abroad, secretly pledging our resources and our man power to European and Asiatic governments. The living cost in December and January last were substantially the same as they are today. But he had neither the time nor inclination to deal with the problem then.

"But now the president would frighten us into immediate ratification of his treaty by a cheap and specious statement."

Senators Reply to President.

Chicago, Sept. 11.—Senators Hiram W. Johnson, William E. Borah and Medill McCormick opened their speaking tour here last night, replying to President Wilson's defense of the League of Nations and the peace treaty.

Senator McCormick received cheers when he declared that while "the chief spokesman for America stood there (at the pence conference), his gaze enraptured by the sight, Lloyd George sat down in the cockpit and wrote the League of Nations."

Senator Johnson declared that when the treaty finally did reach the senate it was found not to be a "document responding to the idealistic phrases and altruistic doctrines," but "an instrument that spends our treasure and our blood for the maintenance of the British empire and the Japanese empire."

Californian Is Sarcastic.

"I have followed, just as you have doubtless followed," Mr. Johnson said, "the utterances of the president in his recent speaking tour. I read his opening sentence delivered at the city of Columbus when he said that he chafed at the confinement for so long a time at Washington. I felt, as I read that sentence, just as you doubtless feel, wholly sympathetic for his enforced idleness in the rigors of the White House.

"I felt, just as you doubtless felt, that the confinement in Washington, of which he complained, for a few days over a month had torn his soul and made his spirit rebel at the restraint put upon it. But I observed, my friends, that he is going to a state I am reasonably familiar with, and in which I was born, and I am hoping and praying, too, my friends, that when he reaches that state, the balmy breezes of the Pacific and the salubrious climate of California will soothe his perturbed spirit and assuage his anguished soul.

"Now, my friends, we will let him use denunciation and abuse. Thank God, the American cause I preach needs only the expression of the truth.

As to Contemptible Quitters.

"The other day at St. Louis, in a frensy of anger, Mr. Wilson said, 'Let them show how they will prove that, having gone into an enterprise, they are not absolutely contemptible quitters if they do not see the game through.' What game, my friends? Your game? The game of the American people? Not at all.

"The American people play their game. They played it when they sent their sons abroad to the number of 2,000,000 and these boys valiantly upheld the traditions and honor of this country.

"That was the American people's game, but it is not the American people's game to safeguard the territorial acquisitions of England or of France or of Italy or of Japan. And that is the game that Mr. Wilson speaks of and that Mr. Wilson plays today.

"Now, the American people never have been quitters. They never have in any contest, either in their own behalf or in the behalf of humanity quit the game. They have ever seen it through. Mr. Wilson began his game at Paris, and let's see who quit in that game and who it was that forgot the American rule.

"You remember, just as I did, that he had certain celestial phrases, certain idealistic statements and certain specified principles upon which he went across the water to play his game, and, my friends, I might say to you something that we learned long, long ago in the West. In our unregenerated day, before we were as civilized as you are here in this great state, there was a saying that ripened into a proverb: 'Never sit in the other fellow's game.' The trouble with Mr. Wilson is that he has been sitting in the other fellow's game. And he got there just exactly what a man always gets who sits in another fellow's game.

Armaments Not Reduced.

"He started off, as you recall, with open covenants of peace openly arrived at. You and I echoed the sentiment. All America applauded. Who quit. Who was the quitter?

"We indorsed vociferously the freedom of the seas and the British lion growled. Who quit?

"He talked, my friends, of adequate guarantees given and that armaments would be reduced. No armaments were ended. None will be reduced, admittedly, under the League of Nations. Somebody quit upon the reduction of armaments.

"He spoke of a free, open minded, and absolutely impartial adjustment of all colonial states, and we all nodded in acquiescence. But there was nothing of that sort done. The American people didn't quit. Somebody else did.

Self-Determination Forgotten.

"He told us of the destruction of every arbitrary power that can separately and securely disturb the peace of the world. He never mentioned it again in Paris. The American people didn't quit. Somebody else did. He said, my friends, self-determination, self-determination for all the peoples of the earth, and every one of us believed in that doctrine. We all hurrahed and we said: 'We will stand behind you four square for self-determination,' but he left it. The American people didn't quit. Who quit?

"He said there can be no league or alliance or special covenants and understandings within the general and common family of the League of Nations, and then Clemenceau made a grimace and then we had an offensive and defensive alliance with France brought to us. The American people didn't quit because they were behind him in his statement. Somebody else was the quitter.

"He said to us as he went abroad that no people can be forced to live under a sovereignty under which it does not wish to live. But Japan, with an immobile countenance, shook her head and the American people didn't quit, but somebody else quit."

Picking Pockets to Poison Mind.

Senator Borah declared the people's taxes during the last few years had been spent on propaganda dedicated to telling them how powerful the people in power have been.

"We have been picking our pockets," he said, "to poison our minds."

Senator Borah opened his speech by saying he would attempt to discuss the question as broadly as "a man can do who has a pigmy mind.

"Now, our honored president has said in his appeal at Columbus, O. that if you have not time to read the treaty for yourselves, that he feels that you are under obligation to take the view and construction of those who wrote the treaty," Senator Borah continued. "That, my friends, it seems to me, is open to legitimate objection. In the first place, there are no two men who helped to write the treaty that now agree as to what it means."

WILSON IN IDAHO AND WASHINGTON

Speaks at Coeur D'Alene and Spokane to Big Audiences.

MOTORS 14 MILES IN RAIN

Mrs. Wilson Goes Along, Wrapped in Rugs—Ranch Houses Along the Way Are Decorated for the Occasion.

Spokane, Wash., Sept. 13.—A cordial welcome was given the president here, where the authorities, because of the demand for seats were compelled to hold a lottery. The holders of the lucky tickets heard the president, and the remainder of the people of this city of the "Inland Empire" gathered on the sidewalks, streets, window ledges and fire escapes of buildings along the line of march.

The president spent only two hours here, but Spokane made the most of every minute of his stay. The Spokane crowds constituted one of the extremes of this busy day.

In opening his address, President Wilson said there was an "element of personal bitterness" in the fight against the treaty and the league covenant.

Did Not Originate Covenant.

"I did not originate it," he said. "It is not my handiwork. It originated out of the thought of men who have loved justice and peace for ages."

The president said he had in fact obtained his idea of a league chiefly from the utterances of Republican public men. He mentioned the name of former Senator Burton of Ohio as one of these, and declared he could mention others, but that he "did not want to mention other gentlemen by name for he would record them against themselves."

"Lodge," shouted a man from the audience. The meat of the president's address was an antagonistic analysis of the program of reservations as adopted by the senate foreign relations committee. He went to some pains in attempting to explain how Great Britain, through her dominions, had six votes to the one of the United States. The one vote of the United States, he declared, could always be used as a veto.

"Because of this veto power," he declared, "I look with perfect philosophy upon the difference in number."

"I hope," declared the president, "my fellow citizens, that you will not think of 1920 when you think of redeeming the world."

Warns of Red Control.

In his Idaho meeting at Coeur d'Alene the president did not mention Senator Borah by name, but he spoke of those who are against any world league as those who would have the United States desert the world in a great crisis. He did not refer to the I. W. W. activities in the state. He recognized, however, that he was in the midst of a people who are progressive in all senses of the word, and he said:

"If America does not enter with her whole soul into this world arrangement, the progressives might as well go out of business."

How can we carry out programs of reform in this country, he asked, if the spirit of bolshevism, now rampant in Russia, is to prevail? There can be no reform in the world for a generation, he said, if conditions are not now brought to settled order—and this cannot be done without the co-operation of America.

"Everybody who hopes for reform," he said, "must support the unqualified indorsement of the treaty." He sent that challenge to the world.

Long Drive in Cold.

It was a cold, rainy day and the president and his party motored 14 miles from Rathdrum to Coeur d'Alene. Mrs. Wilson went along, all wrapped in rugs. The ranch houses along the way were decorated with flags. In the towns the children and bands were out to witness the president.

Gov. D. W. Davis came up from Boise to meet the president. He presented him to the Coeur d'Alene audience. He said that, for the day, the people would bury all differences and remember they were Americans. He did not refer to the peace treaty. The president likes the far West, its vast distances and its peace. He speaks of its remoteness from the turmoil and passion of the old world, how far it is from the infinite suffering, the strain and terror of the thing through which the world is passing.

At Rathdrum the president said his visit to various parts of the country had convinced him that the people thought the treaty ought to be ratified and that he hoped that consciousness would penetrate where it was most needed.

Dead Air and Disease.

Dr. Leonard Hill, whose experiments a few years ago proved to the world that it is not impure air but still, humid, dead air that induces disease, delivered recently a lecture on infant mortality before the Royal Society of Arts. In this he said that babies died from being too much clothed as well as from being improperly fed. They should not be kept too warm or too quiet, but should be allowed at times to be quite naked and should be played with just to give them exercise.

INDIANA NEWS

Indianapolis. — Arthur Buchanan, who has been rooming at 122½ West Ohio street, Indianapolis, committed suicide by shooting himself through the right temple after he had shot and probably fatally wounded Mrs. Vera Hecht, a widow, who has a rooming house at 311 East Vermont street. Jealousy is ascribed by the authorities as the motive for the tragedy.

Indianapolis.—Twelve negroes were grilled by the police in an effort to apprehend the slayer of Sergt. Wade Hull, Indianapolis policeman, who was killed during a police raid on a craps game in the negro district. Four policemen made the raid but none witnessed the shooting.

Hammond.—Albert T. Collison, an East Chicago banker, said to be worth $500,000, has been sued in the Porter circuit court by Edna Collison, his wife, for divorce, and $100,000 alimony. She charges that on June 29 the defendant induced her to take an auto ride, and during her absence a motortruck went to the plaintiff's home and took away all the furniture, leaving her without a place to stay. The Collisons formerly lived at Ridgeway, Ill.

Vincennes.—William A. Schutter, forty years old, having a wife and three children, confessed after 11 hours' continuous grilling, that he assaulted and murdered Mrs. Anna Leinbach, seventy-four years old, widow of William Leinbach, a butcher. The woman's mutilated body was found in a weed patch the morning of August 28. Schutter was taken to Vincennes for safe keeping by Chief of Police Martin, who worked on the case continuously since Schutter's secret arrest last Wednesday.

Indianapolis.—Dr. W. F. King, acting secretary of the state board of health, announced in Indianapolis that an emergency force of 100 physicians is to be organized in Indiana to be used in fighting a recurrence of the influenza epidemic, under the direction of the United States bureau of public health and the state board. A request from Runpert Blue, surgeon general of the United States, asking that a list of physicians for the emergency duty be prepared has been received at the office of the board. Doctor King said that the board would give full co-operation in the development of the plan in Indiana. Surgeon General Blue said that the federal plans contemplate the organization of a force of 100 physicians for emergency service in every state. The men will receive, while on duty, a salary of $200 a month, a per diem of $4 for subsistence, and railroad fare for travel incident to duty.

Indianapolis.—Kealing & Hugg, attorneys for the executors of the estate of Charles Warren, Fairbanks, former vice president of the United States, in a statement concerning the suit to break Mr. Fairbanks' will filed by his daughter, Mrs. Adelaide F. Timmons, said: "The place to try law suits is in the courts. When the case of Mrs. Timmons shall be brought to trial each and every one of the charges made by her will be proven untrue. Mr. Fairbanks made his own will and knew exactly what he wanted to do with his property, and did so." Mrs. Timmons charged that the will was procured by the exercise of undue influence on her father while he was of unsound mind, and in a statement issued after the filing of the suit said that her brother, Frederick C. Fairbanks and Warren C. Fairbanks, drafted the will after Mr. Fairbanks was so weakened and enfeebled by disease that he was unable to comprehend the effect of his acts.

Indianapolis.—Five orders were issued by the public service commission at Indianapolis. The orders were announced following a conference of the members of the commission called by E. I. Lewis, chairman. The Batesville Gas company was granted permission to increase its rates. The Greensburg Water company was authorized to issue $120,000 of its 5 per cent cumulative preferred stock and to exchange it par for par, for the present outstanding mortgage indebtedness of $120,000 par value of 4 per cent bonds. The commission denied the petition of the Decatur County Telephone company of Greensburg, asking for authority to make a charge for overtime service. Permission was granted to French Lick and West Baden Street railway to discontinue temporarily the operation of cars between French Lick and West Baden. An extension of 45 days, from September 1 to October 15, was granted the Indianapolis Street Railway company in which to secure the consent of bondholders to the retirement of bonds in the sinking fund.

Indianapolis.—Five planes and 36 motortrucks, constituting the all-American pathfinder squadron which left Hazelhurst field: Mineola, L. I., on August 18 on a recruiting tour and to prepare maps of aerial mail routes, have arrived in this city. The planes came from Columbus, O., Saturday, and the motor transports pulled up at the speedway shortly after 3:30 o'clock. The squadron is under the command of Maj. Ora M. Bardinger. The machine shop of the motor transports is set on a huge 11-ton truck, which requires the services of engineers who accompany the squadron.

Petersburg. — Eight persons were hurt here at a street fair, when one of the sections of a motordrome gave way, letting them fall to the ground below. One of the victims, who had a child in his arms, hurled the baby into a crowd of people above him, one of the spectators catching it and saving it from injury.

Evansville.—Renters of homes in Evansville may organize an association to prevent rents from going any higher. It is said that in some instances rents here have advanced 50 per cent in the last 80 days and that landlords defend their acts by declaring their property has been assessed more under the new tax law.

Goshen.—John M. Barr, thirty-nine years old, a traveling salesman of Indianapolis, who was arrested at Goshen two weeks ago on a charge of bigamy, pleaded guilty and was sentenced to 90 days on the state penal farm. He was also fined $25. Barr admitted that he has a wife and son in Indianapolist and a wife in Goshen.

Peru.—Mystery surrounds the devastation of a three-acre watermelon patch on the Mrs. Addie Reed farm, tenanted by Charles Crider, near Twelve Mile. Nearly every melon was mashed. Some one fired a shotgun four times and a report reached here that 80 shot were removed from one person and 26 from another. It is not known whether prosecutions will follow.

Fowler. — Miss Mayme Calloway, daughter of David Calloway of Fowler, was killed, it is believed accidentally, soon after she had announced at home that she was going rabbit hunting. She was fond of outdoor life and spent much of her time in the woods. She drove in an automobile along a country road and had stopped the machine. Her body was found in front of the car.

Wabash.—Twenty-five hundred farmers from various parts of Wabash county met here for their first annual picnic, discussed plans for raising $3,000, the county quota for the state farmers' guaranty fund of $200,000, and listened to Governor Goodrich uphold the tax law passed by the last legislature, as well as denounce socialism, government control and the present freight rates in Indiana.

Hammond.—Texas Miller, a returned soldier who, with his brother, owned a restaurant at Hammond, was found behind the restaurant with his skull crushed. Peter Mak, Jr., son of Peter Mak, formerly mayor of West Hammond, confessed that in an altercation with Miller over the right to collect his garbage he struck Miller over the head with an iron bar and killed him. Harvey Burnham, a farmer of Burnham, is also held in connection with the crime.

Indianapolis. — The Housewives' League of Marion county went on record as heartily indorsing a wholesale terminal market for the city of Indianapolis and pledging itself to work for immediate action to that end. The resolution was passed, on motion of Miss Julia Landers, at the meeting in the auditorium of the public library. Mrs. Thomas J. Milan, who presided, explained the advantages which housewives will derive from the proposed wholesale terminal market in Indianapolis.

Shelbyville.—An affidavit, charging the pollution of Blue river, near this city, has been filed in police court by George N. Mannfield, chief of the fish and game division, state conservation commission, against the Fame Canning company, which operates a cannery near this city. The affidavit followed a visit to this city a few days ago by Mr. Mannfield, who inspected Blue river above and below the canning plant. Below the factory the river was filled with dead fish, and the banks were dotted with them. Tests showed that fish in this water would die in from two to ten minutes. It is alleged that the water is poisoned by refuse emptied into the river from the canning plant.

Hammond.—Hammond, again the scene of rioting and bloodshed in connection with a strike of employees of the Standard Steel Car company, is quiet. A vigilance committee consisting of twenty-four citizens, is co-operating with the city authorities in an effort to prevent further outbreaks. Seven of the alleged leaders of the mob which clashed with twenty policemen and twenty guards of the Standard plant Tuesday when 200 of the original 2,000 strikers attempted to return to work, resulting in the policemen and guards firing rifles into the ranks of the strikers, are being held in jail. The latest police list of casualties includes three men dead, two, whom the physicians say will die, and fifty wounded, eight of whom are in a serious condition. Peter Austgen, chief of the police, says that 500 of the strikers are ready to return to work, but that they are being kept from doing so for the most part by the others. The men who wish to return, he says, are practically all Americans, while the others are of foreign birth and, as a rule, unnaturalized. The strikers quit in an effort to obtain a raise from 42 to 50 cents an hour, and other concessions.

Whiting.—A policeman and two gunmen were wounded in a revolver battle between detectives and Chicago bandits here. Two of the three bandits who took part in the fight were captured. The third man, shot through the chest, escaped. The wounded are: Policeman Oscar Petty, shot in the right foot; George Gray, bandit, giving his address as Chicago, shot in the right knee; unidentified bandit, escaped after having been shot in the chest. When the fight began the bandits were driving leisurely through Whiting in an automobile they had stolen from Anthony Forscher.

HAD TO GIVE UP

Was Almost Frantic With the Pain and Suffering of Kidney Complaint. Doan's Made Her Well.

Mrs. Lydia Shuster, 1838 Margaret St., Frankford, Pa., says: "A cold started my kidney trouble. My back began to ache and got sore and lame. My joints and ankles became swollen and painful and it felt as if needles were sticking into them. I finally had to give up and went from bad to worse.

Mrs. Shuster

"My kidneys didn't act right and the secretions were scanty and distressing. I had awful dizzy spells when everything before me turned black; one time I couldn't see for twenty minutes. Awful pains in my head set me almost frantic and I was so nervous, I couldn't stand the least noise. How I suffered! Often I didn't care whether I lived or died.

"I couldn't sleep on account of the terrible pains in my back and head. Nothing seemed to do me a bit of good until I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. I could soon see they were helping me; the backache stopped, my kidneys were regulated and I no longer had any dizzy spells or rheumatic pains. I still take Doan's occasionally and they keep my kidneys in good health."

BEING THE AUTHENTIC NARRATIVE OF A TREASURE DISCOVERED IN THE BAHAMA ISLANDS IN THE YEAR 1903. NOW FIRST GIVEN TO THE PUBLIC

By RICHARD LE GALLIENNE

Copyright by Doubleday, Page & Company

"JUST A GIRL!"

Synopsis—The man who tells this story—call him the hero, for short—is visiting his friend, John Saunders, British official in Nassau, Bahama islands. Charles Webster, a local merchant, completes the trio of friends. Saunders produces a written document purporting to be the death-bed statement of Henry P. Tobias, a successful pirate, made by him in 1809. It gives two spots where two millions and a half of treasure were buried by him and his companions. The conversation of the three friends is overheard by a pock-marked stranger. The document disappears. Saunders, however, has a copy. The hero, determined to seek the buried treasure, charters a schooner. The pock-marked man is taken on as a passenger. On the voyage somebody empties the gasoline tank. The hero and the passenger clash, the passenger leaving a manifesto bearing the signature, "Henry P. Tobias, Jr." The hero lands on Dead Men's Shores. There is a fight, which is followed by several funerals. The hero finds a cave containing the skeletons of two pirates and a massive chest—empty save for a few pieces of eight scattered on the bottom. The hero returns to Nassau and by good luck learns the location of Short Shrift island. Webster buys the yawl Flamingo, and he and the hero sail for Short Shrift island. As the Flamingo leaves the wharf a young fellow, "Jack Harkaway," jumps aboard and is allowed to remain. Jack proves an interesting and mysterious passenger. The adventurers hunt ducks on Andros island, with an eye out for Tobias.

Besides, I had my wonderful young friend, to whom I grew daily more attached. I found myself feeling drawn to him as I can imagine a young father is drawn to a young son! and sometimes I seemed to see in his eyes the suggestion of a confidence he was on the edge of making me—a whimsical, pondering expression, as though wondering whether he dare to tell me or not.

"What is it, Jack?" I asked him for once when, early in our acquaintance, we had asked him what we were to call him, he had answered with a laugh: "Oh, call me Jack—Jack Harkaway. That is my name when I go on adventures. Tell me your adventure names. I don't want your prosaic every-day names." "Well," I had replied, entering into the lad's humor, "my friend here is Sir Francis Drake, and I, well—I'm Sir Henry Morgan."

"What is it, Jack?" I repeated.

But he shook his head.

"No!" he replied, "I like you ever so much—and I wish I could; but I mustn't."

"Somebody else's secret again?" I ventured.

"Yes!" And he added: "This time it's mine, too. But—some day perhaps; who knows?—" He broke off in boyish confusion.

"All right, dear Jack," I said, patting his shoulder, "take your own time. We're friends anyway."

"That we are," responded the lad, with a fine glow.

I mustn't be too hard on Charlie, for Charlie had another object in his trip besides duck. As a certain poet brutally puts it, he had anticipated also "the hunting of man." In addition, though it is against the law of those Britannic islands, he had promised me a flamingo or two for decorative purposes. However, flamingoes and Tobias alike kept out of gunshot and, as the week grew toward its end, Charlie began to grow a little restive.

"It looks," he murmured one evening, as we had completed our fourteenth meal of roast duck, and were musing over our after-duck cigars, "it looks as if I am not going to have any use for this."

He had taken a paper from his pocket. It was a warrant with which he had provided himself, empowering him to arrest the said Henry P. Tobias, or the person passing under that name, on two counts: First, that of seditious practices, with intent to spread treason among his majesty's subjects, and, second that of willful murder on the high seas.

Charlie put the warrant back into his pocket and gazed disgustedly across the creek, where the loveliest of young moons was rising behind a frieze of the homeless, barbaric brush.

"There was never such a place in the world," he asserted, "to hide in—or get lost in—or to starve in. I have often thought that it would make the most effective prison in the world."

The young moon rose and rose, while Charlie sat in the dusk of our shanty, like a meditative mountain, saying nothing, the glowing end of his cigar occasionally hinting at the circumference of his face.

"I'll get him, all the same," he said presently, coming out of a sort of trance, in which, as I understood later, his mind had been making a geographical survey of our neighborhood, going up and down every creek and corner on a radius of fifty miles.

So we sought our respective cots; but I had scarcely begun to undress when a foolish accident for which I was responsible happened, an accident that might have had serious consequences, and which, as a matter of fact did have—though not at the moment.

Neglecting everything a man should do to his gun when he is finished with it for the day, I had left two cartridges in it, left the trigger on the hair-brink of eternity, and other enormities for which Charlie presently, and quite rightly, abashed me with profanity; in short, my big toe tripped over the beast as it stood carelessly against the wall of my cabin, and, as it fell, I received the contents in the fleshy part of my shoulder.

The explosion brought the whole crew out of their shanty, in a state of gesticulating nature and, as Charlie, growling like a bear, was helping to bring first aid, suddenly our young friend Jack—whose romantic youth preferred sleeping outside in a hammock slung between two palm trees—put him aside.

"I know better how to do this than you, Sir Francis," he said, laughing. "Let's have a look at your medicine chest, and give me the lint quick."

So Jack took charge and acted with such confidence and skill—finally binding up my wound, which was but a slight one—that Charlie stood by dumbfounded and with a curious soft look in his face which I didn't understand till later.

Then Jack looked up for a moment and caught Charlie's wondering look; and it seemed to me that he changed color and looked frightened.

"Sir Francis is jealous," he said; "but I've finished now. I guess you'll sleep all right after that dose I gave you. Good night. . . ." And he slipped away.

Jack had proved himself a practiced surgeon and, as he predicted, I slept well—so well and so far into next morning that Charlie at last had to waken me.

"What do you think?" were his first words.

"Why, what?" I asked, sitting up and wincing from my wounded shoulder.

"Our young friend has skipped in the night! Gone off on that little nigger sloop that dropped in here yesterday afternoon, I guess."

"You don't mean it?"

"No doubt of it—I wonder whether you've had the same thought as I had. You know I always said there was a mystery about that boy? Did you notice the way he bound your shoulder last night?"

"What of it?"

"Did you ever see a man bind a wound like that?"

"What do you mean?"

"I mean simply that the mystery about our Jack Harkaway was just this: Jack Harkaway was no boy at all—but just a girl; a brick of a dare-devil girl!"

CHAPTER V.

Better Than Duck.

Charlie Webster's discovery—if discovery it was—of "Jack Harkaway's" true sex seemed so far plausible in that it accounted not only for much that had seemed mysterious about him and his manner, but also (though this I did not mention to Charlie) it accounted for certain dim feelings of my own, of which, before, I had been scarcely conscious.

But we were not long left to continue our speculations, being presently interrupted by the arrival of exciting news in the form of a note from Father Serapion.

Father Serapion's note simply confirmed his conjecture that it was Tobias who had bought rum at Behring's Point and that he was probably somewhere in the network of creeks and mari lagoons in our neighborhood. Charlie thought the news over.

"I'll tell you what we'll do," he said presently. "I'm going to leave you here—and I'm going to charter the sponger out there. Turner's sound has two outlets; this and Goose river, ten miles down the shore. Now, if Tobias is inside here he can only get out either down here or down Goose river. I am going down in the sponger to the mouth of Goose river, to keep watch there, and you must stay where you are and keep watch here. Between the two of us a week will starve him out."

So it was settled, and presently Charlie went along with two of his best guns and Sailor, in the rowboat, and I saw him no more for a week.

At the end of the week the wind was blowing strong from the west and the tides ran high. About noon we caught sight of triumphant sails making up the river. It was Charlie back again.

"Got him!" was all he said, as he rowed ashore.

Sailor was with him in the rowboat, but I noticed that he was limping, going on three legs.

"Yes!" said Charlie. "It's lucky for Tobias he only got Sailor's foot, or, by the living God I'd have stood my trial for manslaughter, or whatever they call it. It'll soon be all right, old man," he said, taking Sailor's wounded paw in his hand, "soon be all right." Sailor wagged his tail vigorously, to show that a gunshot through one of his legs was a mere nothing.

"Yes!" said Charlie, as we sat at lunch in the shack, under the tamarind tree; "we've got him safe there under decks all right; chained up like a buoy. If he can get away, I'll believe in the devil."

"Won't you tell me about it?" I asked.

"Not much to tell; too easy altogether. I waited a couple of days at the mouth of Goose river. Then I got tired and left the sponger with the captain and two or three men, while I went up the river with a couple of guns and Sailor, and a man to pole the skiff—just for some duck-shooting, you know. We lay low for two days on the marshes and then Sailor got sniffing the wind one morning, as if there was something around he didn't care much for. He grew more and more excited and, at last, as we neared a certain mangrove copse to which all the time he had been pointing, he barked two or three times and I let him go. Poor old fellow!"

As he told the story, Sailor, who seemed to understand every word, rubbed his head against his master's hand.

"He went into the mangroves, just as he'd go after duck, but he'd hardly gone in when there were two shots and he came out limping, making for me. But by this I was close up to the mangroves myself, and in another minute I was inside; and there was Tobias—his gun at his shoulder. He had a pot at me, but before he could try another I knocked him down with my fire and— Well, we've got him all right. And now you can go after your treasure as soon as you like. I'll take him over to Nassau and you can fool around for the next month or so. Of course we'll need you at the trial, but that won't come off for a couple of months. Meanwhile, you can let me know where you are, in case I should need to get hold of you."

"All right, old man," I said, "but I wish you were coming along with me."

"I've got all the treasure I want," laughed Charlie. "Send me word where you are, as soon as you get a chance; and good luck to you, old chap, and your doubloons and pieces of eight!"

Then he walked down to his rowboat and soon he was aboard the sponger. Her sails ran up and they were off down stream—poor Tobias, manacled, somewhere between decks.

"See you in Nassau!" I shouted.

"Right-o!"

CHAPTER I.

In Which We Gather Shells—and Other Matters.

With Charlie gone and duck-shooting not being one of my passions, there was nothing to detain me in Andros. So we were soon under way, out of the river, and heading north up the western shore of the big monotonous island. We had some fifty miles to make before we reached its northern extremity—and, all the way, we seldom had more than two fathoms of water, and the coast was the same interminable line of mangroves and thatch palms, with occasional clumps of pine trees, and here and there the mouth of a creek, leading into duck-haunted swamps.

At last we came to a little foam-fringed cay, where it was conceivable that the shyest and rarest shell would choose to make its home—a tiny aristocrat, driven out of the broad tideways by the coarser ambitions and the ruder strength of great molluscs that feed and grow fat and house themselves in crude convolutions of uncouthly striving horn.

It was impossible to imagine a cay better answering to my conchologist's description of Short Shrift island. Its situation and general character, too, bore out the surmise. On landing, also, we found that it answered in two important particulars to Tobias' narrative. We found, as he had declared, that there was good water there for passing ships. Also, we found, in addition to the usual scrub, that cabbage-wood trees grew there very plentifully, particularly, as he said, on the highest part of the island. So, having talked it all over with Tom, I decided that here we would stay for a time and try our luck.

But, first, having heard from the sponging captain that he was en route for Nassau, I gave him a letter to Charlie Webster, telling him of our whereabouts, in case he should have sudden need of me with regard to Tobias.

The reader may recall that Tobias' narrative in reference to his second "pod" of one million dollars had run: "On the highest point of this Short Shrift island is a large cabbage-wood stump, and twenty feet south of that stump is the treasure, buried five feet deep and can be found without difficulty." But which was the highest point? There were several hillocks that might claim to be that—all about equal in height.

However, as the high points of the island were only seven in all, it was no difficult matter to try them all out, one by one, as we had plenty of time and plenty of hands for the work. For, of course, it would have been idle to attempt any concealment of my object from the crew. Therefore, I took them from their shell-gathering and, having duly measured out twenty feet south from each promising cabbage-wood stump, set them to work. They worked with a will, for I promised them a generous share of whatever we found.

Alas! it was an inexpensive promise, for, when we had duly turned up the ground, not only twenty feet, but thirty, forty and fifty feet, not only south but north, east and west of the various cabbage-wood stumps on the seven various eminences, we were none of us the richer by a single piece of eight. Then we tried the other cabbage-wood stumps on lower ground, and any other likely-looking spots, till, after working for nearly a fortnight, we must have dug up most of the island.

And then Tom came to me with the news that our provisions were beginning to give out. As it was, he said, before we returned to Nassau, we should have to put in at Flying Fish Cove—a small settlement on the larger island some five miles to the nor'ard—for the purchase of various necessities.

"All right, Tom," I said, "I guess the game is up! Let's start out tomorrow morning. You may as well have your sucking fish back, Tom," I said, laughing in self-disgust. "I shall have no more need of it. I am through with treasure hunting."

"I'd keep it little longer, sar," answered Tom; "you never know."

I had made up my mind to start on the homeward trip early the following morning, but something happened that very evening to change my plans. I had dropped into the little settlement's one store, to buy some tobacco, the only kind that Charlie Webster declared fit to smoke.

I stayed chatting with the storekeeper—a lean, astute-looking Englishman, with the un-English name of Sweeney—who made a pretty good thing of selling his motley merchandise to the poor natives, on the good old business principle of supplying goods of the poorest possible quality at the highest possible prices.

While he was attending a little group of customers I had wandered toward the back of the store, curiously examining the thousand and one commodities which supplied the strange needs of humanity here in this lost corner of the world; and, thus occupied, I was diverted by a voice like sudden music, a voice oddly rich and laughing and confident for such grim and sinister surroundings. It was one, too, which I seemed to have heard before, and not so very long ago. When I turned in its direction I was immediately arrested, as one always is by any splendor of vitality; for a startling contrast indeed—to the spiritless, furtive figures that had been coming and going hitherto—was this superb young creature, tall and lithe, with proudly carried head on glorious shoulders. Her skin was a golden olive, and it had been hard to say which was the more intensely black—her hair, or the proud eyes which, turning presently in my direction, seemed to strike upon me as with an actual impact of soft fire.

An entrancing girl and an ancient gold piece.

National Anthems.

"The Star-Spangled Banner" is now regarded as our national anthem; that of England, "God Save the King;" France, "The Marseillaise." The other allies apparently have no distinguishing title for their national airs. The national air of Italy is known to us simply as the "Italian National Hymn" and that of Portugal as the "National Air of Portugal," etc.

Road to Wealth.

ON THE FUNNY SIDE

Lost Opportunity.

"My first patient called on me today," said the young doctor. "He's rich, too."

"Congratulations," replied the elderly doctor. "What was the matter with him?"

"Nothing. I couldn't find a thing wrong with him."

"Ah, my boy, you still have a great deal to learn about your profession."

Making Matters Worse.

"When that irate woman was giving you a tongue lashing why didn't you hum a little tune?"

"Just to show her that she wasn't hurting my feelings any?"

"Of course."

"I was afraid I might find out that Kipling was right when he said the female of the species is more deadly than the male."

Doing the Honorable.

Doctor Dosem—You have been spreading the report that I have poisoned several people in this town. I want you to take it back.

Doctor Scroggins—Certainly. I don't hesitate to say that there are several people in this town whom you have not yet poisoned. Hope you are satisfied now.—London Tit-Bits.

Naming a Star.

"What's your star's name?" asked the theatrical angel.

"Venus," replied the manager.

"Why Venus?"

"Well, Venus is a star, you know."

"So is Mars, and Mars would be more appropriate."

"That's right. She does seem to start all the fighting."

POLITICS.

Professor of Political Economy—The President, as you know is chosen by the electoral college.

Sophomore—And I suppose a member of the strongest frat always gets the honor.

The Cosmic Cast.

Curse of Riches.

"This multimillionaire was once a poor boy."

"The adjective still clings to him."

"How is that?"

"People say, 'Poor old duffer! With all his money he can't buy a farmhand's appetite.'"

It Never Happened.

"The world owes me a living."

"Maybe so, but I have lived here for a great many years and I've yet to see the world running around hunting up a guy to hand a living to."

One to Be Avoided.

Binus—Would you marry a woman lawyer?

Barnes—Heaven forbid! An ordinary woman can cross-examine quite well enough.—London Answers.

A High Ideal.

"Is your husband a man of high ideals?"

"Very. He hopes some day to earn a salary that will meet the cost of living."

One Way to Do It.

"I don't see how you can afford to run an automobile."

"Easy enough. We've quit eating meat."

Dean of Whitewashers.

"You must be pretty old, majah?"

"Tol'ably, suh. Ah reckon Ah's de dean of de whitewashehs heah'bouts."

Familiarities.

"Is it proper to speak to people to whom you have not been introduced?"

"What are you going to do about it if the telephone exchange insists on giving you the wrong number?"

No Change.

"Notice any change in the volume of your mail since the 2-cent postage rate was restored?"

"No," replied the impecunious citizen. "My creditors enjoyed the local rate in the war. They mail their bills with the usual promptness."

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Need Help to Pass the Crisis Safely—Proof that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Can be Relied Upon.

Urbana, Ill.—"During Change of Life, in addition to its annoying symptoms, I had an attack of grippe which lasted all winter and left me in a weakened condition. I felt at times that I would never be well again. I read of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it did for women passing through the Change of Life, so I told my doctor I would try it. I soon began to gain in strength and the annoying symptoms disappeared and your Vegetable Compound has made me a well, strong woman so I do all my own housework. I cannot recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly to women passing through the Change of Life."—Mrs. Frank Henson, 1316 S. Orchade St., Urbana, Ill.

Women who suffer from nervousness, "heat flashes," backache, headaches and "the blues" should try this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Those Happy Days.

"These are my salad days," remarked the green worm as it slowly approached the lettuce in the flourishing garden.

A SUMMER COLD

A cold in the summer time, as everybody knows, is the hardest kind of a cold to get rid of. The best and quickest way is to go to bed and stay there if you can, with a bottle of "Boschee's Syrup" handy to insure a good night's rest, free from coughing, with easy expectoration in the morning.

But if you can't stay in bed you must keep out of draughts, avoid sudden changes, eat sparingly of simple food and take occasional doses of Boschee's Syrup, which you can buy at any store where medicine is sold, a safe and efficient remedy, made in America for more than fifty years. Keep it handy.—Adv.

New School Year.

The school bell peeled forth its joyful sound to at least a few of the children Monday morning, and perhaps to a few it was not so joyful, but when the total was made for the day it was evident that the kiddies were ready for school, when it figured at 206 against 189 of last year. The enrollment of the different rooms is as follows:

Primary, Gladys Kain teacher, has 49 pupils, 25 of which are beginners.

Intermediate, Ella Brown teacher, has 58 pupils with 11 new seats added.

Grammar, Clyde Hart teacher, has 29 pupils.

High School, Frank W. Chapman teacher, has 70 pupils with a possibility of more soon.

The other teachers are Ina Shordon, who teaches Latin and English; Edna Bashelier, teacher of Music, Art and Domestic Science and Harry Kinsey, teacher of History, Agriculture and Manual Training.

The country school being maintained this year is that of Hay's, located north of Concord, taught by Norma Gamble, with an enrollment of 24. This brings the township up to 230 scholars.

The children of the country districts are being hauled in this year by George Bleeks, Orangeville route; Lawrence Gaff, State Road; Harry Smith, Concord; Virgil Freeburn, Saylor's and Carl Johnson, Cheesetown.

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies. This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucus or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic cuts this slime and mucus and removes it A nauceated feeling is sometimes experienced when this mucus is breaking loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appet te return and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

NOISE BARS SLEEP

Airplane Factories Are Not Good Neighbors.

France Warns U. S.: Don't Build Plants Near Human Habitation.

Paris.—With the certainty that aviation is quickly to become one of the big industries throughout the entire world, Paris has a little warning for all of her sister cities of America and every other country.

The warning is this: Enact immediately, either state, municipal or national, legislation prohibiting the erection of airplane factories anywhere within hearing distance of where human beings have to live and sleep.

Otherwise, said human beings won't be able to sleep and will be driven in no time at all either into their graves or some far-away sanitarium.

Everyone knows how much rumpus an airplane makes when it is flying thousands of feet overhead. Well, every airplane motor before it is mounted has to be tested, and to be tested it is attached to a huge bench or platform and run continuously at top speed, with hundreds of horsepower back of it, for at least twenty-four hours and sometimes forty-eight.

During that period of time nobody living within hearable distance can possibly sleep.

At Suresnes, where motors are tested for forty-eight hours, it has been necessary to close an adjacent school.

At Puteaux the inhabitants declare they have not slept for months.

At Courbevoie the city council has resigned as a means of protest.

At Clichy the city has bought a large tract of land for the erection of a municipal hospital. Airplane factories during the war installed themselves in the vicinity and the medical authorities now refuse to let the city build its hospital in such a death-insuring locality.

The department of the Seine has been forced in the interest of public health to take measures to stop the airplane factories and get them moved into more isolated localities.

Correction.

The NEWS was in error slightly in giving the notice concerning the hearing of the Public Service Commission last week in stating that the rental rate was proposed to be raised to $3.50 per month, it should have been service connection charge individual or party line service, $3.50. The service connection charge meaning the installation of the phone in the home. This is corrected for the benefit of the local company and in conversation with the manager he stated that there would be a raise in the monthly rental charge here in the future.

Coming Styles in Millinery

Forecast of Materials and Shapes That Will Mark Fall and Winter Hats.

TRIMMED BRIM IS CERTAIN

Will Be Used in Many Ways, Most of Them Charming—High Draped Crowns Sure to Be Another Feature.

While it seems somewhat early in the season to speak with finality of the fall and winter hats, enough new shapes have been displayed to give us some inkling of what is to come, writes Martha Goode Anderson in the New York Sun. For several weeks now we have seen a sweeping rage of the felt hats with wide brims and exploited in the palest pastel shades and ornamented with bright and gay wool stitchery. As this wool stitchery is to be so much in evidence throughout the winter not only on hats but on coats, dresses and blouses, it is just as well to consider it seriously and recognize the demand, for it is one of the established facts in winter's coming fashions.

The felt hats of which I am speaking have been used primarily for sport hats with pale-colored sweaters and bright-hued skirts and blouses. We cannot complain of the lack of color during this summer, for as a sort of reaction from the dull and somber hues of the war period our clothes have caught and reflected the most radiant tones of the rainbow and every group has been resplendent in its vivid colors.

The First Showing.

Always at the beginning of every season it seems as if the first showing of millinery included only the wide-brimmed and large hats. This is inevitably so for the spring and summer, as we find ourselves preparing for the hot days when the sun is blinding and we need some sort of protection for eyes and skin. Just why it should be for fall and winter, however, I do not know unless the idea is to display first the dressy hat, as most women go on the principle that having invested in a smart and very good hat almost anything will do for every day. I do not present this idea as conclusive by any means, but it may be one of the reasons why we are shown so few of the small and simple every-day sort of hat and most of the newest shapes are of the splendid velvet picture hats.

NOVEL CREATION OF ANGORA AND SATIN, AND A BERET OF DUVETYN EMBROIDERED.

Paradise feathers are predominating as trimming. They sweep down, but not up as heretofore, and thick sprays are used more than the single feathers we have seen so much of in recent times. Black paradise is really lovely and so expensive that it need not be disdained by even the most exacting and conservative.

One of the newest shapes which is neither large nor small in size is the round turban with the draped and heavy brim. This is not an easy shape to wear, as it is apt to look very heavy so close to the face. However, it is really very splendid, for it is developed in the rarest and richest of brocades, heavily embroidered in gold and silver and resplendent in a mingling of colors entrancing to see.

The crowns of these wide draped turbans are of velvet or duvetyn, as the case may be and are entirely untrimmed, as the present indication in the matter of trimming is seen in the draping of the brim. Where feathers are used they sweep down close to the face, even resting almost under the chin in a soft curve. This way of placing the paradise is an old, old one, borrowed, doubtless, from portraits of great ladies of some hundred or more years ago. It is in distinct contrast to the upstanding and jaunty aigrette which showered in a little fountain of fronds high in the air so much used formerly.

Trimmed Brims.

The trimmed brim is used in many ways, as we shall see as the season advances. Single flowers of velvet are being used in flat masses around the wide brims which turn up and away from the face saucer fashion. These hats are not so elaborate and dressy as the picture hats of velvet and paradise, but they are suitable for morning wear and make a trim finish for the shopping dress worn with smart veils and furs.

One of the simplest is exploited in a midnight-blue velvet in the saucer shape with upturned brim. Around the crown is placed a circle of loops made of heaviest blue silk floss in a lighter shade. These loops are used to imitate ostrich fronds, which are also much in evidence as a winter trimming. At one side of this model is placed a large rosette of the loops of the silk floss and an edge of the same finishes the brim around the face.

Another treatment of this upturned brim is seen in the wide sailor shape which has a flaring brim across the front of the hat, giving something of a three-cornered effect seen from the front. This is particularly suited to young faces and youthful types.

The flaring brim is often thickly studded with tiny steel beads or dotted with knots of silk in the kind we call French knots, meaning a tiny dot of the silken thread made by wrapping it twice around the needle and pulling through to the under side. The effect is that of silken beads. As this is often done in contrasting colors it makes a most effective trimming.

Because of the great demand for hats of soft materials, such as duvetyn and velours and velvet, and because of the increasing cost of these soft and beautiful fabrics, the price is continually mounting, especially as so much of the trimming used this year is done by hand and is really hand embroidery. One of the favorite effects is seen in the use of simple blossoms, such as nasturtiums, single petaled roses and kindred blooms done in outline around crown and brim. These are extremely simple to make

High Draped Crowns.

The high draped crowns are again seen. Sometimes they point up almost a foot above the brim and are draped in a series of folds which keeps them from being awkward and very ugly, as they so easily could be. Of course the brims which accompany these high draped crowns must be wide enough to set them off successfully and prevent a topheavy look. Among the new trimmings are seen much glycerined ostrich feather banding. This sort of treatment of the feathers makes them shiny and glossy. The fronds are placed singly along a narrow band to hold them and are used thus against the brim in a width sufficient to entirely cover the brim and extend slightly beyond. They are used effectively on a rather wide hat of rose-colored velvet of which the crown is of the high draped design thickly brocaded in silver. The feather band lies flat over the brim and a narrow strip of silver ribbon encircles the crown where the feathers and the brocade come together.

A new shade is called nasturtium yellow and is as vivid as it can possibly be and very smart when made up in an untrimmed velvet hat rolling as to brim and crown too. These untrimmed hats are quite new, as they have an air entirely all their own and seem to be most elaborate when absolutely untrimmed. This effect is achieved by a clever draping of the velvet, as in one instance the velvet is so arranged that it seems to make a fold over the crown and is folded in over the brim in a double effect which is different from more ordinary arrangements.

DAIRY FARMER CAN MAKE PRODUCT GOOD AND PURE BY ORDINARY CLEANLINESS

Keep Cow Quarters Clean—It Helps Make Better Milk Sales.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In marketing milk or dairy products that meet the highest demand and bring the best prices, the first step is in its production. Only milk from healthy cows should be used for human food. It should be produced under clean surroundings and be handled in such a way that increase of bacteria, which cause the milk to sour, be held as low as possible.

It does not require expensive barns and elaborate equipment to produce milk of low bacteria count. The dairy specialists of the United States department of agriculture have proved this in a practical experiment. The experiment was begun by placing four cows in an ordinary frame barn and employing an untrained worker to milk and care for the animals. No extra attention was devoted to cleaning the barn, and for six months the cows were kept under these conditions. Then, without any change in barn management, two cows were milked into small-top pails and the two others milked into ordinary open-top pails. The milk from the open-top pails averaged 497,653 bacteria to the cubic centimeter, and the milk from the small-top pails averaged 368,214—a difference of 129,439.

Steam Purifying Proved.

The next step in the experiment consisted of sterilizing the cans and pails with live steam, but other conditions remained as before. The milk from the sterilized small-top pails averaged only 17,027 bacteria to the cubic centimeter, a reduction of 351,187 in favor of sterilization. With the open pails sterilization reduced the bacteria to 22,677, a decrease of 474,976 compared with milk from the unsterilized open pails. Sterilization is not difficult nor expensive. The dairy specialists of the department have developed a simple steam sterilizer which can be made at home, or can be purchased complete for about $10 to $15. Complete directions for making it can be obtained by writing to the dairy division of the United States department of agriculture.

In the third stage of the experiment the manure was removed from the barn twice instead of only once a week, and the udders and teats of the cows were washed before each milking. These reasonable measures of cleanliness reduced the count in milk drawn into the sterilized small-top pails to 2,836 bacteria to the cubic centimeter, and in the sterilized open-top pails to 6,166. Ordinary cleanliness, it can be seen, caused a reduction of over 10,000 bacteria to the cubic centimeter.

In the final stage of the experiment other measures to insure cleanliness were practiced. The manure was removed daily, clean bedding was supplied, and the cows were groomed regularly with a currycomb and brush. With these final precautions the bacteria count in the small-top pails averaged only 2,154 to the cubic centimeter, or 1,197,847 less than were found in a sample when the barn and cows were dirty and the utensils were not steamed.

Put It Up to Consumer.

Milk is a highly perishable food and the length of time it will remain sweet and safe, especially for children, depends almost entirely upon the constant care it receives from the cow to the consumer. Milk passes through three agencies—the producer, the dealer, and the consumer. If the first two have done their part, clean, safe milk will be delivered, thoroughly chilled, to the consumer. The best way to deliver milk is in clean, well-capped bottles. If bottled milk can not be obtained, the housewife should arrange to have it received in a clean, scalded utensil, cover it instantly, and place it immediately in a refrigerator of the coolest available place.

From the time milk is produced until it is consumed it should be kept cool—at a temperature of 50 degrees F. or lower. At such temperatures bacteria develop very slowly and milk undergoes little change. A slight rise in temperature above this point, however, permits bacteria to multiply rapidly and brings about deterioration of the milk, which may render it unsafe for ordinary use and make it highly dangerous for babies and older children. In cooling milk dairymen should use facilities already existing, such as cold water in wells or springs. When milk is drawn from a cow it has a temperature of about 95 degrees F. In the North well and spring water generally varies in temperature from 50 degrees to 60 degrees F. By the use of surface coolers and a tank of running water milk can quickly be cooled and held to within two to four degrees of the temperature of water.

During warm weather it may be necessary to ship or deliver milk twice a day. This would have a tendency to check spoilage, especially of evening milk, which is usually more than 12 hours old when shipped. Milk dealers can do much to prevent spoilage by pasteurizing the milk, which not only kills disease bacteria, but reduces the bacteria count and therefore delays spoilage.

FEED COW LIBERALLY DURING FALL MONTHS

It Pays to Begin Feeding Silage and Hay Early.

Affects Milk Flow for Whole Year by Putting Animal in Good Condition to Go Through the Cold Weather of Winter.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The wise dairyman will feed liberally during the fall months. Cows which are not well fed at this time will go into the winter thin in flesh and with reduced milk flow. It will be expensive and largely in vain to attempt to bring them back to normal flow after they go on winter rations.

It will pay to begin feeding silage and hay early. The extra feed given at this time will not only bring good, immediate returns, but affect the milk flow for the whole year by putting the cow in good condition to go through the winter months. Cows which go into the winter in good vitality, and with undiminished milk flow, are the ones which will make most economical use of the high-priced feeds given them during the fall months by proper feeding. It will pay.

Cold, uncomfortable cows will not make economical use of feed. Their highly developed nervous systems are very susceptible to sudden changes in temperature. This should be borne in mind in the fall, when the first cold rains and cold winds come. Protection from these will prevent the reduction in milk flow which they always cause. Do not waste feed by letting cows stand out in cold winds and rain.

SACKS ARE NOT SUFFICIENT

Do Not Give New Potatoes Necessary Protection From Cuts and Bruising in Handling.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Sacks do not sufficiently protect new potatoes from cuts and bruising. If they are used those holding from 90 to 120 pounds are the most desirable from the standpoint of careful handling and ventilation of the contents.

GUARD POTATOES FROM SUN

It Is Advisable to Line Certain Open Parts of Stock Cars With Building Paper.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

If potatoes are shipped in stock cars it is generally advisable to protect the potatoes from the sun and weather by lining certain of the open parts with strong building paper.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Young boars that are to be sold for breeding purposes should have extra care.

Try a few sheep on the farm; start with twenty ewes of the black-face type.

The young boars may well be given a little extra care as the show or sale season draws near.

The first thing a hog raiser should do when a litter of pigs begins to scour is to reduce the ration of the sow even if she is not being overfed. This will always help.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PREPARING PRODUCTS FOR BEST EXHIBITION AT ANNUAL FAIRS

A Thoroughly Typical American Boy Watching a Prize Winner Getting Its Growth.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The fair.

What does it mean to you?

"Fair" is a very old noun. With variations in spelling it exists in many languages.

"Fair" is akin to the ancient "festus" and therefore cousin in some degree of the more modern "feast" and "festival" and the like.

Always and everywhere it has carried the away-from-work idea. It has always been pretty much what we mean nowadays by "holiday," though not what that word meant originally. "Holiday" was "holy day," and sacred. "Fair" has always been secular—a wholly human sort of thing.

Fair time is playtime. That it always was, that it always meant to most people, that it always will be. But for every play there must be players, and two kinds of them, too—players who play playfully and players who play laboriously, more or less, for the entertainment of the others.

And "the fair" has a very different meaning for the two classes. The big bunch goes to have a good time, to be carefree, to drink red lemonade and throw confetti and toot tinsel horns; to get the glint of twinkling horse heels on a saffron track; to see the broad-backed cattle, the prettily packed jellies and jams, the big pumpkins, the intricate needlework, the full-filled ears of corn and to mill around, going nowhere in particular and not caring especially if they never get there.

But with it all they are getting a sugar-coated education. The fair is a university in which the festive students soak up science unawares.

Then there must be the other kind of players—the ones who "put on the show"—the professors and instructors and tutors in this most accommodating of academies. And there has to be somewhere a sort of teachers' college for those people. There are, in fact, lots of normal schools for fair professors, but the United States department of agriculture is the graduate college. And one of the queer things is that any boy or girl still in the grammar grades of the public school may be doing postgraduate work in getting things ready for the fair.

Much in Getting Ready.

Too many people, the department experts say, do not know how much depends on preparing exhibits in the right way, on getting the pig or calf or corn or canned stuff in just the right shape to show to the best advantage. One of the boys' club workers tells a story in point.

"One of our club boys in Mississippi," he says, "grew an acre of mighty good corn and entered an exhibit in the county fair. There were four prizes, but he couldn't even get the fourth one. The judge simply tied on the ribbons and made no explanations. The boy was disappointed—not rebellious, but he wanted to know why his good corn couldn't get a prize. I went over it with him, showed him that some of his biggest ears had crooked rows and how others had other defects. Picking out the best ear I said, 'If you had ten like this you could win a prize.'

"Well, that boy went back home and carefully examined every ear of his corn. He found only nine that he thought were as good as the one I had pointed out. He went back through the whole pile again and finally found the tenth ear. He sent those ten ears to the state fair—and won first prize. Do you see? Knowing a little of how to prepare the exhibit made a state winner out of a corn crop that was an 'also ran' at the county fair."

Manicuring the Pig.

Now the boy who is preparing a pig or a calf for the fair has a more complicated task than the one who enters some corn. With the corn boy the whole problem is selecting the right ears. With the others it is not only selecting the right individual but doing a great many things to put that individual in the best possible form, and to keep it so.

Weeks or even months in advance of the fair the boy must start getting his calf or pig tame. At a particular time it may be necessary to pare the pig's toenails so that he will stand up straight without too much bend at the pasterns. But he must be careful not to pare them too close. A limping pig is not likely to be a prize winner. Several weeks before the fair he should trim the hair out of the pig's ears, being careful to do it in such a way that the ears will not be irregular in outline. He should provide a clean wallow for the pig to keep the hair and skin soft and pliable—and he ought to know the trick of the trade that a little oil on the surface of the water helps a great deal; also that a little linseed meal, properly fed to the pig, puts a peculiar gloss on the hair.

He must remember to have the right kind of crate ready in plenty of time. Many boys have failed to get their pigs to the fair because, when the time came to ship, there was no crate. The department has special sets of specifications for pig crates, calf crates and others. A very important thing to remember in connection with the crate is that the pig grows at a pretty rapid clip. The crate must be built big enough for the pig, not when the crate is made but allowing for growth between then and fair time. And it must not be big enough to permit the pig to turn around. The boy must remember that the pig should not be fed just before shipping. No matter how much the little rascal cries for corn he must not be indulged. If he is fed he is very likely to get sick on the train and go through the whole fair in a droopy, drowsy, unprizelike-looking way.

Prizes Are Not All.

These are just a few of the things that must be remembered in preparing a pig for the fair. And there are equally many with regard to the calf, or the dairy cow, or the poultry, or any of the things, practically, that the boy or girl, man or woman wants to exhibit at the fair.

Even with all the care possible the animal or other product may not be a prize winner. There can't be prizes for every exhibitor. The fair that tries to arrange things so that everybody can get a prize does not amount to much usually. It does not mean anything to win a prize when you are the only exhibitor in your class. And, as the experts in the department of agriculture point out, the prize is not the main thing after all. To be sure the boys and girls and men and women who get things ready for the fair are contributing to an education for the public—but the main thing for them is the education they get themselves.

"Take part in the contest," say the experts, "for your own sake. You will have a better pig, a better calf, a better pound of butter, a better can of peaches next year by reason of having exhibited this year, whether you win or not. And, with proper attention to preparation, the prizes are sure to come, too, sooner or later."

PLANES IN MISSION WORK

Gospel Workers Believe They Can Be of Considerable Value in Spreading the Word.

A flying boat or an airplane may soon form a part of the equipment of modern missions in Africa, according to a letter received by a motor corporation from the Congo mission of the Disciples of Christ, the headquarters of which are at Coquilhartville, Belgian Congo, says the New York Evening Sun.

"We are interested in the matter of the purchase of flying boats to replace wholly or in part the fleet of launches which we have been planning for service in communication between our various stations," the letter stated. "We have a large river steamer for transportation between stations which seaplanes might supply. Our area is about 500 miles east and west and 200 miles north and south in extent.

"The whole area is covered well by an extensive system of waterways. In inland points landings might be made in small machines in the straight, smooth, central streets of the native towns, which in this section are usually clear of grass and other obstructions and are not less than 100 feet wide."

Mail Carrier Need Not Have Worried as to the Responsibility of His Questioner.

The mail carrier had a registered letter among the many he was delivering to one of the big business institutions of the city. The manager was not in his usual place, and the stenographer was temporarily out of her chair. A man sitting in a room adjacent spoke up: "Can I do anything for you?"

"I don't know whether you can or not," said Uncle Sam's man; "I have a registered letter here and somebody has to sign for it."

"Well, I guess I can sign for it."

"I don't know whether you can or not. I don't know you."

"Well, I'm 'it' around here," and he reached for the letter.

When the mail man looked at the signature he noticed it was signed ——, whom he recognized as the sole owner of the big institution.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 21

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.

LESSON TEXTS—Psalms 19:7-14; II Timothy 3:14-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path. —Psalm 119:105.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Psalm 119; Matt. 4:1-11; Luke 4:16-22; John 5:39-47.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The best book in the world.

JUNIOR TOPIC—What the Bible contains.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—The authority of the Bible.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—The inspiration of the Bible.

I. The Characteristics of the Word of God (Psalm 19:7-11).

1. The law of the Lord is perfect (v. 7). The law here means the fundamental principles which God as a moral being reveals to the consciences of men as binding upon the soul. These principles are free from all omissions and redundancies, perfect as a moral code. It perfectly accomplishes its design, namely, the converting of the soul. The effect of the law of God is to turn men to God himself, to righteousness and holiness.

2. The testimony of the Lord (v. 7). By testimony is meant the witness which God bears as to his attributes and against man's sins. This testimony is plain and infallible. Those who receive it are made wise. Those who with open and teachable minds receive God's testimony are wiser than the greatest intellectuals of the earth.

3. The statutes of the Lord are right (v. 8). His statutes are the principles given to us to fit us for the different relationships of life. These are just and equitable, because they are from the righteous God. They rejoice the heart, because the true heart rejoices in justice and equity.

4. The commandment of the Lord (v. 8). This brings into view the personal God who stands back of His law to enforce its demands. This commandment is free from error and deceit, and it enlightens the eyes. The effect of God's law is to give man ability, not only to understand his love and salvation, but to be wise as to the things about him.

5. The fear of the Lord is clean (v. 9). The reading of the Word of God produces reverential fear in the heart of the reader. Those who have this godly fear have their hearts cleansed from sin. The life and relationship founded upon this fear abide forever.

6. The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous (vv. 9-11).

By judgments is meant the sentences pronounced by God's Word. These penalties are absolutely true and righteous; they are conformable to the intuitive moral sense of man. These judgments serve as warnings; they prevent man's shipwreck upon life's sea and bring just return to those who obey.

II. A Prayer to God (v. 12-14).

1. For cleansing from secret faults (v. 12). Those who reverently study the Word of God realize in themselves the presence of hidden faults from which they need cleansing, and they cry out to God for this cleansing.

2. Kept back from presumptuous sins (v. 13).

The sins which result from proud defiance of God's laws need to be eradicated by God's special grace and help.

3. Words acceptable with God (v. 14).

The godly man is concerned with even his words and desires them to be under God's control.

4. Meditation of the heart (v. 14).

III. The Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures (II Tim. 3:14-17).

Inspiration means God-breathed. By the scriptures is meant the Old Testament. If Paul's testimony be accepted, then the whole Old Testament is God-breathed, regardless of what the skeptical critics say. Because they are God-breathed they are profitable for—

1. Doctrine, that is, teaching.
2. Reproof.
3. Correction.
4. Instruction in righteousness.
5. Thorough equipment of the man of God for his work.

Love Endureth All Things.

Love beareth all things, believeth all things, endureth all things. People we love sometimes disappoint us. They do things we never dreamed they could do. If we love them, we shall not abandon them because they have faults. We shall just believe that one day they will put away their faults, cease to do evil, and learn to do well. Love never despairs of anyone. Love never faileth.

COAST TO COAST U. S. FOR LEAGUE

MILLIONS ACCLAIM WILSON AS HE SPEEDS ACROSS THE LAND.

FEW ASK FOR CHANGES

Majority Feel That President's Guidance Should Be Held—He Regards Pact As Sure to Come Soon.

(By Mt. Clemens News Bureau)

Aboard President Wilson's Special Train—From the Capital at Washington to the far Pacific coast the President of the United States has journeyed on the most unusual expedition ever undertaken by a chief executive of the nation.

To discuss national questions, many presidents have toured the land; but Mr. Wilson is laying before America a question which affects the whole world—the question of whether or not we are to join in the League of Nations; whether we are to forget our former isolation and share with the other peoples of the earth the responsibilities of maintaining civilization and preventing, as he says we can do, future warfare.

Between the capital and the coast the president made fifteen speeches and half a dozen brief talks. All of 100,000 fellow citizens listened to him. Several millions had the chance to see him, and apparently everyone wanted to see him, from those who thronged the streets of the cities and towns where he stopped, to those who came to the railside or stood at little flag stations in remote places, knowing their only reward could be a fleeting glimpse and a wave of the hand.

He has met and talked to all types of citizens—to men big in the business, financial and professional worlds, to farmers and mechanical workers, to Indians and cowboys and foreign-born herders and rangers, to soldiers and to mothers who lost soldier-sons in the late war.

What do they all tell him? unanimously they say they want peace definitely settled, they want no more wars, they want the League of Nations, and most of the American people, it may be fairly said, tell the President they want the League just as it is, without the reservations or amendments which certain senators have insisted upon. The majority of citizens say to those who interview them on this tour:

"Woodrow Wilson guided us rightly before and during the war with Germany. We entered that war, everyone agrees, to end all wars. He says the league can do that. We want to do that, so let us keep on trusting him and get the league into operation as soon as possible. Forget politics."

Most Americans encountered on the tour have forgotten politics. Republican Governors and Mayors have introduced the President to his audience; the Major part of the local committees which have met him have been Republicans. They have all said: "We are nothing but Americans, Mr. President."

Mr. Wilson's arguments for the league, briefly summarized, are these:

There can be no peace, either now or in the future, without it. There can only be a regrouping of nations and a new "Balance of Power," which is certain to lead to war. There can be no war in the future, with the league in existence, because no single nation would defy the united rest of mankind, and if it did, it could be brought to terms by an economic boycott, and without the use of arms.

There can be no reduction in the cost of living until the league is established, for nations will not go ahead with peace time production until they know that peace is definitely assured and that production of war material is no longer necessary.

There can be wonderful prosperity, with the league in existence, for relations of labor and capital all over the world will be made closer and more friendly, and the worker will receive a fairer share of what he produces.

These declaration of the president, logically and eloquently put, have left his hearers thinking and thinking deeply. And then Mr. Wilson has pointed out, the people themselves, as differentiated from senators and politicians, seem to want just what the president wants, which is America for leadership

Quite as unusual as the purpose of the cross country tour is the manner in which it is being carried out and the completeness of the arrangements on the nine car train which is bearing the party.

At the rear is the private car Mayflower, occupied by the President and Mrs. Wilson. Next is a compartment car for the secretary Tumulty, Admiral Grayson, Mr. Wilson's Physician, four stenographers, the chief executive clerk and seven secret service men. Byond are three compartment cars which house twenty-one correspondents, five movie men, and a telegraphic and a railroad expert. Then there is a dinner, a club car, and two baggage cars, one of them converted into a business office. The train was exactly on time at every stop between Washington and the Coast.

Muchly Influenced

An extraordinary complaint has been filed in the DeKalb circuit court by Cleveland Washler, a Newville township farmer, against his mother-in law, Mrs. Melissa Kelley, of Stafford township.

The plaintiff is making an attempt to prevent the probating of the will of his wife, the late Edna Washler, who died in a hospital July 25 following an operation.

Mr. Washler owns the farm and he claims that most of the personal effects are his property. However in her will, his wife purports to give away to her mother all of the household goods, excepting those used in the kitchen, bedroom and dining room; all of her clothing, seven head of cattle, a driving horse and her money. The remainder of her property she bequeathed to her husband.

The will was made on the day before Mrs. Washler was taken to Fort Wayne for an operation. The plaintiff asserts that his wife was unduly influenced and that fraud was practiced upon her; and that she was of unsound mind when she executed the instrument.

The Washlers had been married two years and there are no children Mrs. Washler did not own any real estate.—Star.

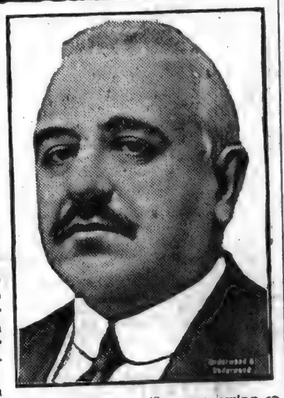
WHO IS WHO NOW

NITTI IS MAKING GOOD IN ITALY



The whole of Italy is gasping at the new methods introduced by her young and new leader, Premier Nitti. "The truth, above all the truth," is Nitti's motto, and he delivers it to the senate, to the deputies and to the people with emphatic openness.

Only a short time ago it was said everywhere that his cabinet would not last more than a few days. D'Annunzio and his followers were shouting themselves hoarse in denunciation. The Hotel Bristol, where the premier is living, had to be surrounded by armed police and riots against the government were the order of the day.

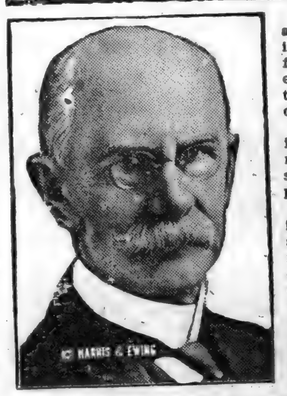
Nitti has revealed himself as one of the ablest men in Italy and by no means an unequal successor to former Premier Giovanni Giolitti, the veteran statesman who is said to be the power behind the scenes of the present government.

"The people of Italy have been told that the war was won for no advantage," he says, "because owing to diplomatic and economic reasons all of her aspirations cannot be materialized.

"Italy has won the war to very great advantage. We have now a solid frontier, almost impregnable. We are now free to work for our greater program, which is one of economical and political enlargement.

"We possess a greater number of men able to work than any other country. This is more than gold. It is power. And by power I mean power to carry on a program of civilization and progress."

SERVICE THAT IS BEYOND PRAISE



Senator Thomas of Colorado wrote a letter the other day in answer to one inquiring why he does not favor a bill for the payment of a bonus of $180 each to the United States soldiers in the great war. This letter says, among other things:

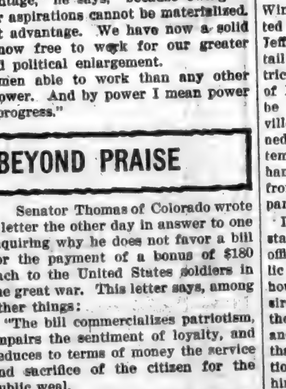
"The bill commercializes patriotism, impairs the sentiment of loyalty, and reduces to terms of money the service and sacrifice of the citizen for the public weal.

"Every man in the United States is the possessor of certain rights which are reciprocal with certain duties or responsibilities. His enjoyment of the one is inseparable from his recognition of the other. The ultimate sanction of society, whatever the form of its government, is force, whose final analysis is the soldier in the ranks. The obligation to serve when the occasion arises is insistent and inexorable. Because of it you possess individual freedom; the right of initiative, the companionship of family and friends, the enjoyment of property, and the right of its lawful accumulation.

"When threatened or assailed the government summons the citizen to its defense, and he must respond. In doing so he recognizes an obligation and pays a debt he owes to society."

The senator's conclusion was this service cannot be measured in money. It is beyond price; it is sacred; it incarnates sacrifice. It is above and beyond the sordid standards of the workaday world. The attempt to apply them not only fails, but fastens upon that service the reproach that its impulses and its purposes were mercenary.

WANTED: MORE AMERICAN PULP WOOD

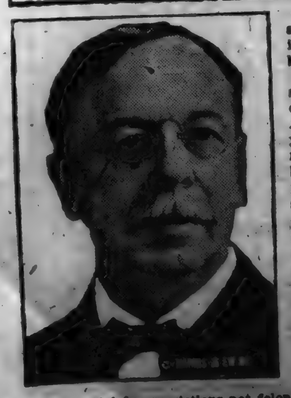


As a step toward conserving the decreasing supply of American pulp wood used in the manufacture of news print paper, Senator Watson of Indiana has introduced a resolution authorizing the secretary of agriculture to make a survey of the nation's available pulp wood timber supply. The sum of $100,000 is asked to carry on the survey and investigation.

"Two-thirds of the news print paper used by American newspapers," Senator Watson said, in introducing the resolution, "is imported or is manufactured from wood or pulp imported from Canada. One-third is made in the United States. The former proportion is steadily increasing, the latter is steadily decreasing."

Nearly all of the American news print manufacturing industry is located in the northeastern states—half in New York," the senator continued. "But in the Pacific Northwest—Washington, Oregon and part of California—and the inland empire of northwestern Montana and northern Idaho, are great forests that have been no more than touched by the few pulp mills in that section of the country."

CHAMBERLAIN AND COURTS-MARTIAL



Senator Chamberlain of Oregon is a consistent friend of the Yankee fighting man. He says of his courts-martial bill:

"I am advised that the total of the sentences imposed by courts-martial during the world war passed upon American soldiers was about 28,000 years. A clemency board has recommended a reduction of sentences which brings the total down to about 6,700 years that American soldiers must serve in prison.

"The stigma of conviction is not removed by action of the clemency board, and there is practically no revisory power over these sentences where the court-martial had jurisdiction and the proceedings have been regular. I have introduced a bill before the senate the purposes of which are:

"It restores soldiers, sailors and marines, who have been sentenced by courts-martial for convictions not felonies, and discharges them automatically as though they had not been convicted.

"It appoints a board of clemency and review to review sentences imposed by courts-martial, since April 6, 1917, in cases of crimes involving felonies."

Hoosier State Happenings

Shoals.—A gasoline famine recently developed in this part of Indiana. Shoals, Loogootee, Washington, Odon and other towns have been without gasoline, and the oil companies say they are unable to supply the towns.

Shelbyville.—Laboring men of this city, members of local unions, have arranged to take over a local coal yard and to provide coal for themselves during the winter at cost. A company is being formed and shares are being sold at $5 each. Only two shares will be sold to each member, who may pay for them at the rate of 50 cents a week. Coal will be sold at cost only to shareowners.

Columbus.—The Columbus school board has decided to petition the state board of tax commissioners for an increase in the school tax levy for Bartholomew county. A petition, signed by 500 residents of Bartholomew county, asking that the salary of Samuel Sharp, county superintendent of schools, be increased from $1,400 to $2,000, has been taken under advisement by the board of county commissioners.

Jeffersonville.—Captain Edwin S. Winn, zone surplus officer at the United States quartermaster's depot, in Jeffersonville, announced that the retail stores for the Jeffersonville district, which covers the southern half of Indiana and all of Kentucky, will be in this city, Indianapolis, Louisville and Lexington, Ky. It is planned to adopt the cash and carry system, although mail orders will be handled and goods will be dispatched from the Jeffersonville store to other parts of the retail district.

Indianapolis. — E. B. Weatherow, state high school inspector, who, in the office of state superintendent of public instruction, is managing a clearing house for teachers and schools that desire places and occupants, said that there is a shortage in Indiana of Latin and manual training teachers. He said that many schools have begun operations, despite the teacher shortage, by hiring substitutes. The state office has received many applications from teachers who wish to be placed in touch with schools where there is need of regularly employed teachers.

Indianapolis.—"If the consuming public prefers to go back to the days of five pecks to the bushel and the false bottom measures, then it is time to repeal the law that requires the sale of commodities by weight," said Frank W. Tucker, state inspector of weights and measures. Mr. Tucker reported the confiscation of short measures which were giving consumers 12½ instead of 15 pounds to the peck and a similar shortage in larger quantities of potatoes, tomatoes, etc., in Indiana cities, where there are no regularly employed city seniers.

Indianapolis.—A telegram was received at the headquarters of the Indiana Federation of Farmer's associations from the Illinois Agriculture association asking support in a movement which, if followed out by other agricultural bodies, will tie up the grain and live stock markets of the middle west. The Illinois farmers ask for the co-operation of the Indiana farmers in holding live stock and grain on the farm until "a sane market has re-established itself." Similar telegrams were sent to other farmers' organizations throughout the central states.

Indianapolis.—The state board of tax commissioners began on its fourth and last session this year. Work done at this session is new to the board, all of the work being provided for by the new tax law. The board will pass on tax levies and approve or decline to approve levies for all taxing units and will fix originally the state and specific levies in adjustment to the new 100 per cent valuation of property for taxing purposes. The first 30 or more days of the session will be devoted to this work. After that and before the end of the session on December 5 the board will give attention to adjusting erroneous assessments.

Shelbyville.—An affidavit, charging the pollution of Blue river, near this city, has been filed in police court by George N. Mannfield, chief of the fish and game division, state conservation commission, against the Fame Canning company, which operates a cannery near this city. The affidavit followed a visit to this city a few days ago by Mr. Mannfield, who inspected Blue river above and below the canning plant. Below the factory the river was filled with dead fish, and the banks were dotted with them. Tests showed that fish in this water would die in from two to ten minutes. It is alleged that the water is poisoned by refuse emptied into the river from the canning plant.

Linton.—The 26 schools in Stockton township, outside of Linton, did not open the past week as planned, because of differences between James T. Roach, township trustee, and a teachers' union which was organized during the summer. Mr. Roach recently had announced that he had employed a complete staff of teachers who were not members of the union, but when the teachers went to the schoolhouses to begin their duties, they were persuaded by committees in sympathy with the striking teachers not to attempt to teach. Accordingly they returned to their homes.

Petersburg.—Dry weather is injuring late crops and interfering with fall plowing.

Indianapolis.—Increased salary for ministers will be one of the most important subjects for discussion at the Indiana conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, which meets here Sept. 23 to 29. Church men arranging for the meeting say many ministers now receive less than $800 a year. Bishop William F. Anderson of Cincinnati will preside at the conference.

Indianapolis.—Judge Theophilus J. Moll of the Marion county Superior court, suggests a new remedy for the divorce evil. Judge Moll advocates a new statute providing that no divorce may be filed until after the parties to the suit have been married at least one year, and until a considerable time has elapsed following the final separation of the husband and wife.

Newcastle.—An overestimate of $10,000,000 in the assessed valuation of property in Henry county by the county auditor's office will result in a revision of the tax levies established here. The figures at first showed a total valuation of $80,000,000, and it was on this sum that the levies were based. Since the levies were established it has been found that the valuation is $70,000,000.

Evansville.—What is believed to be the highest price for clover seed in Wabash county (Ill.) was paid by Harry Risley of Mt. Carmel to O. H. Wood. The price was $25 a bushel. Crops in Vanderburg county will not be better than average this year despite the increased acreage, according to Ross N. Atkinson, county agent. A normal acreage of wheat is being planted. Continued dry weather has interfered with plowing.

Shelbyville.—The St. Paul Electric Light and Power company has been organized by a number of residents of the town and community. The company will investigate the advisability of constructing a dam across Flat Rock river at St Paul, and the construction of an electric plant at that point to provide power and light for Shelbyville and Greensburg, and towns and farms between the two points.

Lafayette.—The sowing of a normal acreage of wheat and rye throughout the state this fall is urged by the Indiana committee on food production and conservation, according to the announcement of the department of agricultural extension of Purdue university. Any reduction in acreage of these two important crops will serve only to aggravte the world food shortage, while a normal crop will do much to help restore normal conditions, the food men say.

Indianapolis.—"Any grocer who sold potatoes at 10 cents a pound is more than a profiteer, he is a robber," Dr. Harry E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana, stated in making a reply to Dr. Merl Park of Mooresville, who reported that a grocer in town was demanding such a price. Dr. Barnard requested that the name of the grocer be sent to his office and stated the information will be turned over to the United States district attorney.

Indianapolis.—Inspectors representing the state food and drug division have completed an investigation of the public milk supply of Terre Haute, which recently was severely criticised because of the alleged lack of sanitary precautions on the part of the dairymen and other handlers of milk and dairy products. As a result it was said by Harry E. Barnard, state food and drug commissioner, that 23 per cent of the cows inspected were found to have tuberculosis and these were slaughtered on the orders of Doctor Fleming, city health officer.

Indianapolis. — Governor Goodrich was urged to call a special session of the state legislature at once, or set a definite date for the session to ratify the Susan B. Anthony suffrage amendment, in a conference with Miss Ella Riegel of Washington, a member of the national advisory council of the National Woman's party. Indiana's action is necessary as soon as possible because of the psychological effect it will have on southern states, and other states which have not ratified the amendment, Miss Riegel told the governor.

Terre Haute.—Production of coal by the Indiana field for the week ending September 6 amounted to 475,507 tons as against 487,945 tons for the preceding week, the mines working 72.47 per cent of the time against 60.19 per cent for the preceding week, according to a report made public by the Indiana Bituminous Coal Operators' association. The loss in tonnage was caused largely by the fact that none of the mines was in operation Labor day. The car shortage was decreased from 29.28 per cent to 16.99 per cent. The tonnage lost on account of the car shortage was 124,864. The greatest car shortage was on the Big Four railroad, where it was 29.28 per cent. Local labor trouble also kept some mines from operating and the lost tonnage from this source was 5,18 per cent, which accounted for 35,910 tons.

Indianapolis—M. B. Noblet, secretary of the Hoosier State Automobile association, received for transmission to the state tax board resolutions unanimously adopted at Osgood by a mass meeting of 800 farmers, professional and business men calling on the state tax board to grant a 10-cent levy for roads.

Alexandria.—According to the manager of the Alexandria Preserving company, only part of the tomato crop in this district has been delivered to the factory. Farmers report hundreds of bushels of tomatoes in the field not ripe.

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 28

REVIEW: JESUS OUR SAVIOUR AND KING, OR PARABLES OF THE KINGDOM.

The method of review should be determined by the grade of the class. For the Primary the review should center in the topic, "Jesus and the Children;" the Junior, "Choosing Jesus as Saviour;" Intermediate, "Accepting Christ's Program for Our Lives;" for the Senior and Adult grades the subject of the church, noting its membership, ordinances, worship, and service. A better way would be to study more fully the parables of the kingdom as set forth in Matthew 13:44-50.

I. The Parable of the Hid Treasure (v. 14).

The usual interpretation of this parable, making Christ the hid treasure for which a sinner must give up everything in order to buy his salvation, must be rejected for the following reasons: (1) Christ is not hidden in a field, but has been lifted up and made a spectacle to the world. (2) Nobody has ever been obliged to buy the world in order to get Christ. (3) Salvation cannot be purchased, for it is God's free and gracious gift. (4) No warrant is ever held out to a man to conceal his religion after it is obtained.

1. The field. This is the world (v. 38). Fortunately this landmark has been made by Christ himself.

2. The treasure. In Psalm 135:4 we are told that Israel, the chosen people, is his treasure. The same truth is set forth in different places and ways (Deut. 7:6-8; 14:2; 26:18; 32:8, 9). When Christ uttered this parable the ten tribes were already concealed from human observation, and as to the rest of Israel it was a prophecy of that which was to follow. The kingdom as to its relation and bearing is now hidden. Christ was primarily sent to the Jews; for their sake the field was bought.

3. The Purchaser: the Son of God (John 3:16).

None but the Son of God had such resources to buy the world.

4. The purchase price. This was the precious blood of the Son of God, which is worth infinitely more than silver and gold and the treasures of the earth (I Peter 1:13, 19; Isa. 53).

II. The Parable of the Merchantman Seeking Goodly Pearls (vv. 45, 46).

1. The merchantman. He is actively engaged in search for pearls. In this search he discovers one pearl of great price. This merchantman is none other than Christ himself. The whole activity of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, since the fall of man, has been seeking those who are lost.

2. The purchasing price. The merchantman sold all—impoverished himself in order to buy the pearl. The poor lost sinner could not buy Christ. His salvation is without money and without price. Christ did impoverish himself, turned his back upon the heavenly glory (Phil. 2:6-8) to purchase the one pearl of great price by his own precious blood (Eph. 5:25; I Pet. 1:18, 19).

3. The pearl of great price. This is the church. The merchantman will find other pearls of value, but the peerless gem set above all others will be the church which he has purchased with his own blood.

III. The Parable of the Drag Net (vv. 47, 50).

This gives us a picture of the consummation of the kingdom. No one can mistake the meaning here. Note:

1. The sea. This word when used in a figurative sense denotes peoples and multitudes (Dan. 7:3, Rev. 17:15).

2. The drag net. The word "net" in the authorized version is properly translated "dragnet."

3. The net drawn to the shore when full.

4. The assortment made by the angels.

5. The destiny of the bad fish, or wicked men.

He Draws Hearts of Men.

On that day when our Lord Jesus Christ was lifted up, all sorts of people were drawn to him. There were those who loved him dearly at the foot of the Cross. There were scribes, and learned men, and aristocrats, and priests and common people. There were simple peasants from the country, shepherds from the hills, and a motley crowd from the city streets. There were Roman soldiers and Gallilean pilgrims. It was a crowd representative of all the world's people, and today when he is lifted up even as of old, he draws to himself the hearts of men.

The Work That God Appoints.

I am not bound to make the world go right, but only to discover and to do with cheerful heart the work that God appoints.—Jean Ingelow.

Pass That Day in Peace.

You have only a day to pass on earth; so act as to pass that day in peace.—De Lamennais.

To Live in Peace.

Peace is the fruit of love; for to live in peace, we must learn to suffer many things.—De Lamennais.

CURRENT WIT and HUMOR

The First Consideration.

"Is this a progressive town?" asked the visitor.

"Yes, indeed. Why, we have dozens of skyscrapers, imposing public buildings, good schools, fine churches, broad, well paved streets, a pure water supply and—"

"Quite so, quite so. But how are your golf links?"

Habit.

"Do you think party lines are being effaced?"

"No," said Senator Sorghum. "A man's party is something like his family relations. There may be some fierce differences of opinion, but they don't prevent those concerned from having to admit that they are still kinfolks."

Sure! Hines Will Fix It.

"I like the place," said Mr. Newlywed, "but the railroad fare is too high."

"But surely," said the bride, "the railroad will fix that for you when they know."

"When they know what?"

"That you're the man who bought five shares of their stock."

Proving an Alibi.

Flatbush—Do you think a man can be talked to death?

Bensonhurst—No, I don't.

"Why don't you?"

"Well, I've got a phonograph, a parrot, four talkative kids and a wife, and, say, I don't look like a dead one, do I?"

A GREAT IMPROVEMENT.

"Well son, I see you're changed considerable since you left home for college—s'pose you've made wonderful improvement."

"Yes father, I can play a guitar and sing harmony as well as anybody at school."

The Crucial Moment.

The time when life's affairs begin
To seem entirely wrong
Is when you've started butting in
Where you do not belong.

Wrong Place.

"Has that man yonder a film over his eye?"

"No; he's a motion picture director. He has a film in his eye."

Sure Clue.

"How did you guess at once that Jones was a married man?"

"Because he is such a good listener."

The Difference.

He—What's the difference between a gown and a creation?

She—I couldn't tell the exact figures, but it's a small fortune.—Blighty (London).

Her Difficulty.

"That actress can't play Lady Macbeth."

"Why not?"

"Lady Macbeth murdered sleep and she can't even kill time."

Nothing Doing.

Mr. Fewlocks—I'm really older than I look. Would you take me for fifty?

Miss Goldilocks—You! I wouldn't take you for a million.

Easily Done.

"How was it the detective got on the scent of the crime so quickly?"

"The suspect had been eating onions."

Quite True.

"There can be no more comedy scenes of drunken situations in plays."

"True, and that is matter for sober thought."

Flying High.

"You know we promised a goldeh apple to the most beautiful girl at the ball."

"Well?"

"The jeweler hasn't finished it. What shall we do?"

"What do we care for expense? Award her a real apple."

Wasting Time.

"In their quarrel he threw an alarm clock at his wife."

"He ought to be ashamed of himself to throw away his time so."

BEING THE AUTHENTIC NARRATIVE OF A TREASURE DISCOVERED IN THE BAHAMA ISLANDS IN THE YEAR 1904—NOW FIRST GIVEN TO THE PUBLIC.

By Richard Le Gallienne

COPYRIGHT BY DOUBLEDAY, PAGE & COMPANY

A SHAPE OF WITCHCRAFT.

Synopsis—The man who tells this story—call him the hero, for short—is visiting his friend, John Saunders, British official in Nassau, Bahama islands, Charles Webster, a local merchant, completes the trio of friends. Saunders produces a written document purporting to be the death-bed statement of Henry P. Tobias, a successful pirate, made by him in 1859. It gives two specific items—two millions and a half of treasure were buried by him and his companions. The conversation of the three friends is overheard by a pock-marked stranger. The document disappears. Saunders, however, has a copy. The hero, determined to seek the buried treasure, charters a schooner. The pock-marked man is taken on as a passenger. On the voyage somebody empties the gasoline tank. The hero and the passenger clash, the passenger leaving a manifesto bearing the signature, "Henry P. Tobias, Jr." The hero lands on Dead Men's Shoals. There is a fight, which is followed by several funerals. The hero finds a cave containing the skeletons of two pirates and a massive chest—empty save for a few pieces of eight scattered on the bottom. The hero returns to Nassau and by good luck learns the location of Short Shrift island. Webster buys the yawl Flamingo, and he and the hero sail for Short Shrift island. As the Flamingo leaves the wharf a young fellow, "Jack Harkaway," jumps aboard and is allowed to remain. Jack proves an interesting and mysterious passenger. The adventurers capture Tobias. "Jack Harkaway" proves to be a girl and disappears. The hero sails to Short Shrift island, sees an entrancing girl with a Spanish dubloon.

My presence seemed at once to put her on her guard. The music of her voice was suddenly hushed, as though she had hurriedly, almost in terror, thrown a robe of reticence about an impulsive naturalness not to be displayed before strangers. As for the storekeeper, he was evidently a familiar acquaintance. He had known her—he said after she was gone—since she was a little girl.

While he spoke, my eyes had accidentally fallen on the coin still in his hand, with which she had just paid him.

"Why," I said, "this is a Spanish doubloon!"

"That's what it is," said the Englishman laconically.

"But doesn't it strike you as strange that she should pay her bills with Spanish doubloons?" I asked.

"It did at first," he answered; and then, as if annoyed with himself, he was attempting to retrieve an expression that carried an implication he evidently didn't wish me to retain, he added: "Of course, she doesn't always pay in Spanish doubloons. I suppose they have a few old coins in the family and use them when they run out of others."

It was as lame an explanation as well could be, and no one could doubt that, whatever his reason for so doing, he was lying.

"But haven't you trouble in disposing of them?" I inquired.

"Gold is always gold," he answered, "and we don't see enough of it here to be particular as to whose head is stamped upon it, or what date. Besides, as I said, it isn't as if I got many of them; and you can always dispose of them as curiosities."

"Will you sell me this one?" I asked.

"I see no harm in your having it," he said, "but I'd just as soon you didn't mention where you got it."

"Certainly," I answered, disguising my wonder at his secretiveness. "What is it worth?"

He named the sum of sixteen dollars and seventy-five cents. Having paid him that amount I bade him good-night, glad to be alone with my eager, glowing thoughts. These I took with me to a bit of coral beach, made doubly white by the moon, rustled over by giant palms, and whispered to by the vast living jewel of the sea. I took out my strange doubloon and flashed it in the moon.

But, brightly as it shone, it hardly seemed as bright as it would have seemed a short while back; or, perhaps, it were truer to say that in another, newer aspect it shone a hundred times more brightly. The adventure to which it called me was no longer single and simple as before, but a gloriously confused goal of cloudy splendors, the burning core of which—suddenly raying out, and then lost again in brightness—were the eyes of a mysterious girl.

CHAPTER II.

Under the Influence of the Moon.

My days now began to drift rather aimlessly, as without apparent purpose I continued to linger on an island that might well seem to have little attraction to a stranger—how little I could see by the mystification of the good Tom, to whom, for once, of course, I could not confide. Yet I had a vague purpose; or, at least, I had a feeling that, if I waited on something would develop in the direction of my hopes. The doubloon still suggested that it was the key to a door of fascinating mystery to which chance might at any moment direct me.

And—why not admit it?—apart from my buried treasure, to the possible discovery of which the doubloon seemed to point, I was possessed with a growing desire for another glimpse of those haunting eyes. They needed not their association with the mysterious gold, they were magnetic enough to draw any man, with even the rudiments of imagination, along the path of the unknown. All the paths out of the little settlement were paths into the unknown, and, day after day, I followed one or another of them out into the wilderness, taking a gun with me, as an ostensible excuse for any spying eye, and bringing back with me occasional bags of the wild pigeons which were plentiful on the island.

One day I had thus wandered unusually far afield, and at nightfall found myself still several miles from home on a rocky path overhanging the sea. There was no sign of habitation anywhere. It was a wild and lonely place, and presently over its savage beauty stole the glamor of the moon rising far over the sea. I sat down on a ledge of the cliffs and watched the moonlight grow in intensity as the darkness of the woods deepened behind me. It was a night full of witchcraft; a night on which the stars, the moon, and the sea together seemed hinting at some wonderful thing about to happen.

Then, as if the fairy night were matching my thoughts with a challenge, what was this bright wonder suddenly present on one of the boulders far down beneath me?—a tall shape of witchcraft whiteness, standing, full in the moon, like a statue in luminous marble of some goddess of antiquity.

My eyes and my heart together told me it was she; and, as she hung poised over the edge of the water in the attitude of one about to dive, a turn of her head gave me that longed-for glimpse of those living eyes filled with moonlight. She stood another moment, still as the night, in her loveliness; and the next she had dived directly into the path of the moon. I saw her eyes moonfilled again, as she came to the surface, and began to swim—not, as one might have expected, out from the land, but directly in toward the unseen base of the cliffs. The moon-path did lead to a golden door in the rocks, I said to myself, and she was about to enter it. It was a secret door known only to herself; and then, for the first time that night, I thought of that doubloon.

Perhaps if I had not thought of it I should not have done what then I did. There will, doubtless, be those who will censure me. If so, I am afraid they must. At all events, it was the thought of that doubloon that swayed the balance of my hesitation in taking the moon-path in the track of that bright apparition.

I looked for a way down to the edge of the sea. It was not easy to find, but after much perilous scrambling I at length found myself on the boulder which had so lately been the pedestal of that Radiance; and, in another moment, I had dived into the moon-path and was swimming toward the mysterious golden door.

Before me the rocks opened in a deep narrow crevasse, a long rift, evidently slashing back into the cliff, beneath the road on which I had been treading. I could see the moonlit water vanishing into a sort of gleaming lane between the vast overhanging walls.

Presently I felt my feet rest lightly on firm sand, and, still shoulder deep in the water, I walked on another yard or two—to be brought to a sudden stop. There she was coming toward me, breast high in that watery tunnel! The moon, continuing its serene ascension, lit her up with a sudden beam. O! shape of bloom and glory!

For a moment we both stood looking at each other, as if transfixed. Then she gave a frightened cry and put her hands up to her bosom; as she did so a stream of something bright—like gold pieces—fell from her mouth, and two like streams from her opened hands. Then, as quick as light, she had darted past me and dived into the moon-path beyond. She must have swam under the water a long way, for when I saw her dark head rise again in the glimmering path it was at a distance of many yards.

I had no thought of following her, but stood in a dream among the watery gleams and echoes.

For me had come that hour of wonder; for me out of that tropic sea, into whose flawless deeps my eyes had so often gone adream, had risen the creature of miracle.

O! shape of moonlit marble! O! holiness of this night of moon and stars and sea!

Yes! I was in love. Yet I hope, and think, that the reader will not resent this unexpected incursion into the realms of sentiment when he considers that my sudden attack was not, like most such sudden attacks, an interruption in the robuster course of events, but, instead, curiously in the direct line of my purpose. Because the eyes of an unknown girl had thus suddenly enthralled me, I was not, therefore, to lose sight of that purpose.

On the contrary, they had suddenly shone out on the pathway along which I had been blindly groping. But for the accident of being in the dirty little store at so psychological a moment, hearing that strangely familiar voice and catching sight of that mysterious doubloon as well as those mysterious eyes, I should have set sail that very night and given up John P. Tobias' second treasure in final disgust. As it was, I was now warmly on the track of some treasure—whether his or not—with two bright eyes further to point the way. Never surely did a man's love and his purpose make so practical a combination.

When I reached my lodging at last in the early morning following that night of wonders my eyes and heart were not so dazed with that vision in the cave that I did not vividly recall one important detail of the strange picture—those streams of gold that had suddenly poured out of the mouth and hands of the lovely apparition.

Without doubting the evidence of my senses, I was forced to believe that, by the oddest piece of luck, I had stumbled upon the hiding place of that hoard of doubloons, on which my fair unknown drew from time to time as she would out of a bank.

But who was she?—and where was her home? There had seemed no sign of habitation near the wild place where I had come upon her, though, of course, a solitary house might easily have escaped my notice hidden among all that foliage, particularly at nightfall.

To be sure, I had but to inquire of the storekeeper to learn all I wanted; but I was averse from betraying my interest to him or to anyone in the settlement—for, after all, it was my own affair, and hers. So I determined to pursue my policy of watching and waiting, letting a day or two elapse before I again went out wandering with my gun.

I left the craggy bluff facing the sea and plunged into the woods. I had no idea how dark it was going to, but, coming out of the sun, I was at once bewildered by the deep and complicated gloom of massed branches overhead, and the denser darkness of shrubs and vines so intricately interwoven as almost to make a solid wall about one. Then the atmosphere was so close and airless that a fear of suffocation combined at once with the other fear of being swallowed up in all this savage green life, without hope of finding one's way out again into the sun. I fought my way in but a very few yards when both these fears clutched hold of me with a sudden horror, and the perspiration poured from me; I could no longer distinguish between the way I had come and any other part of the wood! Indeed, there was no way anywhere!

I must have battled through the veritable inferno of vegetation for at least an hour—though it seemed a lifetime. Clouds of particularly unpleasant midges filled my eyes, not to speak of mosquitoes and a peculiar kind of persistent stinging fly was adding to my miseries, when at last, begrimed and dripping with sweat, I stumbled out, with a cry of thankfulness, on to comparatively fresh air and something like a broad avenue running north and south through the wood. It was indeed densely overgrown, and had evidently not been used for many years. Still, it was comparatively passable, and one could at least see the sky and take long breaths once more.

Still there was no sign of a house anywhere. Presently, however, as I stumbled along I noticed something looming darkly through the matted forest on my left that suggested walls. Looking closer, I saw that it was the ruin of a small stone cottage, roofless and indescribably swallowed up in the pitiless scrub. And then, near by, I descried another such ruin, and still another—all, as it were, sunk in the terrible gloom of the vegetation, as sometimes, at low tide, one can discern the walls of a ruined village at the bottom of the sea.

Evidently I had come upon a long-abandoned settlement, and presently, on some slightly higher ground to the left, I thought I could make out the half-submerged walls of a much more ambitious edifice. Looking closer, I noted, with a thrill of surprise, the beginning of a very narrow path, not more than a foot wide, leading up through the scrub in its direction. Narrow as it was, it had clearly been kept open by the not-infrequent passage of feet. With a certain eerie feeling, I edged my way into it, and, after following it for a hundred yards or so, found myself close to the roofless ruin of a spacious stone house with something of the appearance of an old English manor house. Mullioned windows, finely masoned, opened in the shattered wall, and an elaborate stone staircase, in the interstices of which stout shrubs were growing, gave, or once had given, an entrance through an arched doorway—an entrance now stoutly disputed by the glistening trunk of a gum-elemi tree and endless matted ropelike roots of giant vines and creepers that writhed like serpents over the whole edifice. Forcing my way up this staircase, I found myself in a stone hall some sixty feet long, at one end of which yawned a huge fireplace, its flue mounting up through a finely carved chimney, still standing firmly at the top of the southern gable.

How had this almost baronial magnificence come to be in this far-away corner of a desert island? At first I concluded that here was a relic of the brief colonial prosperity of the Bahamas, when its cotton lords lived like princes, with a slave population for retainers—days when even the bootblacks in Nassau played pitch-and-toss with gold pieces; but as I considered further, it seemed to me that the style of the architecture and the age of the building suggested an earlier date. Could it be that this had been the home of one of those early eighteenth century pirates who took pride in flaunting the luxury and pomp of princes, and who had perhaps made this his headquarters and stronghold for the storage of his loot on the return from his forays on the Spanish Main? This, as the more spirited conjecture, I naturally preferred, and, in default of exact information, decided to accept.

The more I pondered upon this fancy and remarked the extent of the ruins — including several subsidiary outhouses—and noted, too, one or two choked stone staircases that seemed to descend into the bowels of the earth, the more plausible it seemed. In one or two places where I suspected underground cellars—dungeons for unhappy captives belike, or strong vaults for the storage of the treasure—I tested the floors by dropping heavy stones, and they seemed unmistakably to reverberate with a hollow rumbling sound; but I could find no present way of getting down into them. As I said, the staircases that promised an entrance into them were choked with debris. But I promised myself to come some other day, with pick and shovel, and make an attempt at exploring them.

Meanwhile, after poking about in as much of the ruins as I could penetrate, I stepped out through a gap in one of the walls and found myself again on the path by which I had entered. I noticed that it still ran on farther north, as having a destination beyond. So leaving the haunted ruins behind I pushed on and had gone but a short distance when the path began to descend slightly from the ridge on which the ruins stood; and there, in a broad square hollow before me, was the welcome living green of a flourishing plantation of coconut palms! It was evidently of considerable extent—a quarter of a mile or so, I judged—and the palms were very thick and planted close together. To my surprise, too, I observed, as at length the path brought me to them after a sharp descent, that they were fenced in by a high bamboo stockade, for the most part in good condition, but here and there broken down with decay.

Through one of these gaps I presently made my way and found myself among the soaring columns of the palms, hung aloft with clusters of the great green nuts. Fallen palm fronds made a carpet for my feet—very pleasant after the rough and tangled way I had traveled, and now and again one of the coco nuts would fall down with a thud amid the green silence. One of these, which narrowly missed my head, suggested that here I had the opportunity of quenching very agreeably the thirst of which I had become suddenly aware. My clasp knife soon made an opening through the tough shell, and, seated on the ground, I set my mouth to it, and, raising the nut above my head, allowed the "milk"—cool as spring water—to gurgle deliciously down my parched throat. When at length I had drained it, and my head once more returned to its natural angle, I was suddenly made aware that my poaching had not gone unobserved.

REFUSED TO BE MIXED UP

Spectator at Moving Picture Show Saw Trouble Ahead and Didn't Want to Witness It.

"I saw you at the moving picture show last evening," said the fat plumber, "but when I looked for you a little later I missed you."

"Yes, I got up and went home."

"When was that?"

"I left when the villain began to lay a snare for the life of the man who had to stay at his office on account of business."

"Did you see any more of the picture?"

"No."

"And you left at the most interesting part?"

"Yes."

"Why?"

"I knew if things kept on as they were headed there would be a fuss pretty soon between the two men, or between the man and his wife, and I made up my mind I wouldn't be mixed up in anybody's domestic troubles."

Disappointed.

Grandma—What did you think of church this morning?

Kid—I didn't like the organ very much.

DESERVED TO BE PARDONED

Quick-Witted Youngster Must Have Heard of Boast the Surgeon Was Fond of Making.

This Indianapolis physician boasts that he would rather do surgical work than eat. Even the children in the neighborhood know of this, as is proved by the following story:

Recently some of the neighboring boys were playing ball in front of his office. Suddenly the ball went wild and crashed through one of the physician's plate glass windows. Of course the doctor was furious and he expressed his feelings to the wee fellow who had thrown it. "Haven't I told you fellows that this would happen some day?" he demanded.

The little boy nodded his head. "Then what have you to say for yourself?" was the next thrust.

The little fellow gulped, swallowed and finally sobbed out: "Well, I though maybe I would hit one of your patients."

The Responsible Element.

"What's the trouble?" asked the musical comedy manager.

"All the principals of the company have gone on strike."

"How about the chorus and the costumes?"

"They're willing to work."

"Then why trouble me? Go ahead and give the show."

A PUBLIC SALE Within 20 miles of Hicksville, Ohio, is not thoroughly advertised unless advertised in the Hicksville Semi-weekly News. Leave your order for advertising at The News office when you have your bills printed.

Harry Randall of Lima, Ohio, was called home Saturday by the death of his grandmother at Waterloo, returning to his work Wednesday. Harold Myrtle, wife and son of Elgin, Illinois, and Mrs. Robert Webster of Waukegan, Ill., were Monday and Tuesday visitors in the Randall home also. They all came to attend the funeral at Waterloo on Monday.

The Hicksville fair this year has proven that it is possible to have a real fair in this section and that the people bordering on their state are about as much interested in it as the Buckeyes. Mrs. Carl Johnson carried off first honors for the farm display with Clyde Hart taking second honors. Each of these parties are deserving of considerable credit, as a display the magnitude of theirs means nearly a whole summer's work, and the local contestants are rather jubilant over their success. The value of the premiums would in no wise compensate them for their work, but the compliments of those who took in the display, were sufficient to offset any deficiency that might result. The value of the premiums perhaps would amount to over $100 in each case. Miss Eva Johnson took first prize in the school display and the Hart children took a number of good prizes also.

The Hicksville News says:

"The special farm display was one of the big attractions of the Fair. There were four displays and all were from the Coburntown neighborhood. Mrs. Carl Johnson took first money; Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Hart, second; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hart, third and Karl and Bernice Hart, fourth."

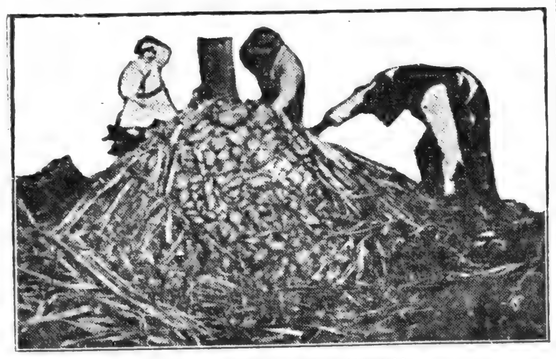
USEFULNESS OF GARDEN CAN BE EXTENDED INTO WINTER BY HOME STORAGE METHODS



A Splendid Way to Store Vegetables.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When the United States department of agriculture, through the weather bureau, tells you that frost is coming, get the garden crops under cover. Listen to the warning of the weather bureau—but heed, also the admonition of the horticultural experts of the department and put the tomatoes under cover where they will be kept at a temperature of about 50 degrees to 60 degrees to ripen. Tomatoes are late bearers, and as a rule many are still green or only partly ripe when frost comes.

The best way is to pull up the vines with the green tomatoes on them and hang them in the cellar or other sheltered place or pick the tomatoes and place them in a sash-covered cold frame, and cover them with straw or leaves, to ripen. Even tomatoes that appear to be perfectly green will, if of good size and the seed mature, ripen sufficiently for use as fresh tomatoes.

Better Quality of Tomatoes.

The quality of the tomatoes will probably be better if they are left on the vines and they will continue in usable condition for a much longer time, but they may be ripened successfully by plucking them from the vines and placing them in a single layer on a shelf in the cellar. This may be the better plan for some back-yard gardeners who have not sufficient space to hang up the vines.

The late corn patch, also, is likely to have a week or ten days of table service in it when the frost warning comes. It is not necessary to lose the green corn. Pluck the ears, leaving the husks on, and place them on the cellar floor with no two ears touching. The corn will remain in good condition for ten days or longer. Even if you have no cellar or other place where the ears can be spread, it is not necessary to lose the corn. Cut the stalks, leaving the ears on, and shock them in the garden. The corn will probably not remain in good condition so long as if properly stored on the cellar floor and it becomes toughened, but the season for using it can be extended several days.

Cover Beans and Peas.

There may be beans and peas not quite fully matured. If you have space in which to keep them under cover, pull up the vines by the roots, hang them up and let the pods dry out. Then shell the beans or peas, put them in bags, hang in a well-ventilated dry place, and keep them for winter use. This, of course, cannot be done if the beans or peas are too immature. Canning is the only means of saving them under that condition. The curing on the vine method, however, is the best plan for curing navy and other bush beans even when they are fully mature.

Care for Other Vegetables.

The cellar, if there is one, otherwise a pit in the garden, may be made to care for most of the other vegetables well into, if not through, the winter. Onions that are mature and thoroughly dried may be kept in the attic or in any dry, well-ventilated place where they will not freeze. A pit in the garden may be made to serve as a storage for potatoes, late beets, carrots, turnips, late cabbage, celery, and salsify. If there is no cellar available the earth mound in the garden can be made to serve admirably, saving a lot of money by keeping certain of the late garden vegetables for winter eating.

All that is necessary in making a vegetable storage pit is to place some straw, hay, dry grass, or fodder on the ground, place the vegetables on it in a conical pile, cover them with the same material used at the bottom, and then cover with two or three inches of earth. The hay, or whatever material is used, should be allowed to extend through the dirt at the apex of the cone, thus providing the necessary ventilation to keep the vegetables in good condition. Place a board or piece of tin over the hay at the apex of the cone and weight it down to keep it in place. If the earth over the entire surface of the mound is firmed down with the back of the shovel and a shallow trench dug around the base of the mound with an outlet so that the water will drain away, the vegetables may be kept practically dry for any length of time. As the weather becomes colder, it will be necessary to put on more earth, increasing the thickness of the earth covering to six or eight inches. In very cold weather it is advisable to put on an additional covering of straw, fodder, manure, or other litter.

Earth Mound Is Best.

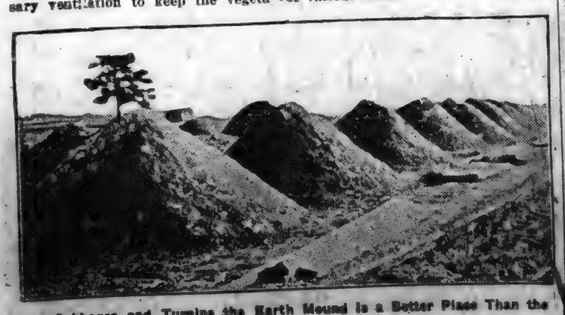
For cabbages and turnips the earth mound is a better storage place than the cellar. Both turnips and cabbages give off odors that, if stored in the cellar, will permeate the house and become very disagreeable. The method of storing cabbages may vary somewhat from the regular pit or mound. A very satisfactory method is to pull the plants, roots and all, and place them in a long pit, either on their sides or with the heads down, then cover lightly with straw and a layer of earth. A few heads may be removed from time to time without disturbing the remainder of the pit. Another good method is to pull the heads, roots and all, and set them side by side, with the roots down, in shallow trenches, making a bed of whatever size may be necessary. Around the bed erect a frame of rails, boards, or poles, or by driving down a row of stakes so that an inclosure about two feet in height is formed. Bank the outside of this frame with dirt and place poles across the top, covering them with straw, hay, corn fodder, or pine boughs. Make provision for cutting off the cabbage heads from one end of the pit as needed. When the heads are cut, leave the roots in position, and in the spring these roots will sprout and supply an abundance of greens.

Pit for Celery.

A similar pit may be made for celery, though the dirt should be excavated to a depth of about 14 inches. However, celery may be kept until extreme cold weather in the position where it grew by banking enough earth about the plants to hold the stems in a compact bunch. Just before freezing occurs bank the earth up to the very tops of the plants, almost covering them. As the weather becomes colder, cover the ridge with straw, corn fodder, or pine boughs held in place by stakes or boards.

Pumpkins and squashes may be kept for winter use in a dry storage room in the basement, placing them in rows on shelves, so that they are not in contact with each other.

The United States department of agriculture discusses all phases of the subject in Farmers' Bulletin 879, "Home Storage of Vegetables." There are other bulletins on storage houses of various kinds.



For Cabbages and Turnips the Earth Mound Is a Better Place Than the Cellar.

GET AHEAD OF JACK FROST.

Jack Frost is a kill-joy, but can be thwarted, to some extent at least.

You have gone to a lot of trouble and some expense, all spring, summer and fall, growing a garden. It has paid for itself, of course—probably many times over. But some of the crops are almost sure to be just at their best when frost comes. With a little care, the summer season can be prolonged, possibly several weeks. The supply of fresh vegetables from the garden need not be cut off the day Jack Frost arrives.

STYLES SHOW LITTLE CHANGE

Fall Coats and Wraps Very Like Those Worn During the Summer Months.

DOLMAN SHAPE IS RETAINED

Predictions That It Would Lose Its Popularity Have Been Proved Unfounded—Capes of English Tweed for Those Who Motor.

If one has been denied a fur coat for many years and has secretly cherished a longing thereafter, this is the year, doubtless, when this longing can be gratified, for so expensive are the lovely cloth things that if possession is based on the matter of cost then a decision in favor of the fur can be made, as there will be no very great difference in the price, remarks a fashion writer in the New York Sun. Of course I am referring to the elaborate and dressy models which all women admire and not everyone can possess.

Of course the sumptuous things of ermine, mink, sable and seal are regal and lovely in capelike and dolman effects which swathe the wearer from tip to toe in a luxury indescribable. Just as in the fall dresses there is nothing radically differing from styles of recent months, so in coats and wraps there is no departure from accepted models.

In Army Style.

A favored style is seen in the fine warm coats of camel's hair following the design of an officer's trench coat belted and close fitted for warmth and comfort. These lovely camel's-hair coats are often mounted with deep fur collars of softest texture, such as brown fox or lynx. The huge patch pockets and deep fur cuffs which were so in evidence a season ago are no longer featured so emphatically, either on this sort of coat or on one of the velvetlike duvetyns or wool velours.

The dolman shape persists in spite of the persistent rumors to the contrary, and many of the most exclusive houses are showing the dolman, not only in the less expensive materials, but in the splendid furs and brocades and velvets as well. Much embroidery in self colors done in heavy silken threads is observed—perhaps for the reason that the great cost of fur will place it beyond the average pocketbook. A curious notion is seen in the use of monkey fur placed fringelike along the bottom of short jackets, and used also to trim fur toques.

Monkey Fur Not Popular.

The use of monkey fur on an evening wrap of heaviest black satin is not unpleasing, as it has been cleverly done, but monkey fur will not be greatly admired, however smart it may be considered. On the particular wrap which it embellishes the back has been caught up in a sort of overdrapery suggesting the drooping blouse the French makers exploit continuously. The fur is used as a banding underneath this drapery and extends around to the front and down the sides of the coat. The very long hair has all the effect of fringe and is soft and silky. The sleeves in this wrap are really mere slits in the front sides and they too are edged with the monkey fur and form the collar, which is so made that it buttons up around the ears or falls away in a little cape effect. The lining of this handsome wrap is of white satin pailletted with huge black velvet dots. This fashion of doubling material adds as much to the cost as it does to the beauty of a garment and the full cloak is apt to be as radiant inside—perhaps even more so than the outside.

Less pretentious than this silken wrap and very lovely is a handsome straight-hanging coat of tan camel's hair with perfectly unbroken lines down the back except for a tight plain yoke across the shoulders. At the sides a pointed pocket effect is introduced in brown seal, and the high rolling collar which rumples around the throat is also made of the rich brown seal. The sleeves are long and tight and finished at the wrist with a narrow cuff of the brown seal. This is an excellent example of a conservative and beautiful coat suitable for every daytime occasion.

Velvet Wraps for Evening.

So many women have invested in handsome fur pieces for wear with the one-piece dress that the demand for the untrimmed coat is met by the manufacturers in velvet wraps for evening wear which have no fur whatever © Western Newspaper Union.

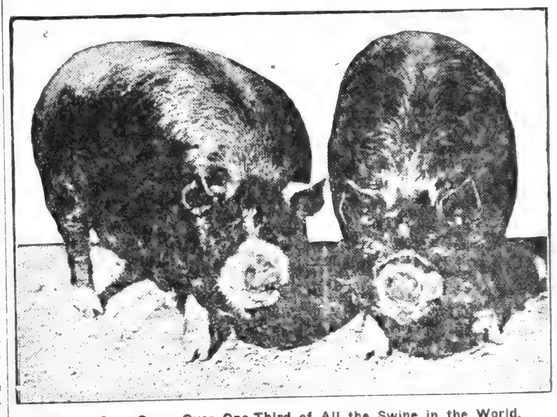
Short coat of tan jersey, exceedingly smart, with angora finish. The scarf and pocket flaps are of the cloth with all-over embroidery in yellow and black; on the whole exceedingly effective.

For the later, cooler evenings of summer, and the beautiful fall days—an elegant coat. It is made of taupe duvetyn with bands of braid, sauce color. It is extremely full at the bottom. The collar and cuffs are of beaver, with a panel of rich beaver trimming the front.

IMPROVEMENT IN QUALITY AND UNIFORMITY OF PORK THROUGH USE OF PUREBRED SIRES



Uncle Sam Owns Over One-Third of All the Swine in the World.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The United States contains considerably more than one-third of all the swine in the world. Swine are less numerous than either sheep or cattle in the world at large, but are more numerous than either in the United States, which this year has more hogs than its ten nearest competitors combined.

These facts showing the vast extent of the American hog growing industry are cited by Dr. J. R. Mohler, chief of the bureau of animal industry, United States department of agriculture, as "an anchor of confidence for weathering periods of adversity in pork production."

He concludes that pork products have become as well established in the diet of the American people as hogs have become established on farms, and that as more than two-thirds of the total 1918 exports of meat were pork products and more than five-sixths of the animal fats exported were lard, there is a great potential pork-absorbing ability in the densely populated European countries.

"We must take care of that business properly and realize that conditions are constantly changing, both at home and abroad," says Doctor Mohler. "We must study carefully what to do next and then do it promptly."

Foreign Demand for American Pork.

Latest reports from department representatives in Europe indicate that pork importation by the United Kingdom may be considerably smaller in the future than during the war, price being an important factor. In general, it appears that American fresh pork products have met with favor on the British markets, but there is room for improvement in the curing of hams and bacon. It is reported from France that the swine industry there decreased most rapidly between 1913 and 1916, but the decrease since 1916 has been comparatively small. Rapid recuperation seems possible with a good grain and potato crop this year and a continuation of present high prices. While the best grades of American hams and bacon met with French approval, it is said that these products are too expensive for the average French family. It is not likely that France will import breeding swine to any large extent, although continued importations of meats and fats are expected.

South America, on the other hand, is importing swine from the United States with considerable regularity. Since the first of this year there have been seven purchases and shipments, ranging from about 30 to 70 head each of pure-bred stock for breeding, in addition to a number of smaller shipments.

Replacing Inferior Sires.

"The most recent activity of the department likely to affect the swine industry, as well as other live stock, is the proposed new plan for hastening the replacement of inferior sires by good pure-breds. Early in June an outline of the plan was mailed to about 1,200 prominent breeders, live stock officials and extension workers, soliciting their comments before the campaign is definitely launched. Briefly, the plan includes recognition for the owners of pure-bred sires of the main classes of live stock, namely, cattle, horses, swine, sheep, goats and poultry. The recognition will take the form of a printed emblem bearing the breeder's name and which he may display. We feel that this plan will considerably hasten live stock improvement in the United States and discourage the use of inferior sires. 'Inferior sires' include inferior pure-breds as well as scrubs. In a few months the campaign is expected to take definite form."

Other Help for Swine Men.

Other principal policies of the bureau of animal industry relating to swine are the following:

Improvement in quality and uniformity through the use of good, pure-bred breeding stock, especially sires.

Encouragement of swine shows and exhibits, swine judging, pig-club work, community breeding and similar activities.

Proper supervision of feeder and stocker hogs redistributed from market centers for additional feeding.

Effective supervision of the manufacture and distribution in interstate commerce of anti-hog-cholera serum and virus to insure the purity and potency of these products.

Immunization of valuable swine, especially breeding stock, against hog cholera. Immunization of market hogs at an age depending on local conditions; also the immunization of swine introduced into a herd where all the animals have not been vaccinated.

Suppression of tuberculosis in hogs by eradicating that disease from cattle which the hogs follow, and also from dairy cows whose milk is fed to hogs as skim milk, whey or in other form.

Control of internal and external parasites on hogs through use of sanitary precautions, suitable disinfectant, and general care.

Sanitary housing, and careful studies of feeding for the purpose of making gains conducive to producing pork at a low net cost.

Improved methods of slaughtering hogs and curing pork for home use.

Research in animal genetics as a basis for practical breeding.

Farrowing of fall pigs in Northern states not later than October 1.

Raising two litters of pigs a year from matured sows in Southern states, and also in Northern states under favorable conditions of care and housing.

Continuous feeding and breeding experiments, accompanied by prompt announcement and publication of noteworthy results.

Compilation of statistics and meat inspection data governing number weight, dressed percentage and other useful information regarding pork production and consumption.

HIGH-CLASS BULLY BEEF

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

An Oklahoma farmer had two registered Shorthorn yearling bulls that he priced at $100 each for breeding purposes. A butcher saw the bulls, asked the price, but learned that they were registered, and that it would take $100 each to buy them. He bought them, killed them, and stated that they were the cheapest cattle he had bought for some time, because they cut the better kinds of beef, and more of it.

PREPARE HONEY FOR MARKET

After Removing From Hives It Should Be Graded and Packed According to Established Rules.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

After honey is removed from the hive it should be prepared carefully for market by proper cleaning of the sections, and especially by grading and packing in strict conformity with established grading rules.

BANISH SCRUB SIRES FROM UNITED STATES

With confidence that better live stock will bring satisfaction and many benefits to its owners, I invite the concerted action of farmers, stockmen, and others in banishing scrub sires from the United States. The widespread use of inferior male breeding animals has been for many years a cause of low production per animal and of needlessly poor quality.

The continuance of such conditions is uneconomic and unnecessary. The direct and practical means of improvement is to use breeding animals, especially sires, which are true representatives of breeds developed for a definite, useful purpose.

I am confident, too, that the public, knowing production to be performed with maximum efficiency, will look upon stock raising with increased respect and understanding. In a few localities noteworthy improvement in special lines has been taking place through individual and community efforts. Let us now hasten such improvement wherever live stock is kept in the United States.

J. R. MOHLER,
Chief, Bureau of Animal Industry.

GOOD ROADS

KEEP ROADS IN GOOD REPAIR

Concrete or Special Road Brick Set in Cement Over Concrete Foundation Is Favored.

The war and the consequent railroad congestion imposed heavy traffic burdens upon our highways; burdens, in fact, much greater than the roads were built to sustain. To make matters still worse, labor and repair materials were scarcer during the war, and many roads as a result are now in deplorable condition. As the preacher would say, they are "more holy than righteous."

The year 1919 is going to witness an immense road repair movement. And the work should be at least fairly permanent. Merely throwing dirt or loose stones in the holes is a sheer waste of time, because after a few automobiles and trucks go over the roads these loose materials are pushed out again and conditions are as bad as ever.

Broken stones and tar binder are the only satisfactory repair materials for macadam roads, and many improved country roads are of that type.

It is beginning to be realized that concrete or special road brick set in cement over a concrete foundation must be used for truck roads designed to carry heavy truck traffic. Anything cheaper and less stable simply means bad roads and constant repairs.

For laterals or main roads in sparsely settled countries where traffic is not heavy and when the amount available for road construction is not large, tar macadam highways are quite satisfactory.

PLAN HONOR TO ROOSEVELT

Suggestions Have Been Made to Name Transcontinental Highway After Former President.

Memorials to the dead and tributes to the living in the form of highways is a plan which is catching the popular fancy everywhere. Since France christened a street in honor of Wilson, Tientsin, China, has done the same thing, and elsewhere suggestions have been made that a transcontinental highway be named in honor of Roosevelt. Louisiana is planning a Victory oak way and sentiment is reflected by movements to rename streets and highways after heroes of the war in other states.

DURABLE ROAD SAVES MONEY

Saving of Eight Cents Per Ton Mile Can Be Effected in Transportation Costs Alone.

The report of the joint congressional committee which investigated highway economics in 1914 shows that a saving of eight cents per ton mile can be effected in transportation costs when a road is lifted from the dirt to the durable class. This does not take into account increased real estate valuations or social advantages resulting from the improvement.

IMPROVE ROADS FOR TRUCKS

Bureau of Markets Arrives at Conclusion Motor Vehicles Have Passed Experimental Stage.

Inadequate highways are one of the penalties with which the user of highway transportation must contend, says Bulletin No. 770, recently issued by the bureau of markets. The department arrives at the conclusion that the motortruck has passed the experimental stage, but says that before it can attain its fullest usefulness the highways must be improved.

Good Drainage Necessary.

The most necessary requirement of a good road is a solid, bone-dry foundation. This means good drainage first, last and all the time.

Trees Along Highways.

Trees at a distance of 50 or 60 feet apart along the highway add to its comfort and pleasing appearance.

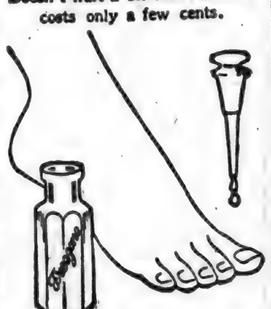
Lift off Corns!

Doesn't hurt a bit and Freezone costs only a few cents.



With your fingers! You can lift off any hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the hard skin calluses from bottom of feet.

A tiny bottle of "Freezone" costs little at any drug store; apply a few drops upon the corn or callus. Instantly it stops hurting, then shortly you lift that bothersome corn or callus right off, root and all, without one bit of pain or soreness. Truly! No humbug!—Adv.

OLD AGE STARTS WITH YOUR KIDNEYS

Science says that old age begins with weakened kidneys and digestive organs.

This being true, it is easy to believe that by keeping the kidneys and digestive organs cleansed and in proper working order old age can be deferred and life prolonged far beyond that enjoyed by the average person.

For over 200 years GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil has been relieving the weaknesses and disability due to advancing years. It is a standard old-time home remedy and needs no introduction. GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil is inclosed in odorless, tasteless capsules containing about 5 drops each. Take them as you would a pill, with a swallow of water. The oil stimulates the kidney action and enables the organs to throw off the poisons which cause premature old age. New life and strength increase as you continue the treatment. When completely restored continue taking a capsule or two each day. GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules will keep you in health and vigor and prevent a return of the disease.

Do not wait until old age or disease have settled down for good. At the first sign that your kidneys are not working properly, go to your druggist and get a box of GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. Money refunded if they do not help you. Three sizes. But remember to ask for the original imported GOLD MEDAL brand. In sealed packages.

PROTECTION!

A bank account has many advantages besides providing an absolutely safe place for your money. Your bank deposit book affords a complete record of cash receipts, while the stubs of your check book are a perfect record of expenses and payments. Paying a laborer, store account or any other bill with a bank check is much safer than with money because you avoid the risk of handling the actual cash and the endorsed check returned by the bank is the best kind of a receipt.

Culler Home Was Robbed.

Two of the three thieves who ransacked the home of Neff Culler in Newville township last Thursday and got away with numerous valuables were captured in South Bend, according to word received by Sheriff Frank Baltz Monday morning.

Mr. Baltz, immediately after the burglary, communicated with the secretary of state of Ohio and received a telegram Saturday stating that the license number of the automobile used by the thieves was issued to L. M. Riddle & Company of Willard, O., automobile dealers.

Mr. Baltz wrote to the Riddle company and on Monday morning received a telephone message from Willard stating the car belonged to them and had been taken from the streets of Willard, September 16. Mr. Willard added that the South Bend police had wired him that an automobile answering the description of the car stolen had been recovered in that city.

Mr. Baltz then telephoned to South Bend and was informed by the chief of police that two of the three men had been captured with the car, but that the third man had not been seen. The chief said the two men taken into custody are deserters from the army. One of them wore a soldier's uniform when he made his trip through DeKalb county. Mr. Baltz was also informed that Mr. Culler's specially built rifle was recovered.

Mr. Baltz went to South Bend Monday afternoon to make an effort to get the thieves and bring them to DeKalb county to answer for their crime.—Star.

Running Three Stores.

The firm name of Maxwell Bros. of Hicksville, is familiar to our readers, being known as the live dealers in Gents Furnishings of this entire community, and this week we are pleased to announce that they are now operating a chain of three stores, namely, Hicksville and Sherwood, Ohio and Butler, Indiana, having recently purchased the Wm. Knisely & Son, stock at Butler.

The new store at Butler is managed by a former St. Joe boy, Ralph White, well known to the people in this vicinity, and we are informed by the company that he has just returned from Chicago, where he has finished a course in measuring for mens suits and other details that come to stores of this nature. Ralph will be glad to meet any of his old acquaintances when in Butler.

The stores are all conducted along the same business line. Every article is absolutely guaranteed to its customer and the firm has made a wonderful success based entirely upon this method of doing business.

Recital At Concord

In this issue of the News will be found a musical program of the students of Miss Pearl Shurts and Mrs. Jesse Provines of Concord and vicinity, to be given at the Concord church on Saturday evening of this week at 8:30. It should not be of interest to the parents only but to everyone in reach who appreciate the value of music and their presence will thus be an inspiration to the pupils. Many of the pupils are but mere children and have taken but a few lessons. The art of music in certain localities is loosing its grip on the young people; but this is not true in Concord township especially and its real value cannot be measured in dollars and cents.

Church Notes

Services will be held at the M. P. Church each evening next week beginning with Tuesday evening. Rev. John Elson, pastor of the M. P. Church at Kendallville, will preach on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Rev. Elson is a forceful speaker and will bring a worth while message. On Friday evening Rev. Manley of the Christian Church will preach. This is to be a rallying service for the Methodist folks of the community in preparation for the winter's work, but every one is invited to attend the services.

Frank Lothamer Instantly Killed Monday Noon by West bound Passenger, at Crossing at Home East of Town, on Returning from Town.

Frank A. Lothamer, son of Morris Lothamer, well and favorably known to practically everyone in this community, was instantly killed at the B. & O. crossing at his home, by train No. 37, due at St. Joe at 11:44 Monday. The train was running late Monday and were running at a terrific rate of speed. Frank had been to town doing some trading and it is thought that he had his cozy cab buggy closed so that he was unable to hear the approaching train. The engineer did not see the rig until he had struck it.

The buggy was scattered along the track for 150 feet and was a complete wreck. The horse was badly mangled and was thrown for a distance of 90 feet to the right of the train along the track. Frank was picked up between the tracks about 150 feet west of the crossing. While his body was not mutilated it was badly broken up by the blow. The train crew stopped the train opposite the Chas. Tustison home and Mr. Tustison was in the yard at the time, he was asked by the train men to get on the engine and they soon backed up to where the accident happened. Mr. Tustison at once identified the body so that the crew were able to make a report at once.

It was only a few minutes until the news was spreading and by the time the neighbors were coming in the train had left, and undertaker Kinsey was soon on the job to look after the body. As soon as he had received permission from the Coroner, he moved the body to his morgue at St. Joe and prepared it for the burial.

Frank was well known to every one and was quite a sociable fellow, always jolly and full of business, in spite of his affliction. Not more than a half hour had passed from the time he had been on our streets until he was reported dead.

Since last spring he had been living in his home with Miss Ryder, an elderly lady as his housekeeper, who came to care for him after the death of his mother. His father is a patient at the Hospital for the Insane at Richmond, Indiana. On next Tuesday he would have passed his forty-first birthday.

The funeral services were held from the home on Wednesday morning with Rev. A. K. Mumma officiating. Burial at Riverside.

Christian Church Reception

Last Thursday evening following the prayer meeting a joint reception was given by the St. Joe and Coburntown congregations for their new pastor, T. A. Manley and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Manley were called upon to respond which they did in an appropriate manner.

Veterinarian Locates Here.

St. Joe now has a full fledged veterinarian in the person of S. D. Wiles, a graduate of the Indiana Veterinarian College at Indianapolis, having completed his course in 1917. Mr. Wiles is a young man and naturally he was subject to the draft, and he entered the army and served as Second Lieutenant in the Veterinary corps overseas for over eight months, receiving his discharge from the service last July.

Before entering the service he practiced out of Indianapolis and has some real experience in the care of sick animals. He comes to the people here well recommended by the college as a man well informed along this line of work. Business is good, Dr. Wiles said and he has his office in the Chas. COVENANT OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Complete Text of This Important Document As It Was Signed at Paris and Which Is Now Causing Discussion in This Country.

The people of the United States have been asked, by both the proponents and the opponents of the peace treaty and League of Nations covenant, to give expression to their desires as to the ratification of the treaty as it stands or with amendments or reservations. Some of them have responded, at the meetings addressed by the president and by the opposing senators, or by communications to their senators. But the vast majority of the people are handicapped by their ignorance of the matter. Probably not one in ten thousand has read the covenant of the League of Nations as it was presented to the senate, mainly because few have had the opportunity. In order that our readers may be prepared to do their full duty as citizens in regard to the controversy, the complete text of the covenant is herewith presented, and they are asked to read it carefully.

The high contracting parties, in order to promote international co-operation and to achieve international peace and security by the acceptance of obligations not to resort to war, by the prescription of open, just, and honorable relations between nations, by the firm establishment of the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct among governments, and by the maintenance of justice and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organised peoples with one another, agree to this covenant of the League of Nations.

ARTICLE 1.—The original members of the League of Nations shall be those of the signatories which are named in the annex to this covenant and also such of those other states named in the annex as shall accede without reservation to this covenant. Such accession shall be effected by a declaration deposited with the secretariat within two months of the coming into force of the covenant. Notice thereof shall be sent to all other members of the league.

Any fully self-governing state, dominion, or colony not named in the annex may become a member of the league if its admission is agreed to by two-thirds of the assembly, provided that it shall give effective guarantees of its sincere intention to observe its international obligations, and shall accept such regulations as may be prescribed by the league in regard to its military, naval and air forces and armaments.

Any member of the league may, after two years' notice of its intention so to do, withdraw from the league, provided that all its international obligations and all its obligations under this covenant shall have been fulfilled at the time of its withdrawal.

ARTICLE 2.—The action of the league under this covenant shall be effected through the instrumentality of an assembly and of a council, with a permanent secretariat.

ARTICLE 3.—The assembly shall consist of representatives of the members of the league.

The assembly shall meet at stated intervals and from time to time as occasion may require at the seat of the league or at such other place as may be decided upon.

The assembly may deal at its meetings with any matter within the sphere of action of the league or affecting the peace of the world.

At meetings of the assembly each member of the league shall have one vote, and may have not more than three representatives.

ARTICLE 4.—The council shall consist of representatives of the principal allied and associated powers, together with representatives of four other members of the league. These four members of the league shall be selected by the assembly from time to time in its discretion. Until the appointment of the representatives of the four members of the league first selected by the assembly, representatives of Belgium, Brazil, Spain, and Greece shall be members of the council.

With the approval of the majority of the assembly, the council may name members of the league whose representatives shall always be members of the council; the council with like approval may increase the number of members of the league to be selected by the assembly for representation on the council.

The council shall meet from time to time as occasion may require, and at least once a year, at the seat of the league, or at such other place as may be decided upon.

The council may deal at its meetings with any matter within the sphere of action of the league or affecting the peace of the world.

Any member of the league not represented on the council shall be invited to send a representative to sit as a member at any meeting of the council during the consideration of matters specially affecting the interests of that member of the league.

At meetings of the council, each member of the league represented on the council shall have one vote, and may have not more than one representative.

ARTICLE 5.—Except where otherwise expressly provided in this covenant or by the terms of the present treaty, decisions at any meeting of the assembly or of the council shall require the agreement of all the members of the league represented at the meeting.

All matters of procedure at meetings of the assembly or of the council, including the appointment of committees to investigate particular matters, shall be regulated by the assembly or by the council and may be decided by a majority of the members of the league represented at the meeting.

The first meeting of the assembly and the first meeting of the council shall be summoned by the president of the United States of America.

ARTICLE 6.—The permanent secretariat shall be established at the seat of the league. The secretariat shall comprise a secretary general and such secretaries and staff as may be required.

The first secretary general shall be the person named in the annex; thereafter the secretary general shall be appointed by the council with the approval of the majority of the assembly.

The secretaries and staff of the secretariat shall be appointed by the secretary general with the approval of the council.

The secretary general shall act in that capacity at all meetings of the assembly and of the council.

The expenses of the secretariat shall be borne by the members of the league in accordance with the apportionment of the expenses of the international bureau of the Universal Postal union.

ARTICLE 7.—The seat of the league is established at Geneva.

The council may at any time decide that the seat of the league shall be established elsewhere.

All positions under or in connection with the league, including the secretariat, shall be open equally to men and women.

Representatives of the members of the league and officials of the league when engaged on the business of the league shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities.

The buildings and other property occupied by the league or its officials or by representatives attending its meetings shall be inviolable.

ARTICLE 8.—The members of the league recognise that the maintenance of peace requires the reduction of national armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety and the enforcement by common action of international obligations.

The council, taking account of the geographical situation and circumstances of each state, shall formulate plans for such reduction for the consideration and action of the several governments.

Such plans shall be subject to reconsideration and revision at least every ten years.

After these plans shall have been adopted by the several governments, the limits of armaments therein fixed shall not be exceeded without the concurrence of the council.

The members of the league agree that the manufacture by private enterprise of munitions and implements of war is open to grave objections. The council shall advise how the evil effects attendant upon such manufacture can be prevented, due regard being had to the necessities of those members of the league which are not able to manufacture the munitions and implements of war necessary for their safety.

The members of the league undertake to interchange full and frank information as to the scale of their armaments, their military and naval programs and the condition of such of their industries as are adaptable to warlike purposes.

ARTICLE 9.—A permanent commission shall be constituted to advise the council on the execution of the provisions of articles 1 and 8 and on military and naval questions generally.

ARTICLE 10.—The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. In case of any such aggression or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression the council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

ARTICLE 11.—Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the members of the league or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the whole league, and the league shall take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations. In case any such emergency should arise the secretary general shall on the request of any member of the league forthwith summon a meeting of the council.

It is also declared to be the friendly right of each member of the league to bring to the attention of the assembly or of the council any circumstance whatever affecting international relations which threatens to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends.

ARTICLE 12.—The members of the league agree that if there should arise between them any dispute likely to lead to a rupture, they will submit the matter either to arbitration or to inquiry by the council, and they agree in no case to resort to war until three months after the award by the arbitrators or the report by the council.

In any case under this article the award of the arbitrators shall be made within a reasonable time, and the report of the council shall be made within six months after the submission of the dispute.

ARTICLE 13.—The members of the league agree that whenever any dispute shall arise between them which they recognise to be suitable for submission to arbitration and which cannot be satisfactorily settled by diplomacy, they will submit the whole subject matter to arbitration.

Disputes as to the interpretation of a treaty, as to any question of international law, as to the existence of any fact which if established would constitute a breach of any international obligation, or as to the extent and nature of the reparation to be made for any such breach, are declared to be among those which are generally suitable for submission to arbitration.

For the consideration of any such dispute the court of arbitration to which the case is referred shall be the court agreed on by the parties to the dispute or stipulated in any convention existing between them.

The members of the league agree that they will carry out in full good faith any award that may be rendered, and that they will not resort to war against a member of the league which complies therewith. In the event of any failure to carry out such an award, the council shall propose what steps should be taken to give effect thereto.

ARTICLE 14.—The council shall formulate and submit to the members of the league for adoption plans for the establishment of a permanent court of international justice. The court shall be competent to hear and determine any dispute of an international character which the parties thereto submit to it. The court may also give an advisory opinion upon any dispute or question referred to it by the council or by the assembly.

ARTICLE 15.—If there should arise between members of the league any dispute likely to lead to a rupture, which is not submitted to arbitration in accordance with article 13, the members of the league agree that they will submit the matter to the council. Any party to the dispute may effect such submission by giving notice of the existence of the dispute to the secretary general, who will make all necessary arrangements for a full investigation and consideration thereof.

For this purpose the parties to the dispute will communicate to the secretary general, as promptly as possible, statements of their case with all the relevant facts and papers, and the council may forthwith direct the publication thereof.

The council shall endeavor to effect a settlement of the dispute, and if such efforts are successful, a statement shall be made public giving such facts and explanations regarding the dispute and the terms of settlement thereof as the council may deem appropriate.

If the dispute is not thus settled, the council either unanimously or by a majority vote shall make and publish a report containing a statement of the facts of the dispute and the recommendations which are deemed just and proper in regard thereto.

Any member of the league represented on the council may make public a statement of the facts of the dispute and of its conclusions regarding the same.

If a report by the council is unanimously agreed to by the members thereof other than the representatives of one or more of the parties to the dispute, the members of the league agree that they will not go to war with any party to the dispute which complies with the recommendations of the report.

If the council fails to reach a report which is unanimously agreed to by the members thereof, other than the representatives of one or more of the parties to the dispute, the members of the league reserve to themselves the right to take such action as they shall consider necessary for the maintenance of right and justice.

If the dispute between the parties is claimed by one of them, and is found by the council to arise out of a matter which by international law is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of that party, the council shall so report, and shall make no recommendation as to its settlement.

The council may in any case under this article refer the dispute to the assembly. The dispute shall be so referred at the request of either party to the dispute, provided that such request be made within 14 days after the submission of the dispute to the council.

In any case referred to the assembly all the provisions of this article and of article 12 relating to the action and powers of the council shall apply to the action and powers of the assembly, provided that a report made by the assembly, if concurred in by the representatives of those members of the league represented on the council and of a majority of the other members of the league, exclusive in each case of the representatives of the parties to the dispute, shall have the same force as a report by the council concurred in by all the members thereof other than the representatives of one or more of the parties to the dispute.

ARTICLE 16.—Should any member of the league resort to war in disregard of its covenants under articles 12, 13, or 15, it shall ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all other members of the league, which hereby undertake immediately to subject it to the severance of all trade or financial relations, the prohibition of all intercourse between their nationals and the nationals of the covenant-breaking state, and the prevention of all financial, commercial, or personal intercourse between the nationals of the covenant-breaking state and the nationals of any other state, whether a member of the league or not.

It shall be the duty of the council in such case to recommend to the several governments concerned what effective military, naval or air force the members of the league shall severally contribute to the armed forces to be used to protect the covenants of the league.

The members of the league agree, further, that they will mutually support one another in the financial and economic measures which are taken under this article, in order to minimise the loss and inconvenience resulting from the above measures, and that they will mutually support one another in resisting any special measures aimed at one of their number by the covenant-breaking state, and that they will take the necessary steps to afford passage through their territory to the forces of any of the members of the league which are co-operating to protect the covenants of the league.

Any member of the league which has violated any covenant of the league may be declared to be no longer a member of the league by a vote of the council concurred in by the representatives of all the other members of the league represented thereon.

ARTICLE 17.—In the event of a dispute between a member of the league and a state which is not a member of league, or between states not members of the league, the state or states not members of the league shall be invited to accept the obligations of membership in the league for the purposes of such dispute, upon such conditions as the council may deem just. If such invitation is accepted, the provisions of articles 12 to 16 inclusive shall be applied with such modifications as may be deemed necessary by the council.

Upon such invitation being given the council shall immediately institute an inquiry into the circumstances of the dispute and recommend such action as may seem best and most effectual in the circumstances.

If a state so invited shall refuse to accept the obligations of membership in the league for the purpose of such dispute, and shall resort to war against a member of the league, the provisions of article 16 shall be applicable as against the state taking such action.

If both parties to the dispute when so invited refuse to accept the obligations of membership in the league for the purposes of such dispute, the council may take such measures and make such recommendations as will prevent hostilities and will result in the settlement of the dispute.

ARTICLE 18.—Every treaty or international engagement entered into hereafter by any member of the league shall be forthwith registered with the secretariat and shall as soon as possible be published by it. No such treaty or international engagement shall be binding until so registered.

ARTICLE 19.—The assembly may from time to time advise the reconsideration by members of the league of treaties which have become inapplicable and the consideration of international conditions whose continuance might endanger the peace of the world.

ARTICLE 20.—The members of the league severally agree that this covenant is accepted as abrogating all obligations or understandings inter se which are inconsistent with the terms thereof, and solemnly undertake that they will not hereafter enter into any engagements inconsistent with the terms thereof.

In case any member of the league shall, before becoming a member of the league, have undertaken any obligations inconsistent with the terms of this covenant, it shall be the duty of such member to take immediate steps to procure its release from such obligations.

ARTICLE 21.—Nothing in this covenant shall be deemed to affect the validity of international engagements, such as treaties of arbitration or regional understandings like the Monroe Doctrine, for securing the maintenance of peace.

ARTICLE 22.—To those colonies and territories which as a consequence of the late war have ceased to be under the sovereignty of the states which formerly governed them and which are inhabited by peoples not yet able to stand by themselves under the strenuous conditions of the modern world, there should be applied the principle that the well-being and development of such peoples form a sacred trust of civilization and that securities for the performance of this trust should be embodied in this covenant.

The best method of giving practical effect to this principle is that the tutelage of such people should be intrusted to advanced nations who by reason of their resources, their experience or their geographical position can best undertake this responsibility, and who are willing to accept it, and that this tutelage should be exercised by them as mandataries on behalf of the league.

The character of the mandate must differ according to the stage of development of the people, the geographical situation of the territory, its economic conditions and other similar circumstances.

Certain communities formerly belonging to the Turkish empire have reached a stage of development where their existence as independent nations can be provisionally recognized subject to the rendering of administrative advice and assistance by a mandatary until such time as they are able to stand alone. The wishes of these communities must be a principal consideration in the selection of the mandatary.

Other peoples, especially those of central Africa, are at such a stage that the mandatary must be responsible for the administration of the territory under conditions which will guarantee freedom of conscience and religion, subject only to the maintenance of public order and morals, the prohibition of abuses such as the slave trade, the arms traffic and the liquor traffic, and the prevention of the establishment of fortifications or military and naval bases and of military training of the natives for other than police purposes and the defense of territory, and will also secure equal opportunities for the trade and commerce of other members of the league.

There are territories, such as Southwest Africa and certain of the South Pacific islands, which, owing to the sparseness of their population or their small size, or their remoteness from the centers of civilization, or their geographical contiguity to the territory of the mandatory, and other circumstances, can be best administered under the laws of the mandatary as integral portions of its territory, subject to the safeguards above mentioned in the interests of the indigenous population.

In every case of mandate the mandatary shall render to the council an annual report in reference to the territory committed to its charge.

The degree of authority, control, or administration to be exercised by the mandatary shall, if not previously agreed upon by the members of the league, be explicitly defined in each case by the council.

A permanent commission shall be constituted to receive and examine the annual reports of the mandataries and to advise the council on all matters relating to the observance of the mandates.

ARTICLE 23.—Subject to and in accordance with the provisions of international conventions existing or hereafter to be agreed upon, the members of the league:

(a) will endeavor to secure and maintain fair and humane conditions of labor for men, women, and children, both in their own countries and in all countries to which their commercial and industrial relations extend, and for that purpose will establish and maintain the necessary international organizations;

(b) undertake to secure just treatment of the native inhabitants of territories under control;

(c) will intrust the league with the general supervision over the execution of agreements with regard to the traffic in women and children and the traffic in opium and other dangerous drugs;

(d) will intrust the league with the general supervision of the trade in arms and ammunition with the countries in which the control of this traffic is necessary in the common interest;

(e) will make provision to secure and maintain freedom of communications and of transit and equitable treatment for the commerce of all members of the league. In this connection the special necessities of the regions devastated during the war of 1914-1918 shall be borne in mind;

(f) will endeavor to take steps in matters of international concern for the prevention and control of disease.

ARTICLE 24.—There shall be placed under the direction of the league all international bureaus already established by general treaties if the parties to such treaties consent. All such international bureaus and all commissions for the regulation of matters of international interest hereafter constituted shall be placed under the direction of the league.

In all matters of international interest which are regulated by general conventions but which are not placed under the control of international bureaus or commissions, the secretariat of the league shall, subject to the consent of the council and if desired by the parties, collect and distribute all relevant information and shall render any other assistance which may be necessary or desirable.

The council may include as part of the expenses of the secretariat the expenses of any bureau or commission which is placed under the direction of the league.

ARTICLE 25.—The members of the league agree to encourage and promote the establishment and co-operation of duly authorized voluntary national Red Cross organizations having as purposes the improvement of health, the prevention of disease, and the mitigation of suffering throughout the world.

ARTICLE 26.—Amendments to this covenant will take effect when ratified by the members of the league whose representatives compose the council and by a majority of the members of the league whose representatives compose the assembly.

No such amendment shall bind any member of the league which signifies its dissent therefrom, but in that case it shall cease to be a member of the league.

WAR HAD WROUGHT CHANGE

Doughboy Found It Hard to Realize the Difference Two Years of War Had Made.

A new story of the Red Cross bag comes from Harvey D. Gibson, former Red Cross commissioner for Europe and president of the Liberty National bank of New York. He got the story from one of the workers in a hospital hut in Dijon, Everybody who has even seen a wounded soldier knows the bag of gaudy cretonne with the little Red Cross in the corner, in which each boy keeps the bit of shrapnel the doctor dug out of his knee, the last letter from home, the picture of his girl, his toothbrush and all his most cherished possessions. One of the boys in the Dijon hospital had just been presented with his bag, a pink-and-white one. He accepted it gracefully, then he began to laugh. "Say," he declared, "if someone had told me two years ago that I'd be a-goin' to war with a wrist watch on one wrist and a bracelet"—he held out his identification disk—"on the other and a cretonne bag in my hand! Say, I'd have pasted him one!"

Looking for a Telephone.

I was looking for a public telephone and thought I would find one in a large office building. I walked through and at last saw a public telephone sign, and as I was in a hurry I rushed through the doors and found myself in the middle of a saloon. The bartender looked up and said: "What'll you have, miss?" I was so surprised that I couldn't speak for a few minutes, but finally said I was looking for a public telephone. As I was backing out the elevator starter saw me and, as he knew me, asked if I was in for an eye-opener. I then decided my telephoning could wait, and rushed out of the building.—Exchange.

PRESIDENT WILSON ILL; SPEEDS HOME FOR GOOD REST

Doctor Grayson Orders Quiet After Executive's Strength Fails Under Stress.

COMPELLED BY STOMACH TROUBLE TO GIVE UP TRIP

Tour Is Cut Short After Speaking at Denver and Pueblo—Condition, Not Alarming, but His Physician Orders Speechmaking Stopped.

Wichita, Kan., Sept. 27.—President Wilson canceled the remainder of his tour under orders from Admiral Cary T. Grayson, the president's physician, and will return to Washington direct from Wichita. Admiral Grayson gave illness and physical exhaustion as the reason for his action.

Although it was said there was nothing critical about the president's condition, Doctor Grayson declared a nervous reaction affecting his digestive organs made suspension of his trip imperative.

Mr. Wilson was ill most of the night and the decision to return at once to the capital was reached just before his train arrived in Wichita. The president himself wanted to continue his speaking program, but Doctor Grayson would not permit it.

The presidential train did not pull into the station at Wichita, where a large crowd was waiting to welcome the president. He was to have spoken here in the forenoon and at Oklahoma City at night, and, although he wanted to at least greet the people here, Doctor Grayson would not permit him to leave his private car.

Statement by Tumulty.

Secretary Tumulty issued the following statement:

"The president has exerted himself too constantly and has been under such a strain during the last year and has so spent himself without reserve on this trip that it has brought on a nervous action in his digestive organs.

"Doctor Grayson, therefore, insists upon the cancellation of his remaining appointments and his immediate return to Washington, notwithstanding the president's earnest desire to complete his engagements."

Leaving Wichita at 11 a. m., after a stop of about two hours, the presidential special will reach Washington Sunday morning. It will go by way of Kansas City and St. Louis.

Tired by Speeches and Parades.

Although outwardly the president had appeared to be standing well the hard ordeal of more than three weeks of travel and speechmaking, it became known that for some days he had suffered from headache. He also has been much fatigued by the confinement of his special train, interrupted only by brief stops, which have been spent mostly in riding through crowds and speaking to audiences so large as to require all his exertion to make his voice heard.

Mr. Wilson has made nearly 40 speeches since he left Washington on September 3, and has spent all but about half a dozen nights on the train. Five addresses remained on his uncompleted schedule. He was to have spoken at Little Rock and Memphis and in Louisville, returning to Washington Tuesday.

It was declared by members of the president's party that one of the ordeals which seemed to be most trying on his nerves has been the automobile parades through the cities he has visited. He has traveled many miles standing in his car and waving his hat in response to the cheers of welcome. This feature of the trip also appeared to tax the strength of Mrs. Wilson, who has accompanied him wherever he went, and who, during the past few days, has shown evidences of being anxious for the strain to end.

A similar attack came to him last July, and he was indisposed for five days. He had the influenza in Paris last spring.

He has engagements in New York and Washington and the big labor congress opening in Washington next Wednesday. The breakdown has upset all his plans.

Senate Program Unchanged.

Washington, Sept. 27.—The White House was unadvised that the president had decided on advice of his physician to cancel the remainder of his speeches, and the news was received with the greatest interest there and also at the capitol. Democratic and Republican leaders in the senate said the immediate return of the president to Washington would not change the senate program of considering the German peace treaty. News that he had started home apparently caused little surprise at the capitol, as many senators felt that sooner or later the long speaking and traveling strain would affect Mr. Wilson's strength.

Remarkable Change.

INDIANA State News

Indianapolis.—Influenza and means of combating the epidemic disease occupied the attention of the 400 delegates to the convention of the Indiana State Medical association. Dr. Nettie B. Powell of Marion discussed problems of fighting "flu" among children.

Noblesville.—The Thirty-ninth Indiana infantry and the Eighth Indiana cavalry will hold their thirty-sixth annual reunion at the courthouse here October 1 and 2. I. B. Austin is president of the organization and Orlando A. Somers is the permanent secretary.

Gary.—Two street cars heavily laden with strikers en route to and returning from the paymaster's office of the American Sheet and Tin Plate plant, collided and two men are dead, three were fatally hurt, and 48 lie in the Mercy and Gary hospitals suffering sever injuries.

Franklin.—Five drivers of school wagons in Nineveh township have filed suits against the trustee of that township to collect pay for the several months last winter during which the schools were closed because of the influenza epidemic. Similar suits filed in other townships in the county have been approved by the court.

Newcastle.—The suit of the Pan-American Bridge company against the county auditor, seeking an injunction to prevent the placing on the tax duplicate of the assessment made by the state board of tax commissioners, was dismissed after the state board ordered a reduction in the assessment to $144,000, the figure established by the board of review.

Columbus.—The board of commissioners of Bartholomew county ordered the sale of $70,000 of bonds for the construction of the Nentrup road in this city, despite the fact that a few weeks ago the state board of tax commissioners refused to authorize an issue of bonds for this road. Action will be made to test the constitutionality of that part of the new tax law which authorizes the state tax board to pass on all bonds.

Gary, Ind.—The mills became armed camps the latter part of last week, when several cases of rifles were taken into the United States Steel corporation plant and 300 rifles in the American Sheet and Tin mills. There were said to be between 400 and 500 guards on duty, and 400 clerks inside the mills who were assigned to guard duty. The red glare went back into the skies over Gary; 2,500 men were inside the plant of the United States Steel corporation, and for the first time since the strike began, employees were making steel.

Elwood.—City authorities here have been conducting a municipal sale of coal to the consumers this summer, disposing of a number of carloads of West Virginia coal of excellent quality at $6.75 a ton, delivered. A few days ago Mayor Lewis received letters from the mines which had been supplying the city, saying that no more could be shipped because the city had no regular coal yard. Steps will be taken at once to obtain a municipal coal yard and an effort will be made to have all grades of coal for sale ther. Immediately following the discontinuance of the city's coal selling, the local dealers advanced the price of Indiana coal from $6 to $6.25 a ton.

Marion.—Regarding its investigation of the high cost of living, the Grant county grand jury, in a report made public, said: "The grand jury feels that the sources of the high prices are not to be found nor controlled by any small community taken alone. The great war brought about its sacrifices not only in the blood of the nation, but in the production of the peace-time necessities. Channels of efficiency were converted toward the centralized aim of the government to win the war. Unless these functions begin to flow back into increased production of necessary commodities, until people settle down to sane and sensible living, do less talking and more working, until conditions adjust themselves to their former status of competitive relationship, until labor conditions strive for a greater amount of production instead of less, which shall be consistent, of course, with the reward asked by labor, until the means of transportation and the methods of efficitncy, operation of concerns supplying the public demands are maintained, until hungry Europe is at least partially supplied with food and means of existence, we believe prices will remain high, laws and statutes to the contrary, notwithstanding. Our investigation shows that in every instance where a local merchant was summoned a less net profit is made in his business than before the war." The jury says it finds no combination upholding prices.

Culver.—Culver Military academy is now in full session for the fall work following the return of the old cadets and the enrollment is 673, which is larger by 130 than that of any previous session. The enlarged capacity is made by the new barracks and dormitory.

Muncie.—William A. Thompson, judge of the circuit court, held that the annexation of the various suburbs and adjoining territory to Muncie was legal, and ordered the county auditor to enter the assessments of property in the annexed territory on the city tax duplicates.

Indianapolis—The Hoosier corn crop now is safe from frosts, according to a report prepared by George C. Bryant, field agent of the co-operative crop reporting service, a union of state and federal offices. The orchard and truck crops present rather a gloomy outlook, as does also the clover seed prospects.

Lafayette.—Registration figures for Purdue university for the present school year, as announced by Registrar R. B. Stone, are 2,628 undergraduates, an increase of 620 over the record enrollment of 1916. Of this number 1,195 are freshmen; 655 are sophomores, 404 are juniors and 332 are seniors.

Gary—William F. Hodges, mayor of Gary, the city police force, and the federal authorities, backed by the Loyal American League, have started a fight on bolshevism in Gary with a determination to wipe it out that it may not be confounded with the steel worker's strike here and thus gain prominence and influence.

Brazil—The suit of James Campbell, of Clay county, against the Indiana highway commission, to prevent the construction of the proposed state highway system, on the ground that the highway law is in violation of the federal and state constitutions, was taken to Putnam court from the Clay circuit court on a change of venue.

Terre Haute—Fifty-seven bags of potatoes were seized in this city by Mark Storen, of Indianapolis, United States marshal, it being alleged they were branded falsely and were underweight in violation of the interstate food regulations. The potatoes were part of a carload shipped from Tennent, N. J., to a local commission house.

Columbus—The Columbus chamber of commerce has gone on record as opposed to the Townsend bill, now before the United States senate, establishing a federal highway commission. Opposition is made on the ground that the state has its own highway commission which has mapped out highways and is now getting federal aid in construction.

Indianapolis.—More optimism and more fresh air will keep influenza away. These two things will do more than anything else to prevent a recurrence of the influenza epidemic, according to speakers at the session of the Indiana State Medical association convention here. Another important preventative, according to the physicians who spoke on the subject, is a free use of vaccines.

Bloomington.—Coeds and others who are wont to trip the light fantastic on occasions are wondering how it's going to be done—on one, lonely dollar. That's the limit—one dollar a couple—which the authorities in Indiana university student affairs here have fixed as the limit on dances this year. And to make the gloom thicker, they have also decreed that there shall be only two formal dances on the campus this year.

Hagerstown.—A large land deal was closed here when H. C. Knode of Indianapolis sold his stock farm of 341 acres to Fred Roberts of Richmond for $80,185, an average of $235 an acre. Mr. Knode bought the land ten years ago for $60 an acre, which was at that time regarded a good price. It is one of the best equipped stock farms in Wayne county, having an abundance of fine water from numerous springs.

Indianapolis—Because of reports that delinquent taxpayers are being overcharged by some county treasurers, Jesse E. Eschbach, chief examiner for the state board of accounts, has issued a statement pointing out just what fees and penalties may be added to a tax bill when the bill is overdue. Persons who have paid tax collectors more than the legal fees are entitled to recover the overcharge from the county treasurer, according to the state examiner.

Indianapolis—Contracts for federal aid work let out by the Indiana state highway commission for 20 projects, aggregating 121,823 miles and to cost $4,739,139.61, complete the program for the year. The jobs were distributed to 18 contractors. All of the improvements except 11,991 miles are to be of concrete. The 11,991 miles are to be of bituminous concrete. Even a greater program is being planned for next year. The commission got a late start this year, owing to delay in getting the law into operation. The law was enacted by the legislature early this year. Before the end of the year contracts for 16 bridges may be let, each of more than a 20-foot span. The bridge work will aggregate 1,281 feet and will cost approximately $123,000.

FOR THE ATHLETIC WOMAN

Homespuns Have Sprung Into Popularity in Garments for All Sorts of Sports.

The athletic day has induced the American woman to adopt, to considerable extent, the sports clothes of English tweed mixtures and Irish frieze, so dear to the heart of her British sister. Topcoats of attractive shades of bronze green, with large visible plaids in burnt orange, are exceptionally smart this fall. Browns, tans, gray, blue, and other shades of green, mauve, and raisin color are also being shown in unusual varieties.

These topcoats ordinarily have raglan shoulders and often are finished with leather buttons and large patch pockets. They are of genuine service for traveling, automobiling, or ordinary sports wear. Black and white Inverness capes are being worn this season, being varied by black and green checked tweeds, gray and tan, and mixtures of browns and tans.

MILLIONS Suffer from
Acid-Stomach

Millions of people suffer year after year from ailments affecting practically every part of the body, never dreaming that their ill health can be traced directly to acid-stomach. Here is the reason: poor digestion means poor nourishment of the different organs and tissues of the body. The blood is impoverished—becomes weak, thin, sluggish. Ailments of many kinds spring from such conditions. Biliousness, rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica, general weakness, loss of power and energy, headache, insomnia, nervousness, mental depression—even more serious ailments such as catarrh and cancer of the stomach, intestinal ulcers, cirrhosis of the liver, heart trouble—all of these can often be traced directly to acid-stomach.

Keep a sharp lookout for the first symptoms of acid-stomach—indigestion, heartburn, belching, food repeating, that awful painful bloat after eating, and sour, gassy stomach. EATONIC, the wonderful modern remedy for acid-stomach, is guaranteed to bring quick relief from these stomach miseries. Thousands say they never dreamed that anything could bring such speedy relief—and make them feel so much better in every way. Try EATONIC and you, too, will be just as enthusiastic in its praise. Make your life worth living—no aches or pains—no blues or melancholy—no more of that tired, listless feeling. Be well and strong. Get back your physical and mental punch; your vim, vigor and vitality. You will always be weak and ailing as long as you have acid-stomach. So get rid of it now. Take EATONIC Tablets—they taste good—you eat them like a bit of candy. Your druggist has EATONIC—50 cents for a big box. Get a box from him today and if you are not satisfied he will refund your money.

Community Meeting.

A meeting of a representative committee from over the local Red Cross district was held at the M. P. Church on Monday evening, in response to the call of L. G. Whitten, superintendent of the Community Nursing plan as laid down by this department. A fine representation of the district was present and the plan of organization was given by the speaker. No definite action was taken as the matter was entirely new to the people. After discussing the matter they decided to meet Monday evening, October 13, and make final decision.

The department gives all chapters this right if they so desire to employ and maintain a nurse at the expense of the chapter, believing that sufficient good may be accomplished by working through the plan proposed, to rear a much stronger generation than in the past. The sentiment is strong in favor of the project and undoubtedly the application will be made at the next meeting. Those interested in this matter will please be present.

WILSON'S WORDS CLEAR UP DOUBT

CALIFORNIA THROWS OVER ITS LEADER, JOHNSON, AND RALLIES TO LEAGUE

WEST GIVES HIM OVATION

All Doubtful Features of Pact Are Explained Away By President, and Former Doubters Hasten to Give Him Their Support.

(By Independent News Bureau, formerly Mt. Clemens News Bureau.)

Aboard President Wilson's Special Train—A continuous ovation along the Pacific coast and then on his eastward way back toward the capital was given to President Wilson as he came toward the end of his month daylong speaking tour in behalf of the League of Nations. California, particularly the delightful city of Los Angeles, went wild in its enthusiasm for him and his advocacy of the League, and it was in that state, perhaps, that he did his most successful missionary work. Hiram Johnson, California's former governor, now her United States senator, and considered by her as the most likely Republican candidate for the presidency in 1920, had before the arrival of President Wilson, convinced a great number of citizens that the League as at present formulated was not a good thing. He had told them that the United States, because of it, would be drawn into every petty European quarrel; he argued that we would lose our sovereignty by joining with the European nations. He had blamed the president for assenting to the possession by Japan of the Peninsula of Shan Tung in China.

BUREAU CHANGES NAME

The Mount Clemens News Bureau, which has been furnishing reports on President Wilson's tour in behalf of the League of Nations to 5,500 papers, has adopted a new name and will hereafter be known as The Independent News Bureau.

But Mr. Wilson, with clear logic and with compelling eloquence, answered to the entire satisfaction of California's people every objection which Senator Johnson had made to the League. And thousands of the state's citizens deserted the Johnson standard immediately and rallied to the support of the president. More than that, they came forward and said, "We were against you, Mr. President, but you have cleared everything up and now we are with you heart and soul." Still more than that, they let Senator Johnson know that they were no longer with him and that they disapproved of the speaking tour which he himself was making in opposition to the League and so powerful was the volume of public opinion which reached him, that the senator almost immediately abandoned his tour. The Shan Tung question, because of the anti-Japanese feeling which undoubtedly exists along the Pacific coast was the most serious which the president had to answer. He explained to the people that he had been powerless to prevent the rich peninsula from being given to Japan. England and France, through a secret treaty, had promised it to Japan for entering the war and remaining in it. That treaty had to be carried out. Anyway it was not China that was losing Shan Tung, but Germany, which had seized the territory from China in 1898 and held it ever since. Japan had promised, the president explained, to return Shan Tung as soon as the peace treaty was ratified and it was only through the ratification of the treaty with the League of Nations inclusion, that China could ever expect to get her former property back. And she surely would get it back, he declared, through the ratification of the League. Therefore, through the same instrumentality no other nation could again prey upon the "Great, patient, diligent, but helpless kingdom." As to our being drawn into any European conflict. The president pointed out that no direct action such as the sending of troops to any part of the world to maintain or restore order could be taken by the Council of the League without a unanimous vote of the council members, therefore our vote could at once negative any such proposition as sending our soldiers where we did not want them sent. Besides, Mr. Wilson argued, "If you have to quench a fire in California you don't send for the fire department of Utah." But, he argued, there probably never will be another war, if the League is established, for the members promise either to arbitrate their difference and accept the decision of the arbitrator, lay the differences for discussion and publication before the Council of the League for a period of six months, and then, if possible, accept the council's advice. That failing, they agree to refrain from war for a further period of three months and nine months of "cooling off," the president contended, would prevent any armed conflict. These clear explanations satisfied every reasonable hearer and destroyed the "Bugaboos" which Senator Johnson and others had raised against the League. Through rugged Nevada into Utah, the land of Mormons, the president swept to find that these, too people were heartily with him for the League and a permanency of peace.

Furs Almost Beyond Reach

Of course we are appalled at the tremendous cost of even the smallest pieces of fur, but when the manufacturers tell us that the cost of making is equal practically to the cost of the skins we must bow to the inevitable and pay if we can. Because of the peculiar conditions which exist in the fur world, we may look for a great vogue in the plush, velvet, astrachan and other materials which may be called "near" fur, as they give the same degree of warmth without costing anything like so much. Even pony skins are likely to return, it is hinted, and the so-called caracul also, writes Martha Goode Anderson in the New Sun.

It will be recognized at a glance that many of the new garments are really triumphs of the furmakers' art, for the soft and exquisite grace of many of the moleskin wraps would alone prove this assertion if those of no other pelts were considered. Because of the small size of the soft and velvety mole the makers of wraps of this rodent have achieved a beautiful result by blocking the skins in squares, which presents a handsomely-shaded surface. This effect is attained by the use of hot irons which mark the skins in squares or rows, running now and then along the bottom of the long dolmans and capes. One of the handsomest of the moleskin wraps is made up in a dolman effect by outlining a yoke across the back. From underneath this yoke the back of the wrap falls in rather flaring lines quite to the edge of the skirt. An enormous collar of the shawl type folds over the yoke in the back and extends quite to the waistline in front, where it fastens with a huge fur button. There are no sleeves, but long and deep slits at the sides for the arms. Inside the lining is of the handsomest and most beautiful of flesh-pink brocaded satin, with ample pockets fitted at the sides. Of course such a sumptuous wrap is intended for only sumptuous wearing, so to speak. Its cost is close to $1,000, while a companion coat of mink as soft as a baby's skin is well over $2,000. There is a story going the rounds of a certain newly rich lady who showed her new string of pearls to a wealthy woman whose wealth had been with her long enough for her to be entirely accustomed to it. Said the newest rich lady: "My pearls cost $200,000. What did yours cost, Mrs. Brown?" The answer came like a flash and a revelation, "I should hate to have mine look an oyster in the face."

Rage for Fox Skins Persists.

To return now to our skins—furs, I mean. It is astonishing the way fox holds on. First we have a season when the white stoles are in such demand it seems impossible to meet it, then comes the wonderful cross fox, with its rich blend of yellow and brown, and then the no less beautiful pointed and silver skins. The rage for these beautiful fur pieces is just as insistent now as it was last fall, and again this spring. The long hair of the fox makes it particularly becoming to all and the many shades in which it can be bought have much to do with the demand. Black lynx, too, is a fur which never seems to lose its popularity. It, too, has the long and very soft and silky hair of the fox. Mink, with its shorter hair, has always seemed to be particularly suited to elderly women, but when it is combined, as it is this year, with deep rolling collars of seal or ermine or dyed skunk or some fur with a softer texture and a deeper color, nothing makes a more exquisite wrap. There seems to be a determined effort to produce a demand for monkey fur. It goes well as a trimming for other garments, as I have recently observed it used fringelike on a voluminous and gorgeous evening cape of black satin, faced inside with orchid satin veiled in the same colored chiffon. It is said that monkey skins have almost vanished from the market, and that nutria will probably disappear also, so great has been the demand for both of these.

Sports Coats in Fur.

Last year muskrat came to be so much in demand as a winter sports coat that the price was pushed almost as high as seal. The muskrat coats are again in high favor for general utility wear, such as motoring, traveling, skating and such allied uses. The skins are blocked and matched with great perfection and made up into whole garments as nearly tailored as a fur coat can be. These are particularly esteemed by younger women, as are the short jackets of gray squirrel. The latter are very smart indeed when made up into the hip length styles and untrimmed by any other fur. Children's coats are especially in demand in this fur and some are also made up in the brown squirrel. As to the smaller wraps, the little coatees which were brought out last season are again to be much used, for the fashion makers are kind enough to permit the use of a last year's model this year, thus doing away with the necessity of paying enormous prices for the making over. The Eton jacket is the newest in the coatee models. The cape coatees are of the same belted models used last year, fitted in at the back and flaring and full in cape effect in front. They, too, have the high, rolling shawl collars seen on all the new fall models. The demand seems to be greatest for the darker furs such as skunk, seal, sable, dyed muskrat and dyed squirrel, but as I said above these are just as often seen in a combination with one of the domestic furs in natural colors.

In selecting the short jackets it must be remembered that nearly all are fitted with the high choker collars and whereas one sees the shawl and rolling collars on the longer coats, and dolmans and capes, the straight-around and high, tight collar seems to be preferred on the shorter coat. This of course permits the use of the extra stole if desired and is therefore advantageous.

Smaller Pieces Are Combined.

As to the demand for the smaller pieces, the one, two and three skins are made up in mink, sable, skunk and fox, though the latter is quite sufficient in one piece. The beauty of skunk cannot be denied. In one instance it is put together in a straight strip of the skins to make a stole at least a yard and a half long and half a yard wide. The skins, perfectly matched and blended, are marked by the hot irons where they are put together, and this sort of marking forms a good effect in the whole piece. The ends are finished with many tails sewed on like tassels. As to muffs, they are quaint and round and small, like the Kate Greenaway models. The fashion of using muffs disappeared somewhat last year when the fur dolman and capes and long stoles entered. It was found that the long sides of the cape served as cover for the hands and gave sufficient warmth. However, muffs are to be much used this year.

SUCCESSFUL MANAGEMENT OF FALL PIG CROP INVOLVES COMFORTABLE QUARTERS

Produce More Pork by Increasing the Maternity Record Per Litter.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

If every farmer in the United States who raises hogs—and approximately 75 per cent of the six million seven hundred thousand odd American farmers do raise hogs—would decrease mortality to the extent of one pig to the litter, the annual increase in the crop of young squealers would be 5,025,000 head.

If they were all raised and marketed at 250 pounds apiece, the yearly increase in pork production would be 1,256,250,000 pounds. According to the United States department of agriculture, experienced and careful hog growers raise about seven pigs out of each litter, while the average pork producer raises only four. Thus, between farrowing and marketing, there is a loss of three pigs a litter on the average farm.

Successful management of the fall hog crop involves careful feeding of the sows previous to farrowing, comfortable sanitary quarters for the dams during farrowing, careful attention not to overfeed the sows and thus induce digestive disorders among the young pigs, and efforts to develop in the pigs a large, bony framework rather than the fat. Adequate housing which thoroughly shelters the porkers, young and old, against wind, rain, sleet and snow, is essential and, despite high prices of building material, it should be provided if not already available. Although feeds are high in price it is necessary to feed the sow and pigs both adequately and well. Fortunately, the price of pork on the hoof is such as to render the "two squares and plenty of filler a day" a profitable investment.

Sanitary Surrounding for Sows.

Dry, well-ventilated quarters, which have been disinfected and cleaned up for the reception of the pig crop, should be provided for every sow which is to farrow. A guard rail, made of 2 by 4-inch pieces set four inches from the sides of the pen and about ten inches above the bed, should be provided in order to prevent injury to the pigs. An attendant should be accessible, particularly in cold weather, in order to assist the sow and, if necessary, to rescue the pigs from freezing. Before the pigs are placed with their mother the eight back, tusk-like teeth should be cut off with bone forceps or wire nippers. Care must be taken to not injure the jaw bone. Give the sow plenty of warm water after farrowing, but do not feed her for the first 24 hours unless necessary, and then provide a thin slop of bran and middlings. The sow should be fed lightly for the next four or five days and should not be put on full feed again until the pigs are about ten days old. Aim to feed the sow in such a manner that the pigs will develop rapidly and will prosper from birth until weaning time.

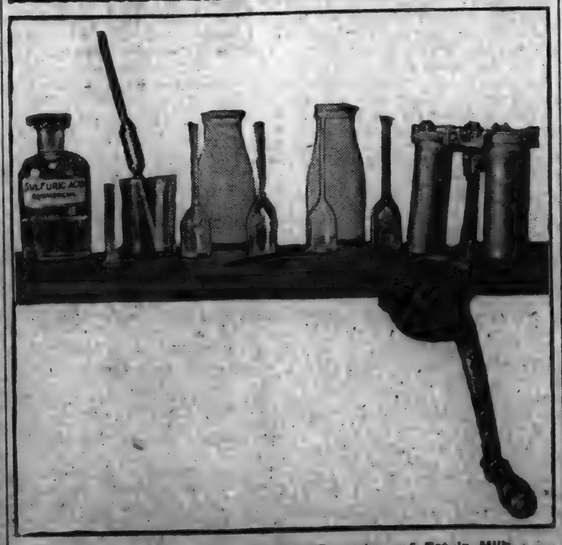
Make Gains Rapidly.

Handle the pigs so that they will gain in weight as rapidly as possible. The modern hog is a meat-making machine of wonderful efficiency when kept running smoothly and evenly from birth to marketing. When the pigs are about three weeks old a creep should be arranged where they can have access to feeds away from the other hogs. The best feed to use at this time is shell corn in a self-feeder. When the pigs are about six weeks old it is generally advisable to place another self-feeder in the inclosure, in which shorts, middlings, tankage, or fish meal are placed. It is advisable not to wean the pigs before they are ten weeks of age or over. When the pigs are weaned gradually reduce the feed of the sow. This will have a tendency to dry up the flow of milk and the pigs will be weaned and scarcely know it. Give them access all the time to the self-feeder containing the above feeds. If this method is followed they will notice practically no difference at weaning time and will never be stunted in their growth.

Jack Frost a Foe.

It is more difficult to raise pigs in the winter than in the summer, due to the cold weather as well as to the fact that the animals have to be kept indoors so much of the time. Extreme variations in temperature are liable to induce colds and even cause the development of pneumonia. The careful breeder should practice every precaution to protect his young pig crop against disease. He should keep plenty of charcoal before the hogs at all times and should provide them with condition powders if necessary. A charcoal mixture of one bushel of charcoal, one bushel of hardwood ashes, eight pounds of salt, four pounds of air-slaked lime, four pounds of sulphur and two pounds of pulverized copperas makes a fine mixture of mineral matter. The lime, salt and sulphur should be mixed thoroughly, and then combined with the charcoal and ashes. Dissolve the copperas in one quart of hot water and sprinkle the solution over the whole mass, mixing it thoroughly.

COW-TESTING ASSOCIATIONS "MAKING GOOD"



A Babcock Tester for Determining Percentage of Fat in Milk.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

That cow-testing associations are successful is shown by the fact that three associations have been organized by members of the county farm bureau in Lake county, Illinois, during the past 18 months. At present these three associations have 1,480 cows on test. There are 17 similar organizations in Illinois and 898 in the United States.

The report of the tester of Association No. 2 for the period ending November 1, 1918, shows that 24 herds were tested during the year; that of the 495 cows on test, 280 finished a complete record, and 135 were sold for beef because they were not profitable. The average production per cow of the entire association was 7,478 pounds of milk and 282.4 pounds of butterfat. The average test was 3.78 per cent. The market value of milk per cow was $209, value of feed $113, leaving a net return over feed of $96 a cow. Forty-five pure-bred cows were purchased during the year, and every member but one used a pure-bred bull.

ROAD BUILDING

BOND ISSUE IS BIG PROBLEM

Best Means to Pull Counties Out of Land of Mud—Make All Improvements Permanent.

The biggest single issue before the people today is good roads; biggest not alone of itself, but biggest because the prompt and satisfactory solution of a permanent road system in every state will help to solve a half-dozen fundamental problems and indirectly affect for good, as well as in dollars and cents, almost every phase of farm, social and industrial life in the state. We cannot expect to have a real system of roads unless it is based on large units and this is best accomplished by accepting the county and state basis with a few experienced and responsible men in charge in each case. We must have roads that begin and end somewhere.

Many counties are presenting to the taxpayers the question of a bond issue for the improvement of their highways. The bond issue for a public improvement should be governed by the same considerations which govern a bond issue by any business organization. When a manufacturing concern issues bonds, the money raised is placed in permanent improvements in the plant which will last far beyond the life of the bonds, or else no investor would purchase the securities. Bonds for municipal purposes or for public improvements are not always subjected to this acid test, and instances are numerous in this country where bonds for twenty years have been issued for the construction of public roads, where the type of roads built with the proceeds of the bond issue could not possibly last more than ten years, and even then expensive maintenance is continually necessary. In some instances history shows that during the life of such a bond issue the original road has been worn out and rebuilt with a different material, and with the proceeds of subsequent bond issues as many as three times, and still the original bonds are a liability on the community.

Bond issues for better roads are the best means to pull counties out of the Land of Mud. But it must be certain that the road improvements will last the life of the bonds. This can be assured by securing expert and unprejudiced engineering advice on the best kind of roads for the soil. The banker can perform yeoman service in this connection.

In the state of Iowa the man who began with nothing and now owns a $30,000 farm, believes in paying as he goes when building a road, but he will borrow money from an insurance company with which to buy more land, and he has not yet seen that when he builds a concrete bridge with one year's tax money, he has made a Christmas present of that bridge to posterity for the next one hundred years. He says that thirty-year paved roads are impossible because $10,000 per mile is too much to pay out of one year's tax money, and it has not occurred to him that there will still be taxpayers when he is dead and gone, who will be using that road, and by rights should have to pay some of it.—Wallace's Farmer.

COST OF VARIOUS HIGHWAYS

Macadam Road Is Most Expensive, But When Built Is Satisfactory and Permanent.

Dirt roads are ordinarily surfaced with sand, mixed with clay or with gravel, or brick, or crushed stone, concrete or other like material. The gravel road will cost from $1,500 to $8,500 a mile—the difference in cost depending upon the accessibility of gravel. The macadamised road costs from $2,000 to $10,000 per mile. It is the most expensive, but when well built is both satisfactory and permanent.

Essential Foundation.

Permanent foundations, having uniform bearing quality, are essential to all types of engineering structures. Roads are no exception.

Did you ever try draining that awful wet place in the road? Try it some time—once will be enough.

Don't Build on Paper.

If you want that road you're going to build to be of any value, build it on the ground—not on paper.

Mr. Reuter Was Almost Helpless From Kidney Trouble, But Doan's Made Him Well.

"I was in terrible shape from kidney trouble," says D. Reuter, North St., West Chicago, Ill. "I couldn't stoop because of the awful pains in my back and the steady, dull misery almost drove me frantic. I had to be helped out of bed mornings, the pains across my kidneys were so bad and nobody knows the agony I went through. I couldn't do anything and was almost helpless; it seemed I would never get well. At times everything in front of me grew dark and I couldn't see for several minutes. I perspired profusely and I was thirsty all the time. The urine passed far too often and burned like scalding water. The passages were scanty and I had no control over them.

"For two years I suffered, trying medicine after medicine without relief. I was just about discouraged and didn't think I would ever be able to work again. Hearing about Doan's Kidney Pills I used them and four boxes cured me. My kidneys became normal, my back got well and strong and all the other troubles disappeared."

OCTOBER

PIECES OF EIGHT

By Richard Le Gallienne

Being the Authentic Narrative of a Treasure Discovered in the Bahama Islands in the Year 1903. Now First Given to the Public.

Copyright by Doubleday, Page & Company.

CALYPSO!

Synopsis—The man who tells this story—call him the hero, for short—is visiting his friend, John Saunders, British official in Nassau, Bahama Islands. Charles Webster, a local merchant, completes the trio of friends. Saunders produces a written document purporting to be the death-bed statement of Henry P. Tobias, a successful pirate, made by him in 1823. It gives two spots where two millions and a half of treasures were buried by him and his companions. The conversation of the three friends is overheard by a pock-marked stranger. The document disappears. Saunders, however, has a copy. The hero, determined to seek the buried treasure, charters a schooner. The pock-marked man is taken on as a passenger. On the voyage somebody empties the gasoline tank. The hero and the passenger clash, the passenger leaving a manifesto bearing the signature, "Henry P. Tobias, Jr." The hero lands on Dead Men's Shoes. There is a fight, which is followed by several funerals. The hero finds a cave containing the skeletons of two pirates and a massive chest—empty save for a few pieces of eight scattered on the bottom. The hero returns to Nassau and by good luck learns the location of Short Shrift island. Webster buys the yawl Flamingo, and he and the hero sail for Short Shrift island. As the Flamingo leaves the wharf a young fellow, "Jack Harkaway," jumps aboard and is allowed to remain. Jack proves an interesting and mysterious passenger. The adventurers capture Tobias. "Jack Harkaway" proves to be a girl and disappears. The hero sails to Short Shrift island, sees an entrancing girl with a Spanish doubloon. Follows an even more entrancing sight of the girl.

—10—

"Ha! ha!" called a pleasant voice, evidently belonging to a man of an unusually tall and lean figure who was approaching me through the palm trunks; "so you have discovered my hidden paradise—my Alcinous garden, so to say;" and he quoted two well-known lines of Homer in the original Greek, adding: "or if you prefer it in Pope's translation, which I think—don't you?—remains the best:

Close to the gates a spacious garden lies,
From storms defended and inclement skies—

"and so on. Alas! for an old man's memory! It grows shorter and shorter—like his life, eh? Never mind, you are welcome, sir stranger, mysteriously tossed up here like Ulysses, on our island coast."

I gazed with natural wonderment at this strange individual, who thus in the heart of the wilderness had saluted me with a meticulously pure English accent, and welcomed me in a quotation from Homer in the original Greek. Who, in the devil's name, was this odd character who, I saw, as I looked closer at him, was, as he had hinted, quite an old man, though his unusual erectness and sprightliness of manner, lent him an illusive air of youth? Who on earth was he—and how did he happen in the middle of this haunted wood?

CHAPTER III.

Calypso.

Of course a glance and the first sound of his voice had told me that I had to do with a gentleman—one of those vagabond English gentlemen in exile who form a type peculiar, I think, to the English race; men that are a curious combination of aristocrat and Gypsy, soldier, scholar, and philosopher; men of good family, who have drifted everywhere, seen and seen through everything, but in all their wanderings have never lost their sense and habit of "form," their boyish zest in living, their humorous stoicism, and, above all, their lordly accent.

"Now that you have found us, Sir Ulysses"—continued my eccentric host, motioning me, with an indescribably princely wave of the hand to accompany him—"you must certainly give us the pleasure of your company to luncheon. Visitors are as rare as black swans on this Ultima Thule of ours—though, by the way, the black swan, cygnus stratus, is nothing like so rare as the ancients believed. I have shot them myself out in Australia. Still they are rare enough for the purpose of imagery, though really not so rare as a human being one can talk intelligently to on this island."

Talk! My friend indeed, very evidently was a talker—one of those fantastic monologists to whom an audience is little more than a symbol. I saw that there was no need for me to do any of the talking. He was more than glad to do it all. Plainly his encounter with me was to him like a spring in a thirsty land.

"Solitude," he continued, "is perhaps the final need of the human soul. After a while, when we have run the gamut of all our ardors and our dreams, solitude comes to seem the one excellent thing, the summum bonum."

I murmured that he certainly seemed to have come to the right place for it.

"Very true, indeed," he suggested, with a courtly inclination of his head, as though I had said something profound; "very true, indeed, and yet, wasn't it the great Bacon who said: 'Whoever is delighted with solitude is either a beast or a god?'—and this particular solitude, I confess, sometimes seems to me a little too much like that enforced solitude of the Pontic marshes of which Ovid wailed and whimpered in the deaf ears of Augustus."

I could not help noticing at last as he talked on with fantastic magnificence, the odd contrast between his speech and the almost equally fantastic poverty of his clothing. The suit he wore, though still preserving a certain elegance of cut, was so worn and patched and stained that a negro would hardly have accepted it as a gift; and his almost painful emaciation gave him generally the appearance of an animated framework of rags and bones, startlingly embodying the voice and the manners of a prince. Yet the shabby tie about his neck was bound by a ring, in which was set a turquoise of great size and beauty.

Presently, as we loitered on through the palms, we came upon two negroes chopping away with their machetes, trimming up the debris of broken and decaying palm fans. They were both sturdy, ferocious-looking fellows, but one of them was a veritable giant.

"Behold by bodyguard!" said my magnificent friend, with the usual possessive wave of his hand; "my Switzers, my Janissaries, so to say."

The negroes stopped working, touched their great straw hats, and flashed their splendid teeth in a delighted smile. Evidently they were used to their master's ways of talking, and were devoted to him.

"This chap here is Erebus," said my host, and the appropriateness of the name was apparent, for he was certainly the blackest negro I had ever seen, as superbly black as some women are superbly white.

"And this is Samson. Let's have a look at your muscles, Samson—there's a good boy!"

And, with grins of pleasure, Samson proudly stripped off his thin calico jacket and exposed a torso of terrifying power, but beautiful in its play of muscles as that of a god.

Leaving Samson and Erebus to continue their savage play with their machetes, we walked on through the palms, which here gave a particularly jungle-like appearance to the scene from the fact of their being bowed out from their roots and sweeping upward in great curves. One involuntarily looked for a man-eating tiger at any moment, standing striped and splendid in one of the openings.

Then suddenly to the right, there came a flash of level green, suggesting lawns, and the outlines of a house, partly covered with brilliant purple flowers—a marvelous splash of color.

"Bougainvillea! Bougainvillea spectabilis—of course, you know it. Was there ever such a purple? Not Solomon in all his glory, et cetera. And here we are at the house of King Alcinous—a humble version of it indeed."

It was a large rambling stucco house, somewhat decayed looking, and evidently built on the ruins of an older building. We came upon it at a broad Italian-looking loggia, supported by stone pillars bowed in with vines—very cool and pleasant—with mossy slabs for its floor, here and there tropical ferns set out in tubs, some wicker chairs standing about, and a table at one side on which two little barelegged negro girls were busy setting out yellow fruit, and other appurtenances of luncheon, on a dazzling white cloth.

"Has your mistress returned yet, my children?" asked the master.

"No, sar," said the older girl, with a giggle, twisting and grimacing with embarrassment.

"My daughter," explained my host, "has gone to the town on an errand. She will be back at any moment. Meanwhile, I shall introduce you to a cooling drink of my own manufacture, with a basis of that coconut milk which I need not ask you whether you appreciate, recalling the pleasant circumstance of our first acquaintance."

Motioning me to a seat, and pushing toward me a box of cigarettes, he went indoors, leaving me to take in the stretch of beautiful garden in front of me, the trees of which seemed literally to be hung with gold—for they were mainly of orange and grapefruit ranged round a spacious beautifully kept lawn with the regularity of sumptuous decoration. In the middle of the lawn, a little rocky fountain threw up a jet of silver, falling with a tinkling murmur into a broad circular basin from which emerged the broad leaves and splendid pink blossoms of an Egyptian lotus. Certainly it was no far-fetched allusion of my classical friend to speak of the garden of Alcinous; particularly connected as it was in my mind with the white beach of a desert isle, and that marble statue in the moonlight.

As I sat dreaming, bathed in the golden-green light of the orange trees, and lulled by the tinkling of the fountain, my host returned with our drinks, his learned disquisition on which I will spare the reader, highly interesting and characteristic though it was.

Suffice it that it was a drink, whatever its ingredients—and there was certainly somewhere a powerful "stick" in it—that seemed to have been drawn from some cool grotto of the virgin earth, so thrillingly cold and invigorating it was.

While we were slowly sipping it, and smoking our cigarettes, in an unwonted pause of my friend's fanciful verbosity, I almost jumped in my chair at the sound of a voice indoors. It was instantly followed by a light and rapid tread, and the sound of a woman's dress. Then a tall, beautiful young woman emerged on the loggia.

"Ah! there you are!" cried my host, as we both rose; and then turning to me, "this is my daughter—Calypso. Her real name I assure you—none of my nonsense—doesn't she look it? Allow me, my dear, to introduce—Mr. Ulysses!"—for we had not yet exchanged each other's names.

I am a wretched actor, and I am bound to say that she proved herself no better. For she gave a decided start as she turned those glowing eyes on me, and the lovely olive of her cheeks glowed as with submerged rose color. Our embarrassment did not escape the father.

"Why, you know each other already!" he exclaimed, with natural surprise.

"Not exactly"—I was grateful for the sudden nerve with which I was able to hasten to the relief of her lovely distress—"but possibly Miss—Calypso recalls as naturally as I do, our momentary meeting in Sweeney's store, one evening. I had no expectation of course, that we should meet again under such pleasant circumstances as this."

She gave me a grateful look as she took my hand, and with it—or was it only my eager imagination?—a shy little pressure, again as of gratitude.

I had tried to get into my voice my assurance that, of course, I remembered no other more recent meeting—though, naturally, as she had given that little start in the doorway, there had flashed on me again the picture of her standing, moonlit, in another resounding doorway, and of the wild start she had given then, as the golden pieces streamed from her lovely surprised mouth, and her lifted hands. And her eyes—I could have sworn—were the living eyes of Jack Harkaway! Had she a brother, I wondered. Yet my mind was too dazzled and confused with her nearness to pursue the speculation.

As we sat down to luncheon, waited upon by the little barlegged black children—waited on, too, surprisingly well, despite the contortions of their primitive embarrassment—my host once more resumed his character of the classic king welcoming the storm-tossed stranger to his board.

"Far wanderer," he said, raising his glass to me, "eat of what our board affords, welcome without question of name and nation. But if, when the food and wine have done their genial office, and the weariness of your journeying has fallen from you, you should feel stirred to tell us somewhat of yourself and your wanderings, what manner of men call you kinsman, in what fair land is your home and the place of your loved ones, be sure that we shall count the tale good hearing, and, for our part, make exchange in like fashion of ourselves and the passage of our days in this lonely isle."

We all laughed as he ended—himself with a whinny of laughter. For, odd as such discourse may sound in the reading, it was uttered so whimsically, and in so spirited and humorous a style that I assure you it was very captivating.

"You should have been an actor, my lord Alcinous," I said, laughing. I seemed already curiously at home, seated there at that table with this fantastic stranger and that being out of fairyland toward whom I dared only turn my eyes now and again by stealth. The strange fellow had such a way with him, and his talk made you feel that he had known you all your life.

"Ah! I have had my dreams. I have had my dreams!" he answered, his eyes gazing with a momentary wistfulness across the orange trees.

Then we talked at random, as friendly strangers talk over luncheon, though we were glad enough that he should do all the talking—wonderful, iridescent, madcap talk, such as a man here and there in ten thousand, gifted with perhaps the most attractive of all human gifts, has at his command.

And, every now and again, my eyes, falling on the paradoxical squalor of his clothing, would remind me of the enigma of this courtly vagabond; though—need I say it?—my eyes and my heart had other business than with him, throughout that wonderful meal, enfolded as I felt myself once more in that golden cloud of magnetic vitality, which had at first swept over me, as with a breath of perfumed fire, among the salt pork and the tinware of Sweeney's store.

Luncheon over, Lady Calypso, with a stately inclination of her lovely head, left us to our wine and our cigars.

The time had come for the far-traveled guest to declare himself, and I saw in my host's eye a courteous invitation to begin. I had been pondering what account to give of myself, and I had decided, for various reasons—of which the Lady Calypso was, of course, first, but the open-hearted charm of her father a close second—to tell him the whole of my story. Whatever his and her particular secret was, it was evident to me that it was an innocent and honorable one; and, besides, I may have had a notion that before long I was to have a family interest in it. So I began—starting in with a little prelude in the manner of my host, just to enter into the spirit of the game:

"My Lord Alcinous, your guest, the far wanderer, having partaken of your golden hospitality, is now fain to open his heart to you, and tell you of himself and his race, his home and his loved ones across the wine-dark sea, and such of his adventures as may give pleasure to your ears" . . . though, having no talents in that direction, I was glad enough to abandon my lame attempt at his Homeric style for a plain straightforward narrative of the events of the past three months.

I had not, however, proceeded very far, when, with a courteous raising of his hand, King Alcinous suggested a pause.

"Behold My Bodyguard!"

"If you would not mind," he said, "I would like my daughter to hear this too, for it is of the very stuff of romantic adventure in which she delights. She is a brave girl, and, as I often tell her, would have made a very spirited dare-devil boy, if she hadn't happened to be born a girl."

This phrase seemed to flash a light upon the questionings that had stirred at the back of my mind since I had first heard that voice in Sweeney's store.

The hero's search for the Tobias treasure begins again under most fascinating circumstances.

Where Poor Sermons Come From.

The little group on the steps of Saymouth's general store and post office were discussing the ministers' convention, then in session at the state capitol, and Squire Lane, who had been "assessed" for his share of Rev. Mr. Lamb's expenses, said that in his opinion there were a good many better ways of spending five days.

"Cheaper, too," he added feelingly.

After a sign of sympathy had completed a circle of the little group, Joe Rollins, who in village estimate "wa'n't all there," asked "what they held them conventions for, anyway."

"They meet once a year to swap sermons," replied the Squire.

"Now I know why we get such poor ones!" said Joe, momentarily enlightened. "Mr. Lamb never did amount to anything in a trade."—Youth's Companion.

KNEW SOMETHING ABOUT IT

Englishman Need Not Have Been Surprised at Acquaintance's Knowledge of "Jim Bludso."

In his book, "Winnowed Memories," Sir Evelyn Wood relates how he once met a quiet American gentleman in England, and they began to talk of American poetry. Sir Evelyn mentioned the well-known poem "Jim Bludso," which he highly eulogized.

"My enthusiastic praise of the poem excited, I thought, an appreciative purr in my companion, but he remarked quietly;

"'Jim was a fine fellow.'"

"I said, 'Or our author made him so?'"

"'Oh, but he was.'

"'Why, was he real?'

"'Yes, I knew him well.'

"'But don't you think that the poet embellished Jim's act?'

"'No, I am sure he did not.'

"'Well, but how can you be sure?'

"And he replied quickly, 'I wrote it.'"

The gentleman to whom Sir Evelyn was speaking proved to be Col. John Hay, author of the "Pike County Ballads," who was then the United States ambassador in London.

Obituary

Martha Eloise, only daughter of John and Letha Sechler, was born near St. Joe, Indiana, on February 21, 1914 and departed this life Friday, September 26, 1919 aged 5 years, 7 months and 5 days.

She was of a loving disposition, cheerful and obedient with her winsome ways.

She liked to be in the Sunday School and was much interested in all it's activities. Likewise she was greatly interested in the public school but her school life was cut short being of but three days duration.

She leaves to mourn their loss the father, mother, two brothers, Bernard and Robert, one infant brother having preceded her, besides two grandmothers and two grandfathers.

"We loved her, yes we loved her,
But angels loved her more,
And so have gently called her
To yonder shining shore.
While our hearts overflow with sorrow
We would bow to the Master's will.
Martha's gone to be one of His jewels,
And we know that all is well."

The funeral was held from the Lutheran Church, Sunday afternoon. Rev. A. K. Mumma, officiating. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director. Burial in Riverside cemetery.

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies. This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucus or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic cuts this slime and mucus and removes it. A nauceated feeling is sometimes experienced when this mucus is breaking loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appetite return and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

URGES SENATE TO HASTEN PEACE

Leaders in Forty States, Regardless of Party, Sign Ringing Appeal.

TREATY WITHOUT AMENDMENT

Says Every Day of Delay Puts World in Imminent Peril of New War—Point to National Unrest.

New York—(Special)—Two hundred and fifty leading Americans, Republicans and Democrats representing forty different states and every prominent activity have joined in a nonpartisan effort to bring about the ratification of the Peace Treaty "without amendment and without delay." Their names are attached to an address to the United States senate, which was made public today, through the League to Enforce Peace, after it had been sent to every member of the senate.

The signers, almost without exception are men and women of national reputation. They include such prominent citizens as ex-President Taft, George W. Wickersham, Attorney General in the last Republican administration; A. Lawrence Lowell, president of Harvard; Charles C. Moore, of San Francisco, president of the Panama Exposition; Judge George Gray, of Wilmington, Del.; President Samuel Gompers of the American Federation of Labor, Harry A. Wheeler of Chicago, retiring president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States; Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the National American Woman Suffrage Association; Cyrus H. K. Curtis, the Philadelphia publisher; President Heber J. Grant, of the Mormon Church, and Spargo, leader of the Socialists who supported the war.

The signers declare that every day of delay in ratifying the treaty puts the world in "imminent peril of new war."

Their statement follows:

In the senate at Washington, now that the committee on foreign relations has reported the treaty, the lines are sharply drawn between the immediate ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany, and its amendment with a reassembling of the conference and a reopening of negotiations that would bring great delay and prolonged uncertainty in settling the great issues of the peace. No partisan plea can be made. Party lines are already broken.

Standing at a distance from the conflict in the senate chamber, we plead for immediate ratification without delay. Our land requires it. A state of nervous strain, tension and unrest exists manifesting itself in disturbances, which in some cases have no self evident connection with the war, but which are, in fact, its aftermath. The world is put in imminent peril of new wars by the lapse of each day. Dissensions between us and our former allies are being sown. We firmly believe and solemnly declare that the states and cities in which we dwell desire immediate peace.

The waging of war steadied and united the American people. Peace will bring prosperity, and prosperity content. Delay in the senate postponing ratification in this uncertain period of neither peace nor war has resulted in indecision and doubt, bred strife and quickened the cupidity of those who sell the daily necessities of life and the fears of those whose daily wage no longer fills the daily market basket.

We beseech the senate to give the land peace and certainty by a ratification which will not keep us longer in the shadows of possible wars, but give the whole world the light of peace. Reservations in the nature of clarifications in the meaning of the treaty, not inconsistent with its terms, will not require the reopening of the negotiations with Germany and with our associates in the war, which we all and each united to win.

But there is no possibility of doubt that amendment of the treaty, as is now proposed in the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, would require negotiation and a reopening of all the questions decided at Paris. Months of delay would follow. The perils of the present would become the deadly dangers of the near future. All the doubts engendered would aid the plots for violent revolution in this and other lands. The issues here and elsewhere between capital and labor, the conspiracy of speculator and profiteer, would all grow and become more perilous.

This cannot be. The American people cannot, after a victorious war, permit its government to petition Germany, which has accepted the treaty, for its consent to changes in the treaty. Yet, if the United States should amend the treaty for its own purpose and policy, Germany would have full right to ask for concessions. Germany has agreed to make no claim in regard to enemy property seized in this country to an amount of seven hundred million dollars. Our recent foe could ask for a reopening of this issue and of the Lusitania claims. It could raise every question open before hostilities in regard to submarine warfare and the treatment of its nationals in this country. All the provisions for our trade in Germany gained by the economic clauses of the treaty, many of them vital to our industries and our farms, as in dye patents, dye supplies and fertilizers, the working of the Reparation Commission, which superintends the trade of all with Germany, could all be brought up by Berlin for readjustment by our negotiators, acting for the United States alone and no longer associated with other victorious powers or supported by a victorious American army on the German border.

Peace itself, the peace of the world, is delayed until ratification comes. And any amendment postpones peace. Germany and England alone of the principal powers have ratified. The other principals necessarily await our action, influential and powerful as we are today in the world's affairs. The ravages of war on more than a score of fighting fronts are continued by any needless delay. Let the senate give the world peace by ratification without amendment.

Even the amendment for which most can be said, the provision in regard to Shantung, will secure nothing which cannot be gained if China, backed by the powerful advocacy of the United States, addresses itself to the machinery for righting international wrongs and meeting just claims created by the league between nations. China, after eighty years of oppressive treaties and despoiled rights, by which all the great powers have profited directly or indirectly, has for the first time, in this covenant and treaty, the means and method to secure justice and the removal of the oppressive economic interference of stronger nations whose citizens are within her gates protected by a long succession of international agreements. Moreover, it should be remembered that the clause regarding Shantung was made upon the statement by Japan that she will return the territory to China and, therefore, upon that condition, compliance with which promise the league can require.

The peace of the present and the righteousness of the future can be best secured by the ratification of the covenant and treaty without amendment. Let the senate take no action that will give any party to the treaty, and especially Germany, ground for maintaining that the ratification of the United States is not complete and that changes requiring a resumption of conference and negotiations have been made in it.

"Round-Up" For Clubs.

The Boys' and Girls' Pig and Poultry Clubs of DeKalb County are heartily in favor of the "Round-Up" as planned by County Agent Arehart, to be held at Auburn on Saturday, October 25.

Four clubs have been organized in the count, with a membership of 50 and the work will have terminated for the year at this date. The plan that is being worked out is that each child will have on display his or her work for the year. The Tri-Township Club, the one that is of most interest to our readers consists of Fred Ulm, Doris Shull, Harry Todd, Harold and Olen Waltz, Elmer Place, Fred Gee, Ethel Lenherr and Carl Hart.

The exhibits will be grouped by clubs and listed individually. Valuable premiums will be awarded if possible and a State man from this department of Purnue will judge the exhibits. The interest thus far in this line of work has largely been responsible to the institute organizations over the county that have urged the young fellows to take this work. It will really be surprising what has been accomplished by them when it is placed on display. Further announcements will be given later.

Sechler Family Quarent'd.

A case of low-down dyptheria has been discovered in the recent illness of Master Robert Sechler, aged 8-years old, son of John Sechler and wife, of east of town. The lad had been going to school up to this week and he became ill and the family called several doctors for council and it was decided that his disease was serious and the family was placed under immediate quarentine.

FURNISHED LIVING TO MANY

Extent of Antwerp Diamond Industry Will Be Something of a Surprise to the Uninitiated.

In the year 1914 there were about 200 diamond-cutting shops in Antwerp, employing about 16,000 cutters and 3,000 cementers, altogether about 20,000 highly skilled workmen, who earned $20,000,000 a year. Besides there were between 3,000 and 4,000 manufacturers, merchants and brokers; what these men earned it is impossible to tell; it is certain that they dressed flashily and spent lots of money. If it is considered further that these 23,000 diamond men had families averaging three or four members, it will be found that the living of 100,000 people depended directly on the diamond trade. Add to this the large number of hotel and cafe owners who made huge sums on the diamond trade. The fact is these men acted as private bankers to the cutters, who lived almost exclusively in hotels and boarding houses and paid their accounts at long intervals. Finally there were hosts of tradesmen and retailers who supplied the "diamond people" with provisions, clothes and furniture. The Diamond club of Antwerp, where the yearly business ran into millions of francs, had a membership of 12,000, all of them merchants, brokers or manufacturers.

LATEST STYLES IN GOWNS AND HATS

BLACK AND WHITE POPULAR

Colors Form Favorite Combination at French Resorts—Stripes in Narrow and Wide Arrangements—Skirts Are Very Short.

From all signs this will be a decisive season in Paris in so far as fashion creation is concerned. The designers seem to have taken on their old accustomed stride. They have turned their efforts unreservedly to leadership in the world of style.

To aid them in this crucial moment there are arriving from the United States, from South America, and from England hosts of buyers and fashion experts to watch the latest developments. This is almost a new experience. At least it is a revived experience, for through the last five years only the most favored of buyers have been allowed to cross the water and only a few of the dressmakers have kept up their work with anything like pre-war vigor.

American women during the war have developed a style all their own. They are dressing now as suits the climate and their life and their pursuits, which are quite different from the French woman's. And one sympathizes with the buyers, who wonder whether their clients at home will refuse to accept the wonderful things brought over from France. If their eyes are trained only for beauty they will be dazzled into letting all their accumulated notions of dress go by the board and the conservatives at home will not be suited.

An afternoon hat of unusual merit. The skeleton ostrich feathers make a striking trimming for this exquisite headgear of velvet.

At this time of the year all of France, as all of the rest of the world, seeks a cool spot; and so it is at Deauville and the other resorts by the seaside that one looks upon the fashionably arrayed crowd of women and is able to gain some idea of the trend of the times as regards dress. They are wearing the very latest things from a French point of view, and, of course, the majority of the fall fashions will follow in some respects the lines favored just now.

Skirts Are Very Short.

Well, the tendency is all in the direction of the skirts that are shorter than anything America has ever worn or even dreamed about. You hear it said that the Parisians are wearing their skirts very long, but when you see them with their skirts actually extending just below their knees, so that when their arms are raised the skirt pulls above the knee, you know what a short skirt really is. It is easy on material and is extremely good looking when the figure of the wearer can stand the strain. The skirts are tight, too, but what matters that when their length is what it is? No trouble about taking a good, long step in a dress of this character. Then the coats, when it is a suit, reach almost to the bottom of the skirts, leaving, in fact, only about two or three inches of the skirt to be seen. The coats are either strictly tailored or they show a little fullness about the hips. That tells a story of forthcoming fullnesses of even greater volume.

It is so with the dresses. Always there is a slight gathering of extra material where the hips join the waist. It is the pannier that is greeting us on the broad highway of fashion. As yet it is not large enough nor full enough to be alarming, though there are rumors of hoops about the hips and even about the bottoms of the skirts.

The sleeves now in vogue can hardly be called sleeves. They actually are just a little strip of material over the top of the shoulder. In most instances that is all, and the Parisians wear them fearlessly for morning and afternoon. In the evening there is no sign to be seen of sleeves.

Even the blouses for wear with tailored suits are scantily equipped as to sleeves. They will be quite high at the neck, buttoning up under the chin most uncomfortably on a hot day, and then they will have these little, inadequate sleeves—that is, they are inadequate for anything except setting off a good-looking arm.

Indeed, a Frenchwoman's dress of the present mode is little more than two strips of material sewed together and cut kimono fashion, though the lines of her frock are not flowing; they follow the outline of her figure.

Evening gowns, far from being an exception to this rule, carry things to an exaggerated degree. The economical use of material there extends to the neckline, which not only opens at back to the waist, but sometimes below that point. These gowns are low in front also. All that is used for the bodices are two pointed strips of material on either side of the front. In order to keep this on there are strings of jewels or beads attached to the points strung around the neck, and from the back of the neck strung to the waistline again. It is the fabric of the evening gown that counts for everything and its draping.

Favorite Color Combination.

Black and white is by all odds the favorite color combination at the French resorts at this time of the year. Black and white stripes, since early spring, have been very good for separate silk dresses and for suits, as well as for topcoats. Now the new woolly fabrics are appearing, and they show these stripes in wide and narrow arrangements.

Then there is the black gown with the white hat; that is the most effective. This season they are wearing over the white hat, which is sans trimming, a black, lacy veil. This makes the costume even more effective. The veil does not necessarily cover the face—in fact, it rarely does—but its lacy pattern is so distributed that the white showing through the black transparent pattern makes a trimming of its own.

Hats Without Trimming.

The hats, as a forecast of fall headgear, are mostly without trimming. The style is all in the line, but how that line is obtained is a complete mystery. Upon examination the riddle only becomes more complicated. There seems to be nothing there except a band of something stiff to fit about the head. The crown and the brim are entirely without inner stiffening or frame. The trick does not allow for explanation. It is all in the wizard who causes it to be. Yet, when this seeming mass of velvet or satin is put on the head it takes a shape and form that commend it to any wearer. It seems to have been made to set off at its best that face alone, and while you cannot say that the hat is round or oval or square, or long, still it has shape.

The felt blocked hats worn with midseason gowns are round as to crown and as to brim as well. The brim turns up at the same distance all the way round and the only trimming for the hat is a silk band of the same color. Hats of this character in beige and taupe worn with navy blue suits are effective. Then there is another variation of this hat done in duvetyn.

State Happenings

Indianapolis.—The largest single requisition for workmen that has come to the offices of the Indiana free employment commission since its establishment was that from Muncie, where 200 carpenters and builders are wanted at once.

Terre Haute.—Members of the Terre Haute fire department decided by a vote of 57 to 28 not to comply with an ultimatum by Mayor Hunter that they must abandon their union or resign from the fire department. The meeting was addressed by Mayor Hunter and Clem J. Richards, president of the board of public safety.

Newcastle.—The first steps toward "cleaning up" the Henry county fair were taken recently at the annual stockholders' meeting when the women of the county succeeded in having the board adopt a resolution pledging that future fairs will be conducted in as clean a manner as possible and barring undesirable shows and games of chance. Fairs on the eastern Indiana circuit this year were the cause of many complaints.

Indianapolis.—Any person who sells bay rum with the knowledge that it is to be used as a beverage is guilty of violating the prohibition law, according to a ruling of Judge S. Robbins in the city court here. Judge Robbins made the ruling in the case of two local druggists who had been charged with operating a "blind tiger." The evidence showed that a half pint of bay rum had been sold as a beverage to a colored man. The cases were appealed to the criminal court.

Goshen.—Six new claimants to the $75,000 estate of Alfred Lowry, former mayor, who died without known heirs, appeared here, bringing the total to 25. The latest claimants are: Mrs. L. C. Eulass, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Wylie Woodburn, Minneapolis; Minn.; Susie L. Lowry-McSwain, Ethel, Ark.; Mrs. Mellie L. Allen, Perry, N. Y.; Frank Lowry, Eaton, Colo., and Mrs. Rhoda Denning, Manzanola, Colo. Susie Lowry-McSwain sent a letter addressed to the dead man, referring to him as "Dear Uncle Alf."

Gary.—Employment agents of the Illinois Steel company, whose 12,000 employees here went on strike September 22 as a part of a nation-wide strike in the steel industry, reported that 1,500 former workmen have recently returned to their jobs. Leaders of the strikers deny this, but it is certain that there is more activity about the mills. The greater number of those returning are Greeks, company officials say, of whom about 2,100 of a population of about 3,000 work in the big Gary plant.

Goshen.—Wawasee inn, the largest and one of the oldest hotels at Lake Wawasee, with all the outbuildings and a big tank burned to the ground in a fire of unknown origin. John E. Boyts and Dr. C. O. Dobson of Goshen, a few days ago, purchased the property of a company of Wabash, Fort Wayne and Indianapolis men, paying $18,000 for it. The building had recently been closed for the season and Doctor and Mrs. Dobson were living in the annex. The loss is estimated at $25,000.

Indianapolis.—Complete victory for Hoosier shippers in the Indiana-Illinois freight rate controversy is not foreshadowed in a tentative report submitted to the interstate commerce commission by William A. Disque, attorney examiner for the commission. Copies of the report were received by O. P. Gothlin, chief of the tariff bureau of the Indiana public service commission, and R. B. Coapstick, attorney for the Indiana state chamber of commerce. Exceptions to the report will be filed within the next few days by Mr. Gothlin and Mr. Coapstick. The case will be completed when oral arguments are conducted before the commission at Washington, D. C., October 18.

East Chicago.—Representatives of James P. Goodrich, governor of Indiana, who have made investigations here will report to the governor that a very large proportion of steel workers on strike in East Chicago are anxious to go to work. It also will be reported that the men are deterred from returning to their jobs through fear of injury not so much to themselves as to their families. These fears, it is said, follow a system of intimidation and threats to the families of men who announce their willingness to work by committees from the foreign element in the ranks of the strikers. The governor will be informed by his representatives that the mills in East Chicago can be started and operated only by the collection of soldiers, and it is possible that state troops will be asked for. The authorities are willing to protect returning workmen, but the police force is not adequate to handle the situation in the event of disorder.

Indianapolis.—A number of railroad companies operating in Indiana have written to L. N. Hines, state superintendent of public instruction, requesting him to call the attention of school hack drivers, now beginning their school year work, to the Indiana law requiring them to stop and go ahead to see if the way is clear when they approach a railroad crossing. The companies point out the needless loss of child life in Indiana due to disregard for this law. Mr. Hines will send out letters calling the attention of school authorities to the caution to be exercised in this respect.

Terre Haute.—The Indiana State Normal school began its fiftieth year with indications that the registration will exceed that of any term since the beginning of the world war, which seriously interfered with the attendance.

Lafayette.—An average price of 6 cents a bushel will be paid to corn huskers in this part of Indiana, if the farmers of Tippecanoe and adjoining counties conform to an agreement just reached by representatives of the farmers' associations in these counties at a conference here.

Evansville.—Coal operators and dealers are taking steps to meet increased costs in the event the demands of the United Mine Workers of America for wage increases are met. At a mass meeting to be called soon they will announce that coal probably will rise to 30 cents a bushel to meet the wage raise.

Richmond.—Dr. J. M. Bulla, county health officer, ordered the school at Economy closed because the township trustee had failed, it is said, to comply with an order of the state board of health to make extensive improvements to the buildings. Pupils have been transferred to the Williamsburg and Hagerstown schools.

Vincennes.—Charles A. Smith, a farmer of Palmyra township claims the finest corn in the county. He brought twenty-one ears to town that had a net weight of thirty-five pounds, or one half bushel. The corn was planted May 18, maturing in four months. On the field 250 pounds of fertilizer was used before the ground was broken.

Columbus.—Four large Columbus baking companies, indicted August 22 on charges of violating the Valentine anti-trust law in combining to fix the price of bread, entered pleas of guilty and were fined $1,550 and costs each, assessed a penalty of $50 a day from the date of indictment and ordered to reduce the price of bread to what it was before the combination was entered into.

Chicago, Ill.—A tentative program for the Tristate Forestry conference to be held in Indianapolis, October 22 and 23, under the auspices of the Indiana conservation commission was agreed on here at a conference by Richard Lieber, director of the Hoosier commission; F. H. Shepardson, director of the Illinois forestry work, and C. E. Thorne, director of Ohio forestry work.

Indianapolis.—Ele Stansbury, attorney general of Indiana, has submitted to L. N. Hines, state superintendent of public instruction, an opinion on the new teachers' training course law in which he held that "the state board of education, which is also the teachers' training board, cannot legally issue provisional certificates, such as are provided for in sections 4 and 8 of the new law, to persons who graduated from training schools prior to May 15, 1919, the date the present act came into force, and this is true regardless of whether they have had 50 months' successful experience as teachers or not.

Washington, D. C.—A pension of $12 has been granted John I. Bennett of Laconia, Ind., and pensions of $25 have been granted the following Indianians: Sarah P. Denham, Crawfordsville; Nancy Girt, Fortville; Mary E. Hawkins, Lebanon; Esther E. Morgan, New Salem; Lucy C. Patterson, Indianapolis; Sarah A. Pointer, Fooresville; Charity Sluder, Noblesville; Rhoda L. Smith, Newcastle; Martha E. Beeson, Lynn; Sarah Baker, Marion; Marietta Clark, Princeton; Margaret M. Gaines, Anderson; Penelope Hamlin, Linton; Mary Ann Johnson, Owensville; Anna Kumler, Lafayette; Susan Lansdown, South Whitley; Jennie E. Paul, Waverly; Amanda M. Widner, Elwood; Mary A. Donaldson, Butler; Lottie M. Lynch, North Vernon.

Indianapolis.—The home service section of the Indianapolis chapter, American Red Cross, has just received a list of the public health service examiners for Indiana. Every discharged soldier or sailor who needs medical aid will be referred to the nearest public health examiner, according to instructions received by the home service sections. The examiners will make no charge for examining and reporting on applications by the soldiers for compensation or vocational training. The examiners are listed as follows: Dr. Leon Whetsell, Bloomington; Dr. L. A. Elliott, Elkhart, Marine hospital, Evansville; Dr. M. B. Catlett, Fort Wayne; Dr. Yale E. Schaible, Gary; Dr. Carl McGaughey, Greenfield; Dr. E. Chidlaw and Dr. A. W. Lloyd, Hammond; Dr. Sam McGaughey, 5217 East Washington street, and Dr. A. L. Marshall, 520 Hume-Mansur building, Indianapolis; Dr. J. C. Bradfield, Logansport; Dr. D. C. McClelland, Lafayette; Dr. Charles C. Roselle, Lagrange; Dr. B. C. Dale, Marion; Dr. William Molloy, Muncie; Dr. Mark M. Moran, Portland; Dr. C. E. Johnson, Rensselaer; Dr. Arthur J. Whallon, Richmond; Dr. H. F. Mitchell, South Bend; Dr. William Kunkler, Terre Haute; Dr. H. E. Gowland, Valparaiso, and Dr. H. D. McCormick, Vincennes.

Evansville.—Governor Goodrich, who was here a few days ago viewing a tract of 550 acres of land offered to the Southern Indiana Hospital for the Insane, announced in his address before the Rotary club here that arrangements have been completed for buying the land. The governor was accompanied by a legislative committee composed of Joseph M. Cravens and C. J. Munton, state senators, and William Swain and D. M. Curry, state representatives. The land is owned by Michael D. Helfrich of this city, and is about four miles northeast of here, bordering on the Boonville pike.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

GOVERNORS FAVOR BUDGET SYSTEM

Gov. Henry J. Allen of Kansas says of the movement to establish a national budget system: "The war emphasized strongly the inadequacies of our legislative machinery in problems of national finance. No private business concern would dare to rush blindly into things as does congress. This is because congress lacks a sound system of providing public money for the operation of the ten major executive departments. The work of these agencies can be established only through the adoption of a new method of budgetary procedure."

Governor Allen is one of 22 governors who are reported by the national budget committee to favor the substitution of the budget system for the present system of departmental estimates. The governors made many remedial suggestions, including the following:

Demand executive responsibility for the national budget. Establish a bureau of the budget to draw up estimates of governmental expenses. Provide for congressional consideration of money bills by single committees of the house and senate, or a joint committee of the two. Limit money bills to actual needs and do away with "pork" and "log rolling."

JAMES R. RIGGS A BORN FARMER

The new assistant secretary of agriculture, James R. Riggs, is a farmer—not merely by way of interest in the subject, but by life-long, practical application. Farming has been his primary occupation all his life. More than that, he is a farmer by heredity. His grandfather, Hezekiah Riggs, was born on a farm in Loudon county, Virginia, in 1791. When he was twenty-two years old he moved to Sullivan county, Indiana, and engaged in farming and live stock growing. There Commodore Perry Riggs, father of the assistant secretary, was born and there he spent his life as a farmer and stock grower. All of his sons and all of his sons' sons have been farmers.

James R. Riggs was born at Shelburn, Ind., February 17, 1885. For two years after graduation from the Sullivan county high school, in 1882, he was deputy county treasurer and bookkeeper for a hardware and lumber firm. In 1885, when he was twenty years old, he began his career as a farmer. He made his first purchase of land in 1888. From that time until the present he has continued in the active management of his farms.

While devoting his energies primarily to farming operations, Mr. Riggs has found time both for other business enterprises and for public affairs. He was elected county auditor in 1894. For a number of years he was active in the development of the coal, oil and gas industries of his section. For 12 years he was president of a trust company. He has been connected with the construction of more than 200 miles of improved highway. Since 1912 he has been engaged in the manufacture of drain tile.

WHEN JOSEPHUS FIRST TASTED POI

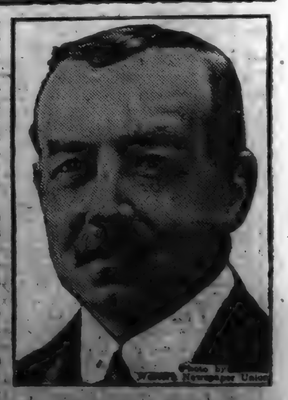
Secretary Josephus Daniels of the navy is a capable spotlight artist, and he was conspicuously in the public eye during his recent visit to the Pacific coast in connection with the arrival of the fleet. They do say that the official motion pictures of the secretary eating poi at Honolulu are great.

Such delicacies as pig, roasted whole in the ground, with the aid of hot rocks; poi from the mealy root of the taro plant; seaweed and raw fish; pudding made from taro, coconut and coconut milk; beef and taro tops cooked in ti leaves; sweet potatoes roasted in a hole in the sand, and many other viands dear to the palate of the native Hawaiian, were served at an old-fashioned luau, or feast, in his honor. The guests were compelled to eat with their fingers. Napkins were provided, however.

Secretary Daniels did not hesitate. He plunged two fingers into a poi bowl, twirled a sticky lump on their ends and conveyed it to his mouth. He did not wince, as most "malihinis" or newcomers do when they taste poi for the first time. Secretary Daniels was game. Two moving picture men, members of the party, placed their cameras within a few feet of him and turned their cranks as he ate his poi and smiled.

And Secretary Daniels did not stop at poi.

HENDERSON, BRITISH LABOR LEADER



The result of the by-election of Widnes, Lancaster, in which Arthur Henderson, the labor leader, was elected to the house of commons, is considered a severe blow to the coalition government. Henderson said his victory was "an emphatic condemnation of the coalition government's policy and of the cynical political compromise upon which the government rests." Henderson's recent expressions of his views include these:

"The present world unrest means that the old order of things is in its death throes, that a new society is about to come to its birth and that age-long injustices and inequalities that burdened the lives of the common people are to be swept away. Class rule in politics is doomed, but it is still doubtful whether the ideal of true political liberty will be realised in this or other countries without a violent convulsion of society. The main problem now is to restore popular confidence in representative institutions and to guide the movement of the masses along the path of constitutional changes, and to enable democracy to become master in its own house without violence."

Analyzing the causes of unrest, Mr. Henderson said that the development of political institutions had not kept pace with the growth of democracy, which is awake and conscious of its power, but unable to obtain any real control of the machinery of government

—11—

"By the way, dear king," I said, assuming a casual manner, "do you happen to have a son?"

"No!" he answered, "Calypso is my only child."

"Very strange!" I said, "we met a whimsical lad in our travels whom I would have sworn was her brother."

"That's odd!" said the "king" imperturbably, "but no! I have no son;" and he seemed to say it with a certain sadness.

Then Calypso came in to join my audience, having, meanwhile, taken the opportunity of twining a scarlet hibiscus among her luxuriant dark curls. I should certainly have told the story better without her, yet I was glad—how glad!—to have her seated there, an attentive presence in a simple gown, white as the sea foam—from which, there was no further doubt in my mind, she had magically sprung.

I gave them the whole story, much as I had told it in John Saunders' snuggery—John P. Tobias, Jr.; dear old Tom and his sucking fish, his ghosts, sharks, skeletons, and all; and when I had finished, I found that the interest of my story was once more chiefly centered in my pock-marked friend of "the wonderful works of God."

"I should like to meet your pock-marked friend," said King Alcinous, "and I have a notion that, with you as a bait, I shall not long be denied the pleasure."

"I am inclined to think that I have seen him already," said Calypso, using her honey-golden voice for the base purpose of mentioning him.

"Impossible!" I cried; "he is long since safe in Nassau jail.

"Oh, not lately," she answered to our interrogative surprise, and giving a swift embarrassed look at her father, which I at once connected with the secret of the doubloons.

"Seriously, Calypso?" asked her father, with a certain stern affection, as thinking of her safety. "On one of your errands to town?"

And then, turning to me, he said:

"Sir Ulysses, you have spoken well, and your speech has been that free, open-hearted speech that wins its way alike among the Hyperboreans that dwell in frosen twilight near the northern star, and those dwarfed and swarthy intelligences that blacken in the fierce sunlight of that fearful axle we call the equator. Therefore, I will make return to you of speech no less frank and true . . . "

He took a puff at his cigar, and then continued:

"I should not risk this confession, but that it is easy to see that you belong to the race of Eternal Children, to which, you may have realized, my daughter and I also belong. This adventure of yours after buried treasure has not seriously been for the doubloons and pieces of eight, the million dollars, and the million and a half dollars themselves, but for the fun of going after them, sailing the unknown seas, coral islands, and all that sort of blessed moonshine. Well, Calypso and I are just like that, and I am going to tell you something exciting—we too have our buried treasure. It is nothing like so magnificent in amount as yours, or your Henry P. Tobias'—and where it is at this particular moment I know as little as yourself. In fact it is Calypso's secret . . . "

I looked across at Calypso, but her eyes were far beyond capture, in unplummeted seas.

"I will show you presently where I found it, among the rocks near by—now a haunt of wild bees.

"Can you ever forget that passage in the Georgics? It makes the honey taste sweeter to me every time I taste it. We must have some of it for dinner, by the way, Calypso."

I could not help laughing, and so, for a moment, breaking up the story. The dear fellow! Was there any business of human importance from which he could not be diverted by a quotation from Homer or Virgil or Shakespeare? But he was soon in the saddle again.

"Well," he resumed, "one day, some seven years ago, in a little cave below the orange trees, grubbing about as I am fond of doing, I came upon a beautiful old box of beaten copper, sunk deep among the roots of a fig tree. It was strong, but it seemed too dainty for a pirate—some great lady's jewel box more likely—Calypso shall show it to us presently. On opening it—what do you think? It spilled over with golden doubloons—among which were submerged some fine jewels, such as this ring you see me wearing. Actually, it was no great treasure, as a monetary calculation—certainly no fortune—but from our romantic point of view, as belonging to the race of Eternal Children, it was El Dorado, Aladdin's lamp, the mines of Peru, the whole sunken Spanish Main, glimmering fifty fathoms deep in mother-of-pearl and the moon. It was the very Secret Rose of Romance; and, also, mark you, it was some money—oh, perhaps, all told, it might be some five thousand guineas, or—what would you say?—twenty-five odd thousand dollars; Calypso knows better than I, and she, as I said, alone knows where it is now hid, and how much of it now remains."

He paused to relight his cigar, while Calypso and I— Well, he began again:

"Now my daughter and I," and he paused to look at her fondly, "though of the race of Eternal Children, are not without some of the innocent wisdom which Holy Writ countenances as the self-protection of the innocent—Calypso, I may say, is particularly endowed with this quality, needing it as she does especially for the guardianship for her foolish talkative old father, who, by the way, is almost at the end of his tale. So, when this old chest flashed its bewildering dazzle upon us, we, being poor folk, were not more dazzled than afraid. For—like the poor man in the fable—such good fortune was all too likely to be our undoing, should it come to the ears of the great, or the indigent criminal. The 'great' in our thought was, I am ashamed to say, the sacred British treasury, by an ancient law of which, forty per cent of all 'treasure-trove' belongs to his majesty the king. The 'indigent criminal' was represented by—well, our colored (and not so very much colored) neighbors. Of course we ought to have sent the whole treasure to your friend, John Saunders of his Britannic majesty's government at Nassau, but— Well, de didn't. Some day, perhaps, you will put in a word for us with him, as you drink his old port, in the snuggery. Meanwhile, we had an idea, Calypso and I—"

He paused—for Calypso had involuntarily made a gesture, as though pleading to be spared the whole revelation—and then with a smile, continued:

"We determined to hide away our little hoard where it would be safe from our neighbors, and dispose of it according to our needs with a certain tradesman in the town whom we thought we could trust—a tradesman, who, by the way, quite naturally levies a little tax upon us for his security. No blame to him! I have lived far too long to be hard on human nature."

"John Sweeney?" I asked, looking over at Calypso with eyes that dared at last to smile.

"The very same, my Lord Ulysses," answered my friend.

And so I came to understand that Mr. Sweeney's reluctance in selling me that doubloon was not so sinister as it had, at the moment, appeared; that it had in fact come of a loyalty which was already for me the most precious of loyalties.

"Then," said I, "as a fitting conclusion to the confidence you have reposed in me, my Lord Alcinous, if Miss Calypso would have the kindness to let us have a sight of that chest of beaten copper of which you spoke, I would like to restore this, that was once a part of its contents, wherever the rest of them" (and I confess that I paused a moment) "may be in hiding."

And I took from my pocket the sacred doubloon that I had bought from John Sweeney—may Heaven have mercy upon his soul!—for sixteen dollars and seventy-five cents, on that immortal evening.

CHAPTER IV.

In Which the "King" Dreams a Dream —and Tells Us About It.

The afternoon, under the spell of its various magic, had been passing all too swiftly, and at length I grew reluctantly aware that it was time for me to go. King Alcinous raised his hand with a gesture that could not well be denied. That led me—his invitation being accepted without further parley—to mention the idea I had conceived as I came along, of exploring those curious old ruined buildings.

"Tomorrow," he announced, "tomorrow we shall begin—there is not a moment to lose. We will send Samson with a message to your captain—there is no need for you to go yourself; time is too precious—and in a week, who knows but that Monte Cristo shall seem like a pauper and a penny gaff in comparison with the fantasies of our fearful wealth.

So, for that evening, all was laughingly decided. In a week's time, it was agreed, we should have difficulty in recognizing each other. We should be so disguised in cloth of gold, and so blinding to look upon with rings and ropes of pearls.

When we met at breakfast next morning, glad to see one another again as few people are at breakfast, it was evident that, as far as the "king" was concerned, our dream had lost nothing in the night watches. On the contrary, its wings had grown to an amazing span and iridescence.

Calypso, it transpired, had certain household matters—of which the "king" of course was ever divinely oblivious—that would take her on an errand into the town. Those disposed of, we two eternal children were at liberty to be as foolish as we pleased. The "king" bowed his uncrowned head, as kings, from time immemorial have bowed their diadems before the quiet command of the domesticities; and it was arranged that I should be Calypso's escort on her errand.

So we set forth in the freshness of the morning, and the woods that had been so black and bewildering at my coming opened before us in easy paths, and all that tropical squalor that had been foul with sweat and insects seemed strangely vernal to me, so that I could hardly believe that I had trodden that way before. And for our companion all the way along—or, at least for my other companion—was the Wonder of the World, the beautiful strangeness of living, and that marvel of a man's days upon the earth which lies in not knowing what a day shall bring forth, if only we have a little patience with Time—Time, with those gold keys at his girdle, ready, at any turn of the ways, to unlock the hidden treasure that is to be the meaning of our lives.

How should I try to express what it was to walk by her side, knowing all that we both knew?—knowing, or giddily believing that I knew, how her heart, with every breath she took, vibrated like a living flower, with waves of color, changing from moment to moment like a happy, trembling dawn. To know—yet not to say! Yes! we were both at that divine moment which hangs like a dewdrop in the morning sun—ah! all too ready to fall. Oh! keep it poised, in that miraculous balance, 'twixt time and eternity—for this crystal made of light and dew is the meaning of the life of man and woman upon the earth.

As we came to the borders of the wood near the edge of the little town we called a counsel of two. As the outcome of it we concluded that, having in mind the "king's" ambitious plans for our cloth-of-gold future, and for other obvious reasons, it was better that she went into the town alone—I to await her in the shadow of the mahogany tree.

As she turned to leave me she drew up from her bosom a little bag that hung by a silver chain, and opening it drew out, with a laugh—a golden doubloon!

I sprang toward her; but she was too quick for me, and laughingly vanished through an opening in the trees. I was not to kiss her that day.

Calypso was so long coming back that I began to grow anxious—was, indeed, on the point of going down into the town in search of her, when she suddenly appeared, rather out of breath and evidently a little excited—as though, in fact, she had been running away from something. She caught me by the arm with a laugh.

"Do you want to see your friend Tobias?" she said.

"Tobias? Impossible!"

"Come here," and she led me a yard or two back the way she had come, and then looked through the trees.

"Gone!" she said, "but he was there a minute or two ago—or at least someone that is his photograph—and of course he's there yet, hidden in the brush, and probably got his eyes on us all the time. Did you see that seven-year apple tree move?"

"His favorite tree," I laughed.

"Hardly strong enough to hang him on, though." And I realised that she was King Alcinous' daughter.

We crouched lower for a moment or two but the seven-year apple tree did'nt move again, and we agreed that there was no use in waiting for Tobias to show his hand.

"But what made you think it was Tobias?" I asked, "and how did it all happen?"

"I could hardly fail to recognise him from your flattering description," she answered, "and indeed it all happened rather like another experience of mine. I had gone into Sweeney's store—you remember?—and was just paying my bill."

"In the usual carnage?" I ventured. She gave me a long, whimsical smile—once more her father's daughter.

"That, I'm afraid, was the trouble," she answered; "for as I laid my money down on the counter I suddenly noticed that there was a person at the back of the store."

"A person?" I interrupted.

"Yes! Suppose we say 'a pock-marked person;' was it you?"

"What a memory you have for details," I purried; "and then?"

"Well! I took my change and managed to whisper a word to Sweeney—a good friend, remember—and came out. I took a short cut back, but the 'person' that had stood in the back of the store seemed to know the way almost better than I—so well that he got ahead of me. He was walking quietly this way and so slowly that I had at last to overtake him. He said nothing, just watched me as if interested in the way I was going—but, I'm ashamed to say, he rather frightened me! And here I am."

"Well, then," I said, "let's hurry home and talk it over with the 'king.'"

The "king," as I had realized, was a practical "romantic" and at once took the matter seriously, leaving—as might have surprised some of those who had only heard him talk—his conversational fantasies on the theme to come later.

She Drew Up From Her Bosom a Little Bag That Hung by a Silver Chain, and, Opening It, Drew Out, With a Laugh—a Golden Doubloon.

Calypso, however, had the first word.

"I always told you, dad," she said—and the word "dad" on the lips of that statuesque girl—who always seemed ready to take that inspired framework of rags and bones and talking music into her protecting arms—seemed quite the quaintest of paradoxes—"I always told you, dad, what would heppen, with your fairy tales of the doubloons."

"Quite true, my dear," he answered, "but isn't a fairy tale worth paying for?—worth a little trouble? And remember, if you will allow me, two things about fairy tales: there must always be some evil fairy in them, some dragon or such like; and there is always—a happy ending. Now the dragon enters at last—in the form of Tobias; and we should be happy on that very account. It shows that the race of dragons is not, as I feared, extinct. And as for the happy ending, we will arrange it, after lunch—for which, by the way, you are somewhat late."

After lunch the "king" resumed, but in a brief and entirely practical vein:

"We are about to be besieged," he said. "The woods, probably, are already thick with spies. For the moment we must suspend operations on our Golconda"—his name for the ruins that we were to excavate—"and, as our present purpose—yours no less than ours, friend Ulysses—is to confuse Tobias, my suggestion is this: that you walk with me a mile or two to the nor'ard. There is an entertaining mangrove swamp I should like to show you, and also you can give me your opinion of an idea of mine that you will understand all the better when I have taken you over the ground."

So we walked beyond the pines, down onto a long, interminable flat land of mari marshes and mangrove trees—so like that in which Charlie Webster had shot the snake and the wild duck—that only Charlie could have seen any difference.

"Now," said the "king," "do you see a sort of river there, overgrown with mangroves and palmettos?"

"Yes," I answered, "almost—though it's so choked up it's almost impossible to say."

"Well," said the "king," "that's the idea; you haven't forgotten those old ruins we are going to explore. You remember how choked up they are. Well, this was the covered waterway, the secret creek, by which the pirates—John Teach, or whoever it was; perhaps John P. Tobias himself—used to land their loot. It's so overgrown nowadays that no one can find the entrance but myself and a friend or two; do you understand?"

We walked a little farther, and then at length came to the bank of the creek the "king" had indicated. This we followed for half a mile or so, till we heard the murmur of the sea.

How We Go At It

First we look into the battery to see if you put water in it.

Then we use the hydrometer which is the one reliable way of knowing the condition of its charge.

Then, if no special cause of trouble appears we put it on the line to see if it will take a charge.

But if there is plain indication of serious trouble we open the battery up and find out exactly what's what.

Don't trust your battery to amateurs or artists in guesswork, who claim they can tell inside condition by outside inspection.

Come here where you find adequate machines and apparatus to really inspect, charge and repair any battery.

Another Big Pay Day.

Another one of Uncle Sam's big pay days comes on October 15. Then you again will have an opportunity to clip your Liberty Bond coupons and reinvest the interest in another form of Government security—War Savings stamps or the new Treasury Savings certificates. Interest on Liberty bonds to the total amount of $78,102,249.28 will be paid by the Treasury Department on October 15.

Keep your dollars working for you. That is what the wise investor does, and with the purchasing power of the dollar lower than it ever was, it is the part of wisdom to keep your income increasing until money is worth more. You can do that by reinvesting your Liberty Bond interest in War Savings stamps which pay four per cent interest compounded quarterly.

The procedure is easy. All you have to do is to take your Liberty Bond coupons to any post office and almost any bank and exchange them for War Savings stamps, which are non depreciable and non-fluctuating. In case you ever need the money, you always can cash them at any postoffice on ten days' notice. Each purchaser of War Savings stamps gains sure profit and insurance for the future. The Government gains some money and assures and stabilizes its financial safety and prosperity by assuring the financial future of its citizens.

Following are Uncle Sam's other pay days this year and the amount of Liberty bond interest it is possible to re-invest in War Savings stamps:—November 15, $148,517,248.75; December 15, $36,658,376.65; December 15-5th. Loan, $106,875,000.00.

Don't forget these dates. Go to a postoffice or bank and put your Liberty bond coupons in War Savings stamps.

ICE DODGING IN LITHUANIA

Dangerous Sport That Is Indulged in by Boys and Girls When Spring Comes.

Lithuania is shut up tight in its many fire-warmed houses during the long ice-gathering winters.

Sport starts in the spring, when the rivers roar with hurtling ice floes that would have frightened even 'Liza into staying on the other shore.

But Lithuanian boys and girls are not frightened, an exchange says. They pull out their canoes and slip into the swirling floods, and go down the rapids dodging the huge blocks of ice that the warm weather has loosened. Parents and friends stand shouting on the shores. They shriek advice and encouragement, but the canoers can't hear them for the noise of the water and ice.

Far down the river they land on the soft mud banks and all are escorted to the home of the winner of the race, and fed with poppy cakes and home-brewed beer. The game is a dangerous one, but Lithuania has been trained through centuries of oppression to welcome danger. She is now asking the world to recognise her rights as an autonomous nation.

ARMED.

"Let's start a summer flirtation with those girls."

"Better not."

"Why?"

"They're knitting."

"Well, a girl can knit and yet not be too busy to flirt."

"You don't understand. I tried that once and the girl jabbed me with the knitting needle."

The first number on the High School lecture course was given by Manlove, the man of many faces, at the opera house on Tuesday evening. A fine crowd responded to the solicitation of the scholars and nearly enough season tickets were engaged to finance the course. The initial number came rather sudden and the committee was forced to put in extra work in order to get ready. The evening's entertainment was one of entertainment entirely, being made of impersonations. The entertainer made up each character before his audience. The future dates will be announced later and everyone should appreciate the efforts of the school and assist them by their presence at each night's performance. The educational value of such courses cannot be valued according to the price of the admission ticket. We need such things.

HOT BATH TREATMENT FOR SEED WHEAT EFFECTIVE IN KEEPING DISEASE AWAY

Giving Seed Wheat a Bath to Rid It of Smut Infection.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A firebrand applied to inflammable tinder is no more destructive than are the smuts which annually ravage and pillage the grain crops of the United States. Last year 25,500,000 bushels of wheat, 110,000,000 bushels of oats, and 3,000,000 bushels of barley were the tribute paid to smut.

There are two smuts which attack wheat, the loose and covered smut. Loose smut is most serious in the southern winter wheat section, which includes southern Illinois, southern Indiana, southern Ohio, southern Pennsylvania, southern Missouri, Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee, where it causes yearly losses ranging from 5 to 20 per cent of the entire crop. Loose smut shows, conspicuously when the wheat comes into head. At this time it reduces the grain to dusty black refuse, consisting largely of spores of the fungus which are spread broadcast by the wind and rain. The dissemination of the disease is furthered by the fact that the blooming period of the healthy plants and the shedding of the spores in the diseased plants are simultaneous. Some of these spores reach the flowers and infect the developing seed. The seed shows no external evidence of the presence of the smut fungus, but when planted gives rise to the black heads in the next crop.

Loose Smut Difficult to Control.

Loose smut is hard to control because the fungus exists inside the seed, and hence cannot be reached by ordinary chemicals without killing the wheat embryo. Fortunately, the disease can be controlled by the hot-water treatment, which consists of soaking the seed in cold water from 8 to 3 hours and then dipping it in hot water at a temperature of 132 degrees Fahrenheit for ten minutes. Subsequently the seed should be spread out to dry. Great care must be exercised not to have the water too hot nor to allow the seed to remain in the water too long. An advisable system is to treat four or five bushels of seed and to sow it in a special plot, isolated from the wheat fields proper, in order that the seed from the plot may be used for seeding operations the following year. Farmers who treat their seed in this manner fortify their fields against invasion by loose smut.

Bunt or stinking smut ranges at large over the entire wheat-growing section and generally causes a crop damage of from 1 to 5 per cent, although frequent individual fields show losses which range from 20 to 40 and even as high as 50 and 75 per cent. Bunt is sporadic in distribution, occurring here and there and everywhere in irregular sequence. One field may be seriously infested while the neighboring field on the right may be free from the disease. The disease shows up a few days before the wheat is ripe. If one carefully examines the diseased head at this time he will note that the glumes are pushed slightly apart, while the developing kernel is of dark color. If he crushes open the kernel, really a smut ball, a mass of ill-smelling, brownish black spores is released. In thrashing, these smut balls are knocked out and more or less broken apart so that the spores are scattered over the sound seed. On account of its bad smell, millers discount and penalize wheat covered with bunt dust.

Formaldehyde Bath Kills Bunt.

Stinking smut or bunt is easily controlled by use of formaldehyde, one pint or one pound of commercial formalin being dissolved in 40 gallons of water. The seed to be treated should be freed as much as possible from smut balls and other foreign matter and then should be placed in a loose gunny sack, filling the sack about two-thirds full, and then the sack should be dipped in the formalin solution and kept there about ten minutes. By raising and lowering the sack the grain will be mixed thoroughly and brought into complete contact with the solution. After treatment the grain must be dried and carefully protected from further contamination either in the sack or in the planting machinery. One pint of commercial formaldehyde solution dissolved in 40 gallons of water is usually sufficient for the treatment of 40 bushels of seed grain.

In the far West and on the Pacific coast, because of the occurrence of soil infestation by smut in that region, the copper-sulphate treatment is preferable to the formaldehyde method on controlling bunt. The former treatment consists in dipping the seed in a solution of one pound of copper sulphate dissolved in five gallons of water. When the seed is removed from the copper-sulphate solution it should be dipped in a mixture of one pound of quicklime to ten gallons of water, this latter measure being necessary to prevent the continued injurious action of the copper sulphate on the grain after the smut spores have been killed. At thrashing time the smut spores are spread broadcast over the fallowed land by the wind, as fallowing for wheat is a common practice in the Pacific Northwest. Subsequently, when the fall rains occur, these spores germinate and infect the young wheat plants as they develop. Hence seed treatment is not entirely effective, but generally the copper-sulphate control gives the better results because some of the chemical adheres to the seed and prevents infection from the soil.

BEAUTY BATH HELPS APPEARANCE OF HEN

White Fowls Must Be Washed Before Put on Exhibition.

Birds of Various Colors Can Be Improved by Fluffing and Grooming—Soft or Rain Water at Right Temperature Is Best.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

All white fowls must be washed, and most fowls of other colors can be improved in appearance by washing, fluffing and grooming before the show.

For white birds have three tubs, one filled with warm, soft or rain water, another with warm, soft or rain water, and the third with warm, soft or rain water colored the proper shade to rinse and blue white goods. Use a bar of good white or castile soap, a large sponge and a nail brush. Have the temperature of the room 80 or 85 degrees and bring the birds in clean exhibition coops, the floors of which should be covered with fresh, dry shavings.

Wash the males first. Clean the shanks and feet with the nail brush, soap and water. Insert the bird in the first tub and push it down under the water several times until the plumage is wet through; make a heavy lather with the sponge and soap and thoroughly wash the plumage with the sponge; open the wings and sponge them in the direction of the feathers. Always wash the length of the feather, from the quill to the tip and not across it.

Keep the bird's head out of the soapy water if possible; sponge the soap off the bird and remove to the second tub. Press it under the water several times, allow it to stand and drip for a few seconds, and then dip it twice in the tub containing the bluing water. Remove the bird from the water, hold its legs firmly and raise it up and down quickly, so that it will flap and expand its wings and tail, and shake out the water.

Do not use a towel to dry a white bird. Move the exhibition coop near the fire or some heat so that the bird will dry. Lifting up the plumage of the breast and opening the feathers of the fluff while drying has a tendency to increase the apparent size of these sections. It is necessary to examine the white birds frequently if the coops are near a stove to guard against overheating them or scorching or curling their feathers.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON FOR OCTOBER 12

FISHERS OF MEN.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 1:14-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—Jesus said unto them, come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men.—Mark 1:17.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Matt. 4:18-22; Luke 5:1-11; 14:25-34; James 5:19, 20.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Helping others to know Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Peter and John become workers for Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—The work of a disciple.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—Ways of winning men to Christ.

I. Jesus Preaching in Galilee (vv. 14, 15).

The reason why he changed from Judea to Galilee was the growing opposition to him. The fate of John the Baptist he accepted as foreshadowing his own death. The rejection of the forerunner meant the rejection of him whose advent he heralded. Prudence moved him to a more remote region, where he would attract less attention and be free from opposition. Besides this it gave less favored people an opportunity to hear the gospel, according to the prophetic word (Isa. 9:1, 2). It foreshadowed the gospel to the Gentiles.

1. What he preached (v. 14). The gospel of the Kingdom of God, which meant the good news of the near approach of the Kingdom of God, when the rule of God as predicted by the prophets would be realized. It should be carefully noted that the gospel of the Kingdom differs from the gospel of the grace of God.

2. How he preached (v. 15). (1) "The time is fulfilled and the Kingdom of God is at hand." This meant that the time had now come for the appearance of the Messiah and the establishment of his kingdom. (2) "Repent." This meant that the people should turn around, change their minds and attitude toward Christ the King and accept him as their King. This is a message which needs to be sounded out today. People should be called upon to repent of their sins. (3) "Believe the gospel." Then, as now, men need to believe the gospel of Christ's death for their sins and resurrection for justification (1 Cor. 15:1-4; Rom. 4:25).

II. Jesus Calling Disciples to Become Fishers of Men (vv. 16-20).

1. Who were called (vv. 16, 19). Simon and Andrew, John and James, two pairs of brothers. It is usually best to render the Lord's service in fellowship—in pairs. This is not only necessary for effective testimony, but for needed fellowship on the part of workers and protection of the witnesses. These all had previously been called to Christ for salvation; they had become his disciples (John 1:36-42). They are now called to service. This is always his way. We are first called to be disciples, then called to have fellowship with him in service.

2. From what they were called (vv. 16, 20). They were called from positions of definite service. God always chooses his servants from the ranks of the employed. The lazy man is not likely to have a call.

3. To what they were called (v. 17). To be "fishers of men." They no doubt had been successful fishers. The qualities which made them good fishermen, namely, patience, bravery to face the storm and night, and perseverance which led them to toil all night, though no fish were caught, would make them good fishers of men. It requires patience, bravery and perseverance to win souls for Christ.

4. Their call to obedience (vv. 18, 20). To obey meant sacrifice, painful separation, to give up all business interests and leave their father behind. Regardless of the cost, they yielded prompt obedience. They gave up business and home, not even inquiring as to where their salaries were to come from. They put their trust in him who called them, believing that he was able to supply all their needs.

5. Their reward (v. 17). These four men have wielded wondrous influence in the world. Their names have become immortalized. Had they remained at their business they would only have been humble fishermen. When Christ calls let us promptly obey, for eventually it will pay. It will yield one hundredfold in this life, and eternal life in the world to come.

Preaching the Gospel.

If the church is to reach the masses of the people it will have to send, as did the prophets and apostles, fit men to tell the glorious gospel of the grace of God. What is more, those who cannot do this work will have to support and encourage those who can. The marching orders of the church are: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

"For Thee."

With all the salvation of the world depending upon him, he has time and thought for each individual soul. Think of the vastness of his cares! yet the body of our Lord Jesus Christ was given for thee.—Selected.

Contagion of Heaven.

There ought to be such an atmosphere in every Christian church that a man going and sitting there should take the contagion of heaven, and carry home a fire to kindle the altar whence he came.—H. W. Beecher.

PUBLIC HIGHWAYS

ADVANTAGES OF GOOD ROADS

Public Improvements Will Effect Material Reduction in High Cost of Living.

"Food products were never higher priced or more needed than they were this past year, and yet the food administration states that one-half of our perishable produce rotted on the ground for lack of transportation facilities," said George C. Hubbs, sales manager for a large automobile concern. "Such a waste would be unheard of in Europe. It would spell national disaster. And at first thought it seems remarkable that it should be true of the country which has 229,951 miles of railroad as against 349,391 miles for all the rest of the world put together, and 6,000,000 motor vehicles as against approximately 440,000 for the rest of the world.

"But we must remember that all this great network of railroads and waterways might as well not exist, so far as the farmer located five miles back in the country is concerned, unless he is able to advantageously haul his produce over that five miles to the nearest shipping point. As Secretary Redfield recently put it, 'You might build the railroads up until they are ten tracks wide, but you do not fully help the farmer ten miles away to get his produce to market. And you might fill the rivers with steamers, and he may still be isolated.'

"Motor cars and motor trucks are a partial solution. But they are not enough. To use them advantageously requires good roads as well, over which the farmer can haul his produce in motor vehicles directly to the consumer, where possible, or else to the nearest shipping point. There never was a sounder investment in the world than money expended in the building of good roads. The Romans had learned that 2,000 years ago, and they built their roads so well that some of them are used yet.

"Certainly one of the surest ways to reduce the high cost of living is to build more good roads. And the 'build now' campaign which Mr. Wilson, secretary of labor, has recently started should receive the hearty support of everybody."

WILL TEACH HIGHWAY WORK

University of Michigan Announces Course in Road Transport to Its Students.

One of the most far-reaching developments to place our national highway system on a sound, uniform and economical basis is the recent announcement by President H. B. Hutchins that the University of Michigan will offer a course in highway transport to its students, says the B. F. Goodrich Rubber company.

The significance of highway freight transportation was vividly brought to light by the war and is now recognized as much a part of our shipping and communication scheme as are the railroads and the steamship lines.

INVESTMENT IN GOOD ROADS

Does Not Become Real Economy Until Provision Is Made for Proper Maintenance.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Investment of money in new roads does not become real economy until provision is made for keeping these new roads in condition after they are built. If a new road is built and then allowed to fall into disrepair, much of the original investment is simply wasted.

To Secure Permanency.

It would seem advisable that in the construction of all roads, some good, durable material should be applied as a top covering in order that permanency may be secured.

Drag Troublesome Road.

If you and your neighbor are having trouble over your road, don't drag it into court. Just drag it.

Anybody Can Build Road.

Anybody can build a good road—if you give him enough money.

Badly Handicapped.

Much against Bob's wishes, his fox terrier's tail was shortened. Not long after this operation Jip, like all other playful dogs, was trying to catch his tail, but it couldn't be done.

Bob, watching him, said sorrowfully: "Poor Jip, if they'd left the tail you was borned with you could catch it all right."

OLD SAYING SLIGHTLY MIXED

Familiar "Before You Could Say Jack Robinson" Does Not Convey the Right Idea.

Opinion differs as to the proper duration of a social call. "Anywhere from ten minutes to a half hour," says the woman who has a social secretary and whose daily job is "calling," to the tune of tea and wafers. "All afternoon," says the bourgeoisie, who takes along her knitting and sits down to coffee and cake. "And then," say some, "it all depends upon the call. On some occasions and with different people we stay longer than others."

But Jack Robinson's calls never varied. He never stayed long enough to wear out his welcome. In fact hardly had he been announced, hardly had the servant who admitted him spoken aloud his name than he was gone.

So, as you see, "before you can say Jack Robinson" has no reference to the time it takes to say it. "As long as you can see Jack Robinson" would be more in order with its origin and significance.

Dark Future.

"Got next winter's coal in?"

"I should say not. I haven't even got tomorrow's meals provided for."

Very Rough.

OH, YES, THEY LOVED MOTHER

But One Can't Help Feeling the Jones Family Might Have Shown It in Different Way.

Mr. Smith, hearing music and singing at his neighbor's house, decided he would drop in and see how they were.

Mr. Jones welcomed him and ushered him into the parlor where his daughter was playing the piano and and his son singing. Mr. Smith begged them to continue. They consented.

The first song they selected was "Mother." They sang this very feelingly and then father joined in on the chorus. This was followed by "Mother Machree" and others of like sentiment on songs about mother—how true they were, how dear and how they loved to sing them.

Then, as Mrs. Jones hadn't appeared yet, Mr. Smith inquired about her state of health.

"Oh," said Mr. Jones, "she's well enough. She's in the kitchen doing the dishes, but after she has finished and has taken in the wood she'll join us."—Judge.

First Choice.

Alice is an eight-year-old youngster from the southern part of the state and her uncle recently brought her to the capital to see the monument, and other places of interest. The morning after his arrival he took her down to the office of a friend, and introduced her around. "So you came to see Indianapolis," remarked one of the men. "I suppose you're anxious to begin. Which do you want most to see—the state house or the monument?"

Alice looked at him and then spoke truthfully, "Oh, I want to see both of them," she told him, "but most of all I want to go to one of those stores where you get an ice cream sandwich for a nickel."—Indianapolis News.

Miserable Anyway.

"I am telling you the truth when I say that I was much happier when I was poor than I am now."

"Then why don't you let your millions go and be poor again?"

"Why, because I should be miserable thinking of the people who got the money."

There is one good feature about breaking up housekeeping; it enables people to get rid of their old furniture.

To Abolish Tomorrow.

A movement to abolish tomorrow is now in order. Among all the things that cause trouble to humanity in general, tomorrow is probably the worst offender.

Nothing happens tomorrow in just the way we expect, and in most cases dread. The time we spend in wondering what tomorrow will do, and in worrying about it in advance, if applied today would fortify us against the unexpected more than anything else. LIVE STOCK CONSTANTLY SUBJECT TO POISONING BY DIFFERENT LOCO WEEDS

Animal in Last Throes of Loco Poisoning.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Range live stock in large areas of the western states is constantly subject to poisoning by loco weeds which, if eaten freely, cause symptoms of madness or insanity, and, eventually, death. The danger is especially great when green grass is short and the animals are obliged to rely on weeds and bushes for food. To assist stockmen in preventing losses from loco poisoning, investigations have been made to combat the danger and numerous facts of value have been obtained.

There are three poisonous locoes—purple loco, white loco and the blue loco or "rattleweed" of Arizona and New Mexico.

Different Loco Weeds.

The purple loco weed is a perennial which grows in patches on adobe soils, attaining a height of two feet, and generally occupying a space of about two feet in diameter. Its flowers are rather inconspicuous, being deep purple in color. It is sometimes called "woolly" loco, because its leaflets are densely covered with hairs. It occurs as far north as South Dakota, as far south as Mexico, as far west as Arizona, while its eastern limit is central Kansas and Nebraska.

The white loco, familiar in Wyoming, Montana and Colorado, is called the "stemless loco," because it has no true stem. Its habitat is from Alaska to Mexico, as far east as central Minnesota, and as far west as central Utah and Arizona. It grows abundantly on sandy soils, and in parts of Colorado, Wyoming and Montana at this weed's blossoming time large areas are as white as though covered with snow.

The blue loco of Arizona, New Mexico, and parts of Colorado, Utah, and California, grows abundantly, appearing in some localities early in February and maturing and drying up early in the summer. This plant is poisonous to cattle and sheep, but is especially injurious to horses. Misconception has confused with the locoes several leguminous plants which are either harmless or valuable as forage crops. However, there are only three true loco varieties.

Purple Loco Kills Horses.

The purple loco weed is rarely injurious to cattle, but it is very harmful to horses. However, the horses will not eat this weed unless forced to it to prevent starvation. On the other hand, horses, cattle and sheep will eat white loco weed readily, particularly when grass is scarce. During the spring before the grass starts where the white loco weed is abundant, practically all animals eat some of it. When grass is plentiful later on most animals taboo the loco, but some of them have acquired a taste for the weed and gradually eat more and more of it. Finally they become confirmed addicts to the loco habit, which ultimately results in their death. Sheep, also, are poisoned in much the same way as horses and cattle, the effect of the drug being particularly noticeable on lambs, as frequently they die within two weeks after they begin to eat the weed, and without any marked loss of flesh. Under similar conditions of short feed the blue loco weed is eaten late in the winter. Because of its great poisonous effect on horses great damage may be done in a very short time, more quickly than in the case of the other loco plants.

As a rule the "native breeds" of live stock are much less likely to be locoed than imported animals not familiar with the plants, and which in many cases do not have the habit of "rustling," so that they are inclined to eat the feed which is most easily obtained. Generally speaking, the finer breeds of cattle and horses are more likely to be locoed than the poorer breeds. The same thing applies to sheep, it being particularly noticeable that the black faces are much more susceptible than are the Merinos.

Symptoms of Loco Poisoning.

Loco poisoning in horses is first indicated by a change in the general condition of the animal, a high-spirited horse becoming dull, and later on developing irregularity in its gait and mode of eating. The horse drags its feet and shows signs of loss of normal muscular control. As the disease progresses the animal shuns the company of its mates and seems to lose very largely its nervous sensibility. It is dangerous to ride or drive such a horse as the animal shies at imaginary objects and is not sure on its feet. In the later stages of the disease the animal loses flesh, its coat becomes rough, and eventually it ceases to eat and dies.

Similar symptoms obtain in the case of locoed cattle, the same lack of muscular control being evidenced, the animal shaking and trembling and perhaps rearing and jumping backward when suddenly alarmed. A badly locoed steer shows a violently shaking head, particularly after it has become heated, and sometimes becomes frantic and runs into obstructions in an utterly unreasonable way. Locoed cattle gradually lose flesh, have staring eyes, rough coats, go to water less and less frequently, and eventually die of starvation.

The symptoms of sheep poisoning are not so marked as those in horses and cattle, the lack of muscular control not being so noticeable. However, locoed sheep soon develop weakness and stumble and fall about and rise again only with great difficulty. There is some confusion between this condition and "grub in the head," and at times it is difficult to distinguish between sheep affected by the grub of the sheep gadfly and those poisoned by loco weeds.

Can Cure Valuable Animals.

Most locoed animals can be cured, but they should be worth enough to warrant a somewhat extended course of treatment. The first and most important need is to supply them with plenty of nutritious feed, such as alfalfa, grain or meal, and proper pasturage, so that they will not be obliged to resort to loco weed for food. Medical treatment, such as is outlined fully in Farmers' Bulletin 1054, recently issued by the United States department of agriculture, should be followed. Rapid recoveries can hardly be expected, as the condition existing in a case of chronic loco poisoning has been developed by weeks or months of loco feeding, which means that the rate of recovery must necessarily be slow. However, where the animals are treated carefully and conscientiously along lines suggested by the United States department of agriculture, much valuable range stock may be saved.

Loco poisoning can be largely prevented by proper handling of live stock. As the stock commonly contract the habit of loco feeding in times of short feed, stockmen should provide plenty of good hay at such periods. On some ranges the loco weeds have a definitely limited distribution and in such cases, if animals are kept away from the infested areas until the grass is started, few become locoed.

Kill Out Loco Weeds.

It is relatively simple to clear out the loco plant by cutting the roots for two to three inches below the surface. However, as the seeds of loco plants live for years and do not germinate in the season following their growth, it is necessary to continue the extermination work for several seasons after the original plants have been killed. Many stockmen believe it is necessary to remove all of the loco roots in order to control the pest, but this is erroneous. Badly infested tracts of land have been cleared under the direction of the United States department of agriculture, and in many of these pastures kept under observation for ten years very few loco plants have appeared. One ranchman in New Mexico reports the cleaning up of an 80-acre pasture and later on a pasture of eight sections where previously the weed had covered one-fourth of the total area. Although this work cost $3 an acre, it has been money well spent, as practically no trouble from loco weed has since developed.

The Effects of Opiates.

THAT INFANTS are peculiarly susceptible to opium and its various preparations, all of which are narcotic, is well known. Even in the smallest doses, if continued, these opiates cause changes in the functions and growth of the cells which are likely to become permanent, causing imbecility, mental perversion, a craving for alcohol or narcotics in later life. Nervous diseases, such as intractable nervous dyspepsia and lack of staying powers are a result of dosing with opiates or narcotics to keep children quiet in their infancy. The rule among physicians is that children should never receive opiates in the smallest doses for more than a day at a time, and only then if unavoidable.

The administration of Anodynes, Drops, Cordials, Soothing Syrups and other narcotics to children by any but a physician cannot be too strongly decried, and the druggist should not be a party to it. Children who are ill need the attention of a physician, and it is nothing less than a crime to dose them willfully with narcotics.

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies. This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. WILSON INVADES HOUSE OF FOES

CARRIES HIS BATTLE FOR LEAGUE OF NATIONS INTO HOME OF HIS ENEMIES.

GIVES COST OF GREAT WAR

Informs Them of Lives and Treasure Poured Out to Save Civilization.

(By Mt. Clemens News Bureau)

Aboard President Wilson's Special train—Carrying his war against those who oppose the adoption by the United States of the peace treaty and the covenant of the League of Nations into their households, President Wilson last week invaded California.

And there, where the question on which league opponents have hammered the hardest, that of Shan Tung—is of most interest, the president found the same enthusiasm among the people for peace and for insurance against future wars. The people want the long controversy ended. They want this country to be able to again turn its undivided attention to social, economic and industrial development. Their leaders may not feel this way, but judging from the expressions which met the president on every side. The leaders have overstepped the limits of the peoples patience in their stubborn determination to force a change in the great document.

Must Take This League.

"We must take this League of Nations," said the president, "for there is no way in which another can be obtained without compelling reconsideration by the powers. And it would sit very ill upon my stomach to take it back to Germany for consideration."

"All over the world people are looking to us with confidence our rivals along with the weaker nations. I pray God that the gentlemen who are delaying this thing may presently see it in a different light."

Germany, the president declared, is taking new courage from our delay in ratifying the treaty and her newspapers and public men were again becoming arrogantly out-spoken.

Deeply impressive were the figures of the cost of the late war, in lives and dollars. It was the first time that the official statistics have been made public and the tremendous totals shocked the president's audiences.

Shows Cost of World War.

"The war," said President Wilson, cost Great Britain and and her Domains $38,000,000,000; France $26,000,000,000; the United States $22,000,000,000; Russia $18,000,000,000; Italy $13,000,000,000 and a total, including the expenditures of Japan, Belgium and other small countries, of $123,000,000,000.

"It cost the Central Powers as follows: Germany $39,000,000,000; Austria-Hungary, $21,000,000,000; Turkey and Bulgaria $3,000,000,000.

"The United States," the president said, "spent one million dollars an hour night and day for two years in its struggle to save civilization. All this, however, fades into insignificance when the deaths by battle are considered," declared the president. Russia gave 1,700,000 men; Germany 1,800,000; France 1,380,000; Great Britain 900,000; Italy 364,000; the United States 50,300. In all, almost 7,500,000 men perished in the great struggle, or 1,500,000 more men than died in all of the wars of the previous 100 years.

Should Remember Recent Horrors.

"These are terrible facts, and we ought never to forget them. We went into this war to do a thing that was fundamental for the world and what I have come out on this journey for is to determine whether the country has forgotten or not. I have found out. The country has not forgotten and it will never permit any who stands in the way of the fulfillment of our great pledges, ever to forget the sorrowful day he made the attempt."

Arbitration and discussion, the president pointed out, must replace force of arms in the settlement of world controversies. Constantly he dwells upon the fact that all the nations in the League agree to do one of two things, first to submit their differences to arbitration, in which case they agree to abide by the decision rendered, or, if unwilling to arbitrate, to have their case discussed by the Council of the League, in which case six months is granted for discussion. Three months must elapse following the result of this last step in arbitration before the nation concerned can declare war.

Holds Out Hope for Ireland.

The president took advantage of questions propounded by the San Francisco Labor Council to give the inference that he believes Ireland can bring her case before the League of Nations for settlement when the League is actually in existence.

Shan Tung, he declared, will be returned to China. Japan, he said, had given her solemn pledge to that effect. And with the League of Nations in force, said the president, we can, if occasion arises, stand forth and say, "This shall be done."

FACTS ON CASHING WAR SAVINGS STAMPS

Government Always Ready to Redeem Them With Interest, but It Means a Loss in the Earning Rate.

A considerable number of War Savings stamps are being cashed in Indiana. There is nothing alarming or illegal about this. The government intended that the small savings represented by War Savings stamps should be available in an emergency.

But the War Savings organization for Indiana points out that there is another aspect to be considered. Cashing War Savings stamps before the date of maturity or selling them to a scalper below par represents avoidable loss, thus defeating the very object of the stamps—the practice of thrift.

War Savings stamps held to maturity yield 4 per cent interest, compounded quarterly; if cashed before maturity the interest amounts to only 3 per cent. Selling to scalpers represents a still greater loss.

Every effort is being made by the government this year to inject a little of real joy into thrift. Under stress of war this perhaps was overlooked. War Savings workers were carried away with their enthusiasm. Methods of campaigning in some districts probably resulted in some persons becoming unwilling buyers of stamps. The government wants no unwilling buyers, nor does it want unwilling holders of stamps.

Many of those who have been cashing stamps at this time may be classed as unwilling holders. Means adopted in some quarters to induce these to retain their stamps have created a panicky feeling among other holders. Many rushed to the post offices to give their ten days' notice. With those who met with no "strong-arm" methods to prevent the cashing of stamps confidence was restored and the next day they promptly forgot about having given notice.

Every applicant for redemption now receives the following letter from the postmaster:

"Your application has been placed on file, and your money will be ready for you in cash ten days after the date of your application provided your stamps are properly affixed to a War Savings certificate issued in your name.

"You will receive more cash than you originally paid for any stamp which you have held more than one month. These stamps of course earn interest. They, therefore, increase in value month by month. In five years, stamps costing from $4.12 to $4.23 are worth $5. In other words, the money invested in each stamp earns from 77 cents to 88 cents, or interest at more than 4 per cent per annum.

"Do you know, however, that you do not have to take cash for all of the War Savings samps on your certificate?

"Possibly at this time you do not need all of your cash that is invested in stamps. In that case I will be glad to give you cash for any part of them that you wish to turn into money and give you the balance in 1919 War Savings and Thrift stamps.

"On the other hand, if you have need at this time for all of the cash you have invested in stamps, the government is glad to return it to you, regretting of course that circumstances compel you to lose the good rate of interest which your money would earn during the next few months or years.

"Doubtless, when your present emergency is passed, you will begin to save again and will want to buy more Thrift stamps and War Savings stamps. It will be a keen personal pleasure to me to serve you in this respect."

The New Tax Levies.

The tax levies for DeKalb county under the new tax law, were completed today by the State Board of Tax Commissioners. The complete list of levies for the county, compared with the levies for last year is as follows:

Butler	$ 71	$2 12
Jackson	78	2 69
Concord	71	2 41
Spencer	76	2 35
Newville	60	2 21

Corunna	1 32	2 95
Altona (town)	1 34	3 54

The new levies are inclusive of all taxes, except the state tax rate, which cannot be announced before next week. It will be greatly reduced.

The assessments were made some time ago. With the tax rate announced, each tax payer will now be able to determine the affect of the new tax system in his own case.

In counties previously announced, it has been found that the amount of taxes paid by many people will be less than under the old tax rates, notwithstanding the extraordinary costs of the war period and the extensive public improvements, such as road building and increased cost of schools. The Tax Commissioners attribute such results to a fuller listing of taxables, to the inclusion of great amounts of intangibles that hitherto evaded assessment successfully, and to a more even and just distribution of the tax burden.

Milton Krise Died Sunday

Sick only a week, and apparently in a serious condition only a few days, Milton T. Krise, of Auburn, 38 years old, died Sunday morning at 3 o'clock from a complication of diseases and acute stomach trouble. He was taken to the Sacred Heart hospital Saturday afternoon when it was seen his condition was rapidly growing worse but even a few hours before he passed away, it was not known that the end was so near.

The deceased was a brother of Charles Krise of Auburn, and was well known in the county and in the vicinity of Concord, where he was born and raised. Milton Thomas Krise was born April 5, 1881. He attended school near Concord and St. Joe and in his early life followed the pursuits of a farmer. He was employed at the Double Fabric Tire company at the time he was taken sick.

He was united in marriage to Hazel G. Nimmons but she preceded him in death eight years ago. He is survived by his brother, Charles, of Auburn; Mrs. C. O. Metcalf of Moore and Howard, of Concord. The body was taken to the home of his brother, Charles Krise and from there short services were held Tuesday. The funeral party left the home at 1:30 for Mount Pleasant church, east of Auburn, where the funeral was held.

Rev. Samuel Hill, a former pastor of the deceased, of Ashland, officiated and burial was made on the family lot in Mount Pleasant cemetery.

Grandma Scholes Dead.

Mrs. Nelson Scholes passed away at the home of her son Frank, in the west end of town. She had been ill since Saturday but had improved some at the last call of the doctor until about two o'clock Wednesday morning she was taken worse and passed away before the doctor arrived. She has been able to be about most of the time up to the last year her health was broken by a stroke of paralysis. The funeral services will be held from the St. Joe Christian Church Friday afternoon at one o'clock.

Left Without Any Cause.

Chas. Argubright left town Monday evening on No. 6, east bound for somewhere but no one knows where. He drove to town Monday evening and put his horse in the Koch livery barn. It was not discovered that he had left until morning when he failed to show up for the rig. Just why he left is not known. One of his boy chums believe that he might be located at Jackson, Michigan, but as yet no word has been received in response to the word sent out by his parents.

FASHIONS IN FURS FOR FALL-WINTER

Peltry of Every Conceivable Variety Is to Be Much in Evidence.

STRIPE IS VERY DESIRABLE

Borders and Bands of Rich Color in Contrasting Arrangements Are Used—New Shades for Fall.

A poor excuse is better than none, and so milady will comfort her conscience as she digs deep in her pocketbook and purchases one of the fur wraps of the new season with the fact that a cloth suit or coat would cost in some cases almost as much, writes a prominent fashion correspondent.

In truth furs are proportionately about as expensive and the only reason that there is anything within reach is that every conceivable fur is in fashion.

Paris has been astonishingly catholic in this respect of late and under the exigency of the times admitted to the list of possible furs such lesser pelts as Mongolian goat, rabbit, coney,

Taupe divet de laine suit trimmed with embroidery of the same color and taupe raccoon. Hat is of clipped beaver; pheasant tail decoration hangs down.

Manchurian dog and even ordinary house rat. As the scarcity of furs continued through last winter old furs were dragged out of the moth ball closet and worn until there was not a fur left that might not be seen on the streets of Paris.

Fortunately this brought every fur into play, for just imagine the prices if only two or three furs had happened to be in fashion, as in some seasons past.

This is not to say that there are not favorite furs this year, too, but because some of the less expensive furs are in better standing than usual is not an indication that sable, ermine or any of the furs that are always high in price are out of it. Indeed, it is not so much a question of the kind of fur as the manner in which it is made up and the color. Gray furs, squirrel and chinchilla are a shade more in demand than those in other tones.

Tails as a Decoration.

Again, it may be merely a matter of tails, and the wrap or fur piece that can count the most tails is easily the winner.

Probably the rage for tails is traceable to the rage for fringe and any and everything that dangles with every motion of the wearer. Seldom are the tails placed anywhere near the spot nature intended them to be. Placed close enough together to form a semblance of fringe is the approved method, but as this is decidedly expensive the close formation in short spaces is sometimes seen.

The dolman, more in evidence here than abroad, is very apt to show a long fringe of tails that runs from the wrist straight down under the arms to the bottom of the hem, otherwise it may run down the sides and around the back or around the bottom without any at the sleeves.

It is seen used in two ways about the bottom, either placed at the top of the hem falling on top of the fur or about the lower edge and hanging free. An ermine evening wrap by an American house has a tail fringe all above the hem, the little dark tails placed very close and showing up well against the white fur. The sleeves of this wrap are wide and floppy, being supplied with a separate elongated flap like a cape, and the collar, very strangely, is of silver fox.

Stripes Are in Evidence.

Stripes, so very well liked in frocks and suits, find reflection in the furs in the arrangement of the markings, so any fur that has by nature a dark stripe is very desirable for the large wraps that are so frequent.

For this purpose chinchilla and mink are immensely popular and the things that the designers do with the pelts are extraordinary.

On a wrap of mink for evening or afternoon wear the stripes run up and down for the major portion, but a wide band of the fur with the stripes running in the opposite direction is mitred in the front corners and crosses the back at the bottom. The collar on this wrap, which is typically French, is very large and falls over the shoulders and half way down the arms bordered with a horizontal band of mink, bringing the line straight across the figure.

The Parisian with her short skirts wears these all enveloping wraps exceedingly well. Exactly the length of the skirt underneath, the wrap still escapes being cumbersome, particularly as the cut is most apt to be straight and the sleeves rudimentary. Either slits in a cape or very short sleeves in the coats are seen.

Neither American makers nor buyers abroad favor the short sleeves in furs, so the coatees and coats on this side are all offered with regulation sleeves.

Large Collars and Cuffs.

Large collars and cuffs of the longer haired pelts are a feature of many fall suits. Skunk, fox and pointed fox are used and the collars are cut high, giving a luxurious air to the suit. When the use of bands and large pockets is noted it is usually in close fur, as seal, squirrel or beaver. A suit of French blue velours is fashioned with flaring lines from the waist and a vest and high rolling chin collar of squirrel fur. The fur is arranged so that the stripes run horizontally across the front of the vest. The simple tailored suit without a belt and trimmed with large collar and cuffs of fur is sure to be one of the smartest features of the fall openings.

Pervenche is one of the new shades that have been captured for the fall. It is named for the little French flower by that name, which we see once in a while in an old garden in this country under the name of myrtle. It is a shade of lavender which just escapes coming under the head of blue.

Many Browns and Tans.

Duvetyn is not considered as smart as velvet for the fall or winter hat. Also one will note when scanning the collection in the best shops that there are almost no dark blue hats, but quantities of all shades of browns and tans, while feathers are greatly in the majority as trimming. Velvet shirred and plaited very closely and very cleverly handled is sufficient to distinguish some of the very high-priced models.

Two new sport hats of special interest are masterpieces in handwork and Striking and beautiful combination of moleskin and squirrel is this extremely modish winter creation. The hat is of gray velvet with rose brocaded silk.

in very different ways. All the vivid colors are used in floss in a turban-shaped affair, and that each shade loses none of its value it is embroidered in a more or less irregular fan shape all by itself and not intermixed with any other color. This hat is also suitable for wear with a strictly tailor-made suit.

EXTREME CARE SHOULD BE EXERCISED IN TRANSPORTATION OF VALUABLE DAIRY COWS

Treat Bossy Kindly and With Consideration When She Travels.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Each fall and spring there is normally a heavy movement of springer or fresh cows from the city markets and from dairy-breeding regions to the milk-producing sections of the country. Many commercial dairies do not raise new recruits for their herds, but simply make a practice of milking out fresh cows and then disposing of the dry animals as beef and purchasing more cows which have just calved. Dairy farmers, also, in order to maintain their production of milk at a normal point throughout the year, often have to purchase fresh cows or near springers at a time when most of the producers in their herds are dry. All dairymen who purchase cows are urged to exercise every effort to expedite the railroad movement of the dairy matrons during their time in transit and to provide all possible comfort for the animals en route. Careful management will reduce mortality and will increase production over the flow from the average cow carelessly "railroaded."

Valuable Animals by Express.

Valuable pure-bred cows usually should be handled by express service, as their increased worth for breeding purposes over that of grade animals, which are usually handled by freight service, justifies the additional expenditure for a rapid trip from the point of loading to destination. Expressage usually costs four or five times as much as movement by freight, but in the case of particularly valuable cows the saving in animal comfort, the shorter time in transit and the better conveniences for feeding and watering the animals, make the added expenditure advisable. In case pure-bred animals cannot be handled by express, they should be loaded according to the special system discussed in this article. As far as possible, dairy cows should be shipped one or two months before they are due to freshen, as repeatedly fresh cows have been ruined, so far as the subsequent lactation period has been concerned, as a result of being shipped shortly before freshening or so as to calve in transit.

Heifers Make Good "Buys."

Milch cows of grade breeding ordinarily are shipped by freight, dry cows and far springers being most desirable for long shipments. Heifers which are not due to freshen until three to four weeks after arrival at destination make good "buys," as they are of a size and condition which permits of loading the car to capacity. Furthermore, immature animals are less susceptible to injury in transit and to damage as a result of change of environment. So far as possible, animals without horns should be shipped, and where it is necessary to carry any horned animals in railroad cars they should be penned apart or tied securely at one end of the car, so that they cannot injure any of their traveling mates. Where bulls are shipped in mixed carloads, these sires should be confined in pens apart from the other cattle.

Other conditions being equal, it is recommended by specialists that about 14 mature cows be loaded in a 33 or 40 foot car. A practical arrangement is to tie four cows in each end of the car, facing the end walls, and rough partitions can be installed so that two other rows of three cows each face a center alleyway between the car doors, where the attendant can stay and extra feed and water can be carried. This arrangement is most comfortable for the cows, as they ride and absorb the shock and jar better, while it also facilitates the operations of the caretaker in feeding the cows and cleaning the car.

Watch the Weather.

It is preferable to move the cows during cold weather, as hot weather and close confinement in the car are hard on the milk producers. Care must be exercised, however, not to expose the cows needlessly during very cold weather, owing to danger of their contracting pneumonia. Cows which have been accustomed to warm, well-ventilated stables suffer during the railroad trip unless the car is properly loaded and provision made for a frequent change of air. At best it takes an animal about a year to become thoroughly acclimated to a warmer or colder climate than that to which it has been accustomed, and on this account the movement should take place at a time of year when the temperature at the two points is as nearly equal as possible.

Dairy animals—although they require neither petting nor pampering—should be handled under normal conditions before and during the railroad trip. The cows should be fed and watered at regular intervals, and if any of the animals are in milk they should be milked according to regular schedule. It pays to feed grain and hay during a long shipment where the cows are accustomed to these feeds. It is difficult to feed grain in a freight car where no special provisions are made to prevent wastage, as a result of the tendency of the animals to move about where they are not held securely in place. However, on long trips grain can be carried in the car and fed at all points where the stock is unloaded. A competent attendant should always accompany the dairy cows; he should ride in the car with the stock, as often he can avert injury to the animals by prompt action in case one of them gets down or otherwise gets into trouble.

Water Supply Important.

Several large barrels of water, as well as plenty of feed, should be carried in the car as insurance against delay or accident which may detain the train to the extent that without this feed the animals might go hungry or thirsty far beyond the 36-hour limit. Sand is one of the best bedding materials, and during long trips fresh supplies of it should be placed in the car at unloading points whenever they are needed.

STRAW IS EXCELLENT ROUGHAGE FOR STOCK

By-Product Should Never Be Burned or Wasted.

Besides Furnishing Good Feed It Can Be Used for Bedding to Save Large Part of Valuable Liquid Manure for Fertilizer.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Threshing should not be attempted when wheat or straw is wet or tough, as good results cannot then be obtained. Wheat can dry out much better in the head than after being threshed. If threshed wet and marketed immediately it is discounted heavily in price; if placed in a bin it is likely to become hot and badly damaged.

The wheat straw may be stacked in the open, stored in the mow, or spread at once over the field. When the price is good it may be sold. It should never be burned. Straw furnishes excellent roughage for live stock, while by using it for bedding in stalls a large part of the valuable liquid manure can be preserved. Rotted straw from an old straw pile or from straw spread directly on the field makes good manure, as each thousand pounds of straw contains on the average about eight pounds of potassium, five pounds of nitrogen, and smaller amounts of other important plant foods. A thousand pounds of wheat grain removes on the average about twenty pounds of nitrogen and about three and one-half pounds each of potassium and phosphorus.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Overgrazing will ruin the best of pastures.

* * *

Don't feed moldy silage to horses or sheep. Deaths will result.

* * *

The fewer sows kept together during the breeding season and until farrowing time the better.

* * *

Any type of good silo is a valuable adjunct to the farm equipment where there is live stock to feed.

* * *

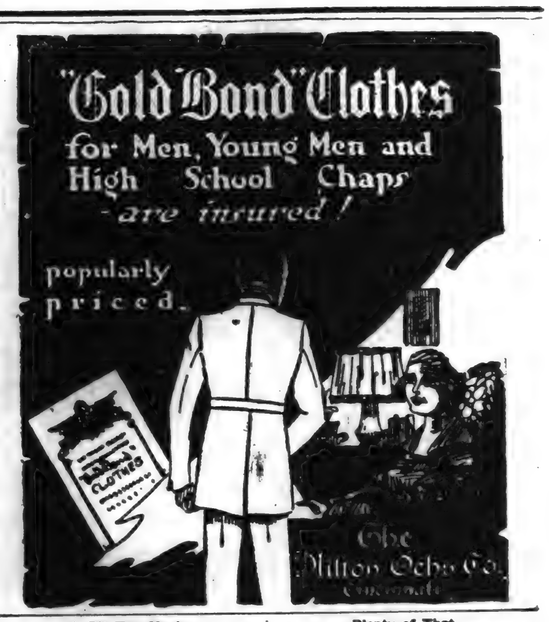
All of the young animals raised this year should have a fair chance to make a profit on the farm. Much will depend upon the number and kind.

* * *

Much money is wasted every year by inefficient use of horse labor. Many farms have too few horses in proportion to the men on the farm.

* * *

When the horse comes in after work, sponge off the harness marks and sweat, his eyes, his nose and mouth, and the dock. Wash his feet but not his legs.



A Bit Too Much.

During a concert in a Scottish hall the official who was collecting tickets at the door sought out the caretaker.

"Ca' canny, mon, or ye'll be haein' trouble," he whispered mysteriously.

"Beegamy—no less!" was the ticket collector's awed reply. "I've let in twa wimmin who said that they wis the caretaker's wife, and noo there's a third yin wantin' to come in."

Encouraging Bolshevism

Everything that falsely encourages unrest also encourages bolshevism.

Misunderstanding of American industrial organization, and of its benefits to mankind, leads to unrest, dissatisfaction, and radicalism.

For example, the Federal Trade Commission tells the public that the large packers had an agreed price for lard substitute (made of cotton-seed oil.)

It reproduces letters taken from the files of one of the packers, showing that such agreed price existed.

But it failed to mention that the agreed price was determined at the request of and in co-operation with the Food Administration!

Even the Department of Justice, in its unjust attempt to create prejudice against the packers, has made public these same letters, with no explanation.

How long must this kind of misrepresentation continue? In so far as it is believed, it not only breeds discontent, but results in injustice to our industry.

Was Laid Up In Bed

Doan's, However, Restored Mrs. Vogt to Health and Strength. Hasn't Suffered Since.

"I had one of the worst cases of kidney complaint imaginable," says Mrs. Wm. Vogt, 6218 Audrey Ave., Wellston, Mo., "and I was laid up in bed for days at a time.

MRS. VOGT.

"My bladder was inflamed and the kidney secretions caused terrible pain. My back was in such bad shape that when I moved the pains were like a knife-thrust. I got so dizzy I couldn't stoop and my head just throbbed with pain. Beads of perspiration would stand on my temples. then I would become cold and numb. My heart action was affected and I felt as if I couldn't take another breath. I got so nervous and run down, I felt life wasn't worth living and often wished that I might die so my suffering would be ended. Medicine failed to help me and I was discouraged.

"Doan's Kidney Pills were recommended to me and I could tell I was being helped after the first few doses. I kept getting better every day and continued use cured me. My health improved in every way and best of all, the cure has been permanent. I feel that Doan's saved my life." Sworn to before me. HENRY B. SURKAMP, Notary Public.

THE "BLUES"

Caused by

Acid-Stomach

Millions of people who worry, are despondent, have spells of mental depression, feel blue and are often melancholy, believe that these conditions are due to outside influences over which they have little or no control. Nearly always, however, they can be traced to an internal source—acid-stomach. Nor is it to be wondered at. Acid-stomach, beginning with such well defined symptoms as indigestion, belching, heartburn, bloat, etc., will, if not checked, in time affect to some degree or other all the vital organs. The nervous system becomes deranged. Digestion suffers. The blood is impoverished. Health and strength are undermined. The victim of acid-stomach, although he may not know the cause of his ailments, feels his hope, courage, ambition and energy slipping. And truly life is dark—not worth much to the man or woman who has acid-stomach!

Get rid of it! Don't let acid-stomach hold you back, wreck your health, make your days miserable, make you a victim of the "blues" and gloomy thoughts! There's a marvelous modern remedy called EATONIC that brings, oh! such quick relief from your stomach miseries—sets your stomach to rights—makes it strong, cool, sweet and comfortable. Indiana News Tersely Told

Indianapolis. — Announcement was made at the headquarters of the Indiana Federation of Farmers' Association in this city that the farmers of Wabash county have affiliated with the state organization, thereby bringing the total number of organized counties up to 45.

Huntington.—The first large farm deal, in which the price reached $300 an acre, was made here, when Fred N. Michaels of North Manchester, formerly of Benton county, sold a 160-acre tract in Huntington county to Frank E. Scott for $48,000. Michaels bought the farm, known as the T. B. Corah farm, less than a year ago from E. E. Souers for $32,000, or $200 an acre.

Anderson.—Retail prices for milk have been increased to 14 cents a quart in Anderson, and creamery butter has been advanced from 65 cents to 70 cents a pound. Retailers of butter said that creameries fixed the price of butter, and, in explanation, a local creamery said that higher prices for milk and butter are imperative if the creamery is continued in operation on acount of the demand for milk.

Gary.—Investigation of the report that a large number of foreigners have been drawing their money from the Gary banks and sending it to their native countries, reveals that since the steel strike began, more than $700,000 has been taken from the eight banks of Gary and postal savings here. These savings were drawn for the most part by Roumanians and Serbians, and of the total, more than $300,000 has been drawn from the postal savings.

Columbus. — The Garland Brook Cemetery association has brought suit against Rudolph Schneir and wife to fix a price on 117 acres of land, which the association wishes to buy to enlarge its burying ground. Witnesses for the defense have testified that the land in question, which is near Columbus, is worth from $1,000 to $1,200 an acre. Circuit court appraisers some time ago rated the land at $500 an acre.

Columbus.—A movement started several weeks ago by the commissioners of Bartholomew county to test the constitutionality of the part of the new tax law that empowers the state board of tax commissioners to grant or refuse authority to issue bonds for public improvements, resulted in an order by the commissioners of the sale of $68,500 worth of bonds for the construction of the Nentrup road in this city after the tax board had refused to authorize the bonds.

Gosport.—Designation of the point north of Gosport which formerly was the north boundary of Indiana has been made by a marker. The point was specified in a treaty of 1809 signed with the Indians at Fort Wayne, and the line which crosses the highway is popularly known as the ten o'clock line because it is supposed to represent the line a shadow thrown at ten o'clock by the sun would make. The survey which included the point started not far from Lawrenceburg on the Ohio river and crossed the Wabash in the vicinity of Terre Haute.

Lafayette.—Announcement has been made at Purdue university that Clarence Ousley, assistant secretary of agriculture; Dean Eugene Davenport of the Illinois College of Agriculture; John G. Brown, president of the Indiana Federation of Farmers' Associations; J. R. Howard, president of the Iowa Farmers' organization, and G. I. Christie, state food director, will be among the principal speakers at the twenty-second annual conference of agricultural extension workers at Purdue October 14 to 17. The conference will be attended by all Indiana county agents, home demonstration agents, farmers' institute speakers and other agricultural extension workers, besides leaders of the farmers' organization.

Indianapolis.—According to the bureau of markets of the United States department of agriculture receipts of apples in Indianapolis in 1918 were 614 cars and shipments of apples from Indiana were 115 cars. During the year this city received apples from 22 states principally from New York, as follows: Alabama, 4 cars; Arkansas, 4 cars; California, 17 cars; Delaware, 1 car; Idaho, 14 cars; Illinois, 37 cars; Indiana, 53 cars; Kentucky, 1 car; Maryland, 7 cars; Michigan, 79 cars; Missouri, 13 cars; New Hampshire, 4 cars; New York, 886 cars; Ohio, 33 cars; Oregon, 7 cars; Pennsylvania, 8 cars; Tennessee, 29 cars; Utah, 30 cars; Virginia, 11 cars; Washington, 89 cars; West Virginia, 6 cars; various, 1 car. Apples produced in Indiana were shipped to various other cities as follows: Cincinnati, 25 cars; Cleveland, 3 cars; Indianapolis, 53 cars; Memphis, 5 cars; New York, 15 cars; Pittsburgh, 2 cars; Chicago, 12 cars.

Indianapolis. — Approximately $1,500,000 is the value placed by Harry Miesse, secretary of the Patriotic Gardeners' association, on foodstuffs raised in home gardens in Indianapolis in 1919. In 1918, the value of the produce raised in the gardens was estimated at $1,837,166. The home garden work has done much to keep down the price of foodstuffs in this locality. Indianapolis policemen are canvassing the city in an effort to learn the exact number of gardens. Secretary Miesse said the damage caused by the dry weather will be offset by increased value of the produce.

Jeffersonville.—Sale of groceries began at the retail store at the army quartermaster's depot on first receipts of the 200 carloads of food assigned to this district, which includes the southern half of Indiana and all of Kentucky.

Evansville. — Eighteen prominent citizens of Evansville have been sued in the Vanderburg county circuit court for delinquency on their subscriptions to the patriot fund. The patriot fund was organized during the war to take care of the Red Cross and all other activities and the men who subscribed to the fund agreed to pay so much monthly for the duration of the war.

Fort Wayne.—The annual convention of the Indiana Baptists will be held here October 14-16, and arrangements are being made for the entertainment of 600 visitors. Indiana's part in the raising by the Baptists of the $100,000,000 fund for the extension of missionary work and $1,205,000 for the enlargement and endowment of Franklin college at Franklin will be considered.

Princeton.—The Posey-Gibson Cow Testing association, co-operating with the dairy extension department of Purdue university, is taking pride in the butterfat production of Plymouth Pedro's Jovial, a Jersey cow owned by Thad Nash of this city. Jovial made 74.7 butterfat pounds in August, leading the state. Last month she produced 59.7 pounds, the best mark made in the two counties.

Lafayette.—In a letter to members of the Indiana Corn Growers' secretary, suggests that each one should select corn in January, but also for the national hay and grain show which will be held at Chicago, November 29 to December 6, in connection with the international live stock exposition. For a number of years growers from Indiana have won the highest honors at the national corn shows. P. J. Lux of Shelby county won last year.

Valparaiso.—The cost of clothing for senior high school pupils will be lowered here if the boys stand by a resolution passed unanimously by the class at a called meeting. Corduroy trousers and blue chambray shirts will be the class attire until the cost of living decreases, according to the resolution. Regulation dress among the girls was suggested by teachers, but the girls have thus far declined to vote in favor.

Michigan City.—Robert VanAtta, sitting as special judge in the superior court, ruled in favor of the petitioners in the Tuesberg ditch case. The court held the law to be with the petitioners and ordered the ditch built. The ditch will cost $1,000,000 and is said to be the largest drainage project ever undertaken in the state. The case has been fought in the courts for four years. It is understood the remonstrators will appeal to the state supreme court.

Sullivan.—Richard Park, Sullivan county superintendent of schools, has filed with Frank M. Daniels, county auditor, a petition bearing the names of 643 freeholders of Sullivan county, the trustees of every township in the county, all the teachers in the county schools, together with recommendations as to ability and work performed of L. N. Hines, state superintendent, and five former state superintendents of Indiana, asking for an increase of $1,000 in salary under the new act of legislature.

Indianapolis.—L. N. Hines, state superintendent of public instruction, has issued a statement to county and city school superintendents in which he points out the following holidays to be observed in the schools: October 24, Americanization day; November 3-7, Better American Speech week; November 26, Constitution day; November 27, Thanksgiving day; December 25, Christmas day; January 1, New Year's day; February 12, Lincoln's birthday; February 22, Washington's birthday; April 19, Arbor day; May 30, Memorial day.

Indianapolis.—Indiana was asked the past week by Stanley Wyckoff, who is in charge of sugar distribution in the state, to cut its consumption of sugar in half, in order that the small amount now being received may help tide the state over until beet sugar is received late in the month. Arrangements were being made to get part supplies to as many of the state institutions as possible, and at the same time, Maurice C. Shelton, secretary of the state joint purchasing committee, directed these institutions to go on half rations.

Gary.—The breaking up of a bolsheviki meeting by troops because of threats made against the authorities, shots fired at a military patrol from ambush, suppression of the manufacture of liquor and its sale, the placing of nails and tacks in streets to puncture the tires of automobiles carrying workmen, and a few minor disorders were recent incidents in the nation-wide strike of the steel workers in Gary. Twenty woman pickets were arrested at Indiana Harbor by the soldiers when they jeered strikers who were returning to work in the mills. A few workers continue to return to their posts in the various plants there.

Hammond.—Alien blood, chiefly from the Balkans, has provoked all the rioting in the Calumet region since the strike began, it was asserted by authorities in strike-bound Indiana cities. In no case has a man of American blood been jailed. The principal persons arrested as participants in rioting bear these names: At Gary—Cigjoich, Marpchiah, Norvichs, Ranvachin, Probinsco, Meleski. At Hammond—Rogowisch, Skuba, Kratacs, Motsom, Boba, Dudek, Galla. At East Chicago—Yelovich, Kowalski, Dworki, Nemeth, Komas. At Whiting—Tapajans, Demkovitch.

DEWS OF EVE

No More Gentle Than "Cascarets" for the Liver, Bowels

It is just as needless as it is dangerous to take violent or nasty cathartics. Nature provides no shock absorbers for your liver and bowels against calomel, harsh pills, sickening oil and salts. Cascarets give quick relief without injury from Constipation, Biliousness, Indigestion, Gases and Sick Headache. Cascarets work while you sleep, removing the toxins, poisons and sour, indigestible waste without griping or inconvenience. Cascarets regulate by strengthening the bowel muscles. They cost so little too.—Adv.

One of the strangest weddings I ever heard of was that of a couple out west. The mother of the bride not approving of her son-in-law to be, selected one to her own liking. Arrangements were made for a large house wedding. When the guests were arriving the bride-to-be slipped quietly out of a rear door, met the lover of her choice, and together they galloped away on horseback to an adjoining village and were married, leaving the deserted groom and wedding party behind.—Exchange.

United States Invades Calcutta.

There are more motorcars on the streets of Calcutta than any other kind of vehicle. The number of privately owned cars is said to be about 4,000, and there are approximately 500 taxicabs. It is thought that American cars will soon predominate the streets of India. All the motorcars imported into Calcutta since the signing of the armistice and the removal of the import embargo have been of American manufacture.

Too Ill to Work

Scores of Women

in homes, stores, offices and factories are not fit to be at work. They toil on day after day and year after year suffering with distressing weaknesses and derangements, hoping against hope that they will soon feel better, but how can they hope to do good work or escape permanent invalidism?

Such women are in danger of derangement of women's functions. They owe it to themselves to try that good old fashioned root and herb remedy Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which for more than forty years has been restoring American Women to health and strength.

Here is a Notable Example

Joplin, Missouri.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to see if it really would do as it was advertised and it sure did, and more. I was weak and could not do much work, had bearing down pains and had to go to bed. I learned about the Vegetable Compound from my mother and my husband told me to get it. After taking one bottle I was able to be on my feet most of the time and do my work again. I have a baby eleven months old and I have done all my own work, even the washing and ironing since she was three weeks old. I certainly recommend your great medicine to everyone who complains of female trouble and I am more than willing for you to use my testimonial."
—Mrs. TIMOTHY GRANEY, 426 Conner Ave., Joplin, Mo.

And Another

Chicago, Illinois.—"I suffered for four years with pains in my sides, hips and legs and a terrible backache. I could not do any work at all. I was treated by many physicians but they did not help me. I read in one of your books where other women have been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I tried it and it helped me very much so that now I can do everything in the house. I have told my friends about Vegetable Compound and you have my permission to use this letter."—Mrs. I. OVENSTEIN, 902 S. Marshfield Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

I. N. Wyatt Dies From Injuries.

Newton Wyatt, a resident of Auburn, was struck by a Ford automobile Sunday morning at 10 o'clock while crossing Seventh street at Main and suffered injuries from which he died Sunday afternoon.

The automobile was driven by Glen Carter. Mr. Carter had turned from Main street west on Seventh when the machine struck Mr. Wyatt. Mr. Carter applied the brakes to his car when he saw that there was a possibility of hitting Mr. Wyatt, who had started across Seventh street going south, but could not stop in time to avoid the accident.

Evidently Mr. Wyatt did not see the machine until he had started across the street. When he saw the car, he turned to go back to the sidewalk but as he faced the approaching automobile, the machine struck him. The force of the impact threw him to the pavement, his head striking the hard pavement with a thug. The unfortunate man was unconscious when picked up and he was placed in the Carter machine and taken to the office of Dr. L. N. Geisinger. Medical aid was given him but it was seen from the first that there was no hope of saving his life. The Dilgard ambulance was called and he was taken to the home of his daughter, Mrs Ray Antrup, where he died Sunday afternoon at 12:45.

Funeral services were held at the Concord church Wednesday afternoon with burial in Riverside cemetery.

Newton Wyatt was born in Concord and was a life long resident of DeKalb county. He was raised in the vicinity of Concord and after he had grown to manhood purchased a farm near where he was born and lived there a long time. He spent two years of his life in Butler, going to Auburn about two years ago.

He made his hame with his son, Daniel Wyatt at 332 West 13th. street. He led an active life for a man of his years. His wife died some years ago. He is survived by three children, Daniel, with whom he lived. Albert, of Yetter, Iowa; and Mrs. Ray Antrup, of South Phillip street. Two brothers, James of South Center street, and Daniel, father of Charles Wyatt of South Main street, and a sister, Mrs. Marietta Blilor, of Akron, Ohio, also survive him.—Extracts from the Auburn Star.

Mr. and Mrs. James Rhodenbaugh, Mrs. Mary Shuff and Mrs. Frank Milliman, motored to Fort Wayne Friday morning, the two last named going on to Indianapolis to visit a few days with Asa Shuff and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob F. Krabill and daughter, Garcia Cook and husband, spent the past week touring through Michigan. Their principal stopping place was at Lake Station, Claire county, visiting with David R. Krabill a brother of Mr. Krabill. Fishing is a great sport there. Black bass being very numerous. Many they caught weighed eight pounds. Mr. Krabill has laid his land out in lots bordering the lake and the dwellings there are magnificent. A more beautiful summer resort couldn't be asked for. People from many of the larger cities of the United States have bought lots and erected some of the grandest homes that the eye ever witnessed. The farm products in that section were very good this year. Cabbage is a poor crop but is extra good on Mr. Krabill's two hundred acre farm. Some of the heads weighed fifteen pounds. Also radishes measuring thirty inches in length and thirteen inches around. Last month he contracted and sold three thousand dollars worth of lots, upon which new homes will be erected at once. Mr. Krabill's main hobby is raising thoroughbred stock. Mainly horses and cattle. Starting home Tuesday the towns visited were Claire, Alma, (the great home of the Republic Automobile Mfg. Plant,) Lancing, Ithica and Jackson. Upon stopping at Hillsdale they met Lute Carpenning, formerly a resident of St. Joe, who is foreman over a gang of men, contracting bridges for the railroad and making two hundred and twenty-five dollars a month.

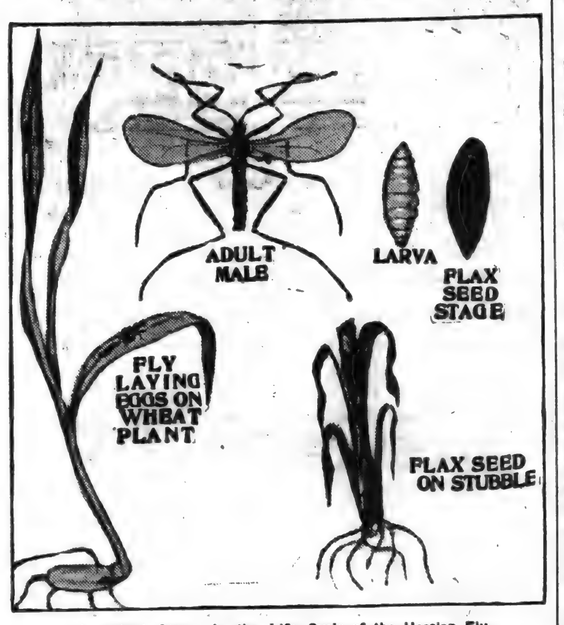
SAFE SEEDING DATES RECOMMENDED FOR SAVING WHEAT CROP FROM HESSIAN FLY



Important Stages in the Life Cycle of the Hessian Fly.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The Hessian fly, a minute wheat parasite, less than knee-high to a grasshopper, but gigantic as a fierce lion in its destructiveness, collects $50,000,000 a year from American wheat growers. This mosquito-like fly lays its eggs upon the leaves of wheat, and after the eggs hatch the little maggots live upon the plants' sap which they obtain by gnawing into the soft portion of the stem. Ordinarily two, or sometimes three or more, generations of the insect occur during a year. The main army of flies arrives in the fall and conducts a carnival of despoliation among the newly seeded grain. After the Hessian fly has once thoroughly infested a crop of wheat there is no known means of saving the grain, and the only known method of preventing damage from the fly is to keep such invaders out of the wheat.

Safe Dates for Seeding.

One of the most effective means of escaping fly damage is to defer fall seeding until danger of molestation from the fly is over. Safety dates for seeding wheat in different sections of the country are as follows:

Northern Michigan, soon after September 1; in southern Michigan, and northern Ohio, about September 20; in southern Ohio, after the first week in October; in Kentucky and Tennessee, October 10 to 20; in Georgia and South Carolina, October 25 to November 16; in extreme southern Kansas and northern Oklahoma, as well as in Virginia, after the first week in October. October-sown wheat always enjoys the greatest freedom from the fly in Missouri. Practically the same corresponding delay in wheat sowing in the fall should be followed to the southward.

These safety dates are only approximate and serve to show in a general way about the time when the fall brood of the fly will have largely disappeared from the wheat belt east of the Mississippi river. As the larger part of the fall brood appears and is gone within a week, it is possible for a farmer to time his seeding operations so as to avoid the fly.

Rotating Crops Is Effective.

Crop rotation is an efficient control as during the season of migration, unless new unaffected fields are near by, most of the insects succumb. Rotating the crops decreases the available supply of new host plants.

Destruction of volunteer grain plants by plowing, disking, or other tillage operations must begin before the larvae have matured in order to be effective, as volunteer wheat ordinarily is a prolific distributer of fly infection. Enriching the soil by plowing under the green cover crops and by applying stable manure also aid indirectly in combating the fly because a fertile soil will produce plants that soon attain vigorous, healthy growth and are better able to resist diseases than those grown on thin soils where it is hard to develop sufficient growth to withstand the winter if the wheat is sown late.

Good seed is a perequisite in securing healthy vigorous growth. Ordinarily the fly is avoided where good seed is sown in a thoroughly prepared fertile soil after the majority of the fall brood has disappeared. It is preferable to sow on ground not devoted to wheat the preceding year. In the case of spring wheat, the earlier the grain is sown the less it will suffer from the Hessian fly, but good seed and a well prepared, fertile soil are as essential in this case as elsewhere.

EFFICIENT MEANS OF PREPARING SEED BED

Use Disk to Prevent Growth of Grass and Weeds.

Plow Land to Depth of 6 or 7 Inches Where Wheat Follows Other Than Cultivated Crop—Keep Top-soil Well Broken Up.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When wheat follows a cultivated crop that is removed sufficiently early, such as corn or tobacco, the soil can usually be prepared for seeding by the use of a disk and ordinary harrows. As soon as the crop is harvested the land should be gone over with the disk to prevent the growth of grass and weeds. A second disking, followed by harrowing, is given just before the grain is sown. A better seed bed can be prepared in this way than by plowing, and it takes much less time and work. If weeds are plentiful, plowing three or four inches deep may be necessary. Harrowing with an ordinary harrow should follow the plowing.

When wheat follows cotton the stalks should be plowed under as soon as the bolls are all open and picked. Plowing in this case should be deep enough to bury the stalks completely in order to destroy the boll weevil. The land should then be firmed with a roller and the wheat sown with a disk drill. Disking or harrowing is not advisable, as it unearths the buried stalks.

When wheat follows other than a cultivated crop, the seed bed should be prepared by plowing the land to a depth of six or seven inches several weeks before seeding. It should then be harrowed at once and afterwards worked down with a harrow, disk, drag, or roller in such a manner as to kill all weeds that start to grow after the topsoil is well broken up. When it is necessary to plow just before seeding, as when a catch crop of cowpeas is plowed under, the soil should be compacted by rolling and harrowing several times before seeding.

BETTER SWINE AND PROFITS

Farmers Learning to Be More Careful in Selection of Their Breeding Animals.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Farmers throughout the country are using improved hog-breeding stock more generally than ever before, report specialists of the United States department of agriculture, as they are learning that the best stock yields the most profits, and hence are more careful in their selection of breeding animals. Farmers, as a rule, seem to be pleased with the outlook for the hog raiser, and the indications point to a large increase in the number of litters to be farrowed this fall. Much trouble was experienced with the early spring litters because of cold weather at farrowing time and on account of feed shortage and the high price of protein feeds, causing many stockmen to allow their brood sows to get into poor condition, with the result that small and weak litters were farrowed. In the main, these farmers have learned a costly lesson, and henceforward it is presumed that they will provide better housing and farrowing conditions as well as ample food of the right mixture for their porkers.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR OCTOBER 19

JESUS IN PETER'S HOME.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 1:29-39.

GOLDEN TEXT—Jesus said unto him, this day is salvation come to this house.—Luke 19:9.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Matt. 8:14-17; Luke 4:38-44.

I. Healing of Simon's Wife's Mother (vv. 29-31).

1. A loved one ill (v. 30). From the synagogue Jesus with James and John went to the home of Peter and Andrew where he found Peter's mother-in-law prostrate with a burning fever. Among the closest followers there are suffering ones and anxious and burdened hearts, but to all such he comes with loving sympathy and power to help. His power is the same in the quietude of the home as in the public meeting place.

2. They tell him of her (v. 31). This was the proper thing to do. We should bring to our Saviour's attention those of our families who have need, of both bodily and spiritual healing.

3. He healed her (v. 31). "He came and took her by the hand and lifted her up." This act showed the nearness, sympathetic tenderness and power of Jesus. At his touch the fever departed and strength was imparted to her body so that she was at once able to minister unto them.

4. She ministered to them (v. 31). This act shows that (1) the cure was instantaneous and complete. When Jesus heals there is no halfway business. It is the same with spiritual healing. (2) Gratitude on the part of the one healed. Those who have experienced the healing power of Jesus will express their gratitude in loving service to the Lord and his disciples.

II. Christ's Ministry at Sunset (vv. 32-34).

It became noised about that a notable miracle had been wrought in Peter's home, therefore as soon as the Sabbath drew to a close many demon-possessed and diseased were brought to him to be healed. If we would have the crowds to gather today we must be able to show that Jesus is at work among us. Our testimony should be backed by the healed body or soul.

1. He healed those of divers' diseases (v. 34). Jesus can heal any disease. Many of the cures spoken of today are temperamental, but the cures wrought by Jesus were of all sorts. No malady ever baffled him.

2. Cast out many devils (v. 34). The devils obey him. There is no record of a demon ever disputing the authority of Jesus. At his command they rendered instant obedience.

3. Suffered not the devils to speak (v. 34). He bids the saved soul witness of his saving power, but will not allow the devils to speak in challenge of his authority or in witness of the truth of his deity.

III. Jesus Retires to Pray (vv. 35-37).

The arduous service of the day made it desirable to be alone with the Father in prayer. Shut out from man—alone with God. How necessary the hush of the eternal, the calm of God! There is great need of private prayer.

IV. Preaching Throughout Galilee (vv. 38, 39).

He continued steadfastly to preach, for this was his supreme business. His miraculous works were but aids to his testimony. Preaching the gospel is the chief concern of all who would follow Jesus.

Harmony.

It is a beautiful and blessed world we live in. The flowers blossom in obedience to the same law that keeps the stars in their places. Each bird song is an echo of the universal harmony. It is humanity which thrusts discords, and false and jarring notes into the days. We go out into the beautiful morning carrying our useless loads of frets and worries, our left-over resentments and our faithless fears. The sunshine assures us that the world is still moving safely in its appointed course and God has not forgotten us; the birds lift their cheering notes of rejoicing that they have found food for the day, but we lift complaining voices because we have not found provisions for years to come. Our moody spirits and jarring tempers hurt the love on earth and in heaven. But they hurt our own souls most of all, for they put us out of tune with the music of the universe.

Success.

The great highroad of human welfare lies along the old highway of steadfast well-doing; and they who are the most persistent, and work in the truest spirit, will invariably be the most successful; success treads on the heels of every effort.—S. Smiles.

Honest Prayer.

We must be often, and alone, with God, and there at his feet we must pour out our hearts and ask his richest blessing upon our united endeavors. "To pray," says Fenelon, "is to desire; but it is to desire what God would have us desire. He who desires not, from the bottom of his heart, offers a deceitful prayer."

No Greater Enemy.

Though all things do to harm with him what they can, no greater enemy to himself than man.—Earl of Stirling.

GOOD ROADS

KEEP EARTH ROADS IN SHAPE

Engineer of Wisconsin Highway Commission Tells Benefits of Patrol System of Maintenance.

Earth roads will be in existence over wide areas for many years to come, notwithstanding the rapid extension of "permanent" road beds of different materials.

Mr. F. Sergeant, a division engineer of the Wisconsin highway commission, writes:

"After a season's experience with the patrol system of maintenance in division No. 7, where we have practically all earth roads, I am more than ever convinced that this type of road can be fairly well maintained by this system, even where subject to considerable heavy motor traffic.

"A patrol section should not be more than six or seven miles in length and should be taken care of by one man with team. This man should be held responsible for the condition of his section at all times and should be required to devote all of his time to the work.

"The patrolman must have a good team, and the wagon box equipped with a dump bottom. The county should furnish a light two-horse blade grader, road plane, plow, scraper and necessary small tools, such as shovel, pick, bar, brush scythe, rake, etc.

"In spite of all the claims made for the road drag as a maintenance tool, we find the light blade grader or the road plane far superior to it, and we advocate the use of these tools entirely for road maintenance. We find that a road drag having no bearing except on the blade, has a tendency to gouge out the material in soft spots making them still deeper, and giving the road a bad, wavy surface, while the blade grader or the road plane, having a long wheel base or bearing surface, cuts only on the high spots and distributes the material in low places, building them up and giving the road a nice, smooth, driving surface. A blade grader should be so constructed that one man can drive the team and make all adjustments necessary while the machine is moving, as only one man is required on this work.

"An earth road with low crown and badly sodded shoulders cannot be properly maintained by the patrolman, but should be first trimmed up with a heavier outfit, cutting off and removing heavy sods, properly heaping up the crown, filling low places and opening up drainage.

"The blade grader should not be used on earth roads when they are sloppy, but should be used as soon as the material is dry enough to roll nicely on the blade, and pack into the ruts and depressions. And no great amount of material should be moved at one time; a quarter or half inch cut is sufficient for the best results, furnishing all the material that the blade can distribute evenly. Under ordinary weather conditions the material is in a fair condition to work with the grader for about three days after a rain, giving ample time for three full rounds of the section which should leave even a badly rutted road in fairly good condition. Be sure to always make the first round trip on the center of the road.

Patrolman Cutting Weeds Along Side of Road.

"Six inches of crown to a 24-foot driving surface is sufficient. Care should be taken that the roadbed is nicely rounded, and not dragged to a peak in the center or a large ridge of loose earth left there."

ROADS AID RURAL STUDENTS

Much Larger Percentage of Attendance Noted in Sections Where Highways Are Improved.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

While it is true that various factors contribute to increase or reduce the attendance at schools in given sections of the country, it is worthy of comment that in the states having a high percentage of improved roads a much larger percentage of rural students enrolled regularly attend the schools than in the states having a small percentage of improved roads.

Earth Roads Suffer.

Earth roads have been the greatest sufferers from water, and it is upon them that the greatest amount of money has been wasted.

Decent Road Will Help.

"Back to the farm" will mean something when there's a decent road to go back over.

Mail Carrier Appreciative.

If any traveler appreciates the value of improved highways it is the rural mail carrier.

CURRENT WIT and HUMOR

His Greatest Achievement.

"Before you give your answer to this Gotorox boy," said the careful mother, "you must tell me what he has achieved in the world."

"Well, mamma," said the dutiful daughter, "among other things he has achieved a father who has a million dollars, and——"

"Bless you, my children," murmured mother. "I've always wanted you to marry an industrious man."

Would It Were True!

"Ah," said the facetious caller, as he found Scribson busily pounding his typewriter. "Turning out a little up-to-date fiction?"

"Yes," replied Scribson, wearily. "I'm just dashing off a note to my importunate grocer telling him that I expect to sell a story to the Friday Evening Post in a few days."

Superfluous Promise.

The Lover—Promise me, darling, that you will never let anyone come between us!

Darling's Father (in the background)—From what I can see of you I don't know how anyone can!

Elevator Man's Jest.

"The elevator man has asked for more money."

"So?"

"Yes. He says he quits going up unless his salary goes up to."

Sidewalk Humor.

Pedestrian—Hey, mister, you're losing something.

Autoist—What is it?

Pedestrian—The pleasure of my company in your auto.—Judge.

HANDICAPPED.

"You're always complaining of colds and rheumatism. I wouldn't care so much if you only had some fashionable disease."

"I wouldn't care either, but for two things. I haven't got the price and I can't pronounce their names."

Unrest.

I cannot see how it will pay
Or keep me in temper serene
If I work only eight hours a day.
And worry the other sixteen.

Woman's Way.

"Why don't you ask your husband's advice?"

"I intend to, my dear, just as soon as I've made up my mind what I'll do."

Spiteful.

Young Jobbles has bought a rakish roadster. It's spitework, I fear."

"How so?" asked the other.

"The money spent for that car was intended for a bungalow. Young Jobbles wants to show the girl in the case that he has no intention of proposing a second time."

Worse.

Wife—Well, dear, since you complain of the high charges at the seaside, I'll go to the mountains this summer.

Hub—No, no! Even the air you breathe would be higher there.

Eating at High Prices.

"I presume you are putting a little something by for a rainy day?"

"No. I'd rather take a chance on getting wet tomorrow and have some thing to eat today."

His Something Near.

"He hasn't changed his occupation except in degree."

"How so?"

"He used to be a bank-runner, and now he is a walking delegate."

Sense of Human Responsibility.

"Didn't Hamlet say something about being born to set things right?"

"I believe so," said the man who doesn't care for poetry. "You meet so many people who feel that way about public affairs and simply succeed in making matters worse."

Cured.

"One of our little pigs was sick, so I gave him some sugar."

"Sugar! What for?"

"For medicine, of course. Haven't you heard of sugar-cured hams?"

GOODBY, WOMEN'S TROUBLES

The tortures and discomforts of weak, lame and aching back, swollen feet and limbs, weakness, dizziness, nausea, as a rule have their origin in kidney trouble, not "female complaints." These general symptoms of kidney and bladder disease are well known—so is the remedy.

Next time you feel a twinge of pain in the back or are troubled with headache, indigestion, insomnia, irritation in the bladder or pain in the loins and lower abdomen, you will find quick and sure relief in GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. This old and tried remedy for kidney trouble and allied derangements has stood the test for hundreds of years. It does the work. Pains and troubles vanish and new life and health will come as you continue their use. When completely restored to your usual vigor, continue taking a capsule or two each day.

GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules are imported from the laboratories at Haarlem, Holland. Do not accept a substitute. In sealed boxes, three sizes.—Adv.

Great Gas Cloud Forming.

An enormous gas cloud gathering on the sun forms an arc 340,000 miles long on the edge of that body, astronomers say. It is about 125,000 miles away from the edge, and the distance from the sun to the top of the cloud is estimated to be 200,000 miles.

A SUMMER COLD

A cold in the summer time, as everybody knows, is the hardest kind of a cold to get rid of. The best and quickest way is to go to bed and stay there if you can, with a bottle of "Boschee's Syrup" handy to insure a good night's rest, free from coughing, with easy expectoration in the morning.

But if you can't stay in bed you must keep out of draughts, avoid sudden changes, eat sparingly of simple food and take occasional doses of Boschee's Syrup, which you can buy at any store where medicine is sold, a safe and efficient remedy, made in America for more than fifty years. Keep it handy.—Adv.

Knowledge of the Language.

Bugler Overtop—Yes, in France I had to be an early riser. I got up every morning on the first crow of the roosters.

Miss Homestepper—And could you really understand the French roosters when they crowed?

"We needn't go any farther," said the "king." "It's the same all the way along to the mouth—all overgrown as you see, all the way, right out to the 'white water' as they call it—which is four miles of shoal sand that is seldom deeper than two fathoms, and which a nor'easter is liable to blow dry for a week on end. Naturally it's a hard place to find, and a hard place to get off!—and only two or three persons besides Sweeney—all of them our friends—know the way in. Tobias may know of it; but to know it is one thing, to find it is another matter. I could hardly be sure of it myself—if I were standing in from the sea, with nothing but the long palmetto-fringed coast line to go by.

"Now you see it? I brought you here, because words—"

"Even yours, dear 'king,'" I laughed.

"—could not explain what I suggest for us to do. You are interested in Tobias. Tobias is interested in you. I am interested in you both. And Calypso and I have a treasure to guard."

"I have still a treasure to seek," I said, half to myself.

"Now, to be practical. We can assume that Tobias is on the watch. I don't mean that he's around here just now, for before we left I spoke to Samson and Erebus and they will pass the word to four men blacker than themselves; therefore we can assume that this square mile or so is for the moment 'to ourselves.' But beyond our fence you may rely that Tobias and his myrmidons—is that the word?" he asked with a concession to his natural foolishness—"are there.

"So," he went on, "I want you to go down to your boat tomorrow morning to say goodby to the commandant, the parson and the postmaster; to haul up your sail and head for Nassau. Call in on Sweeney on the way, buy an extra box of cartridges, and say 'Dieu et mon Droit'—it is our password; he will understand, but, if he shouldn't, explain in your own way that you came from me, and that we rely upon him to look out for our interest. Then head straight for Nassau; but, about eight o'clock, or anywhere around twilight, turn about and head—well, we'll map it out on the chart at home—anywhere up to eight miles along the coast till you come to a light low down right on the edge of the water. As soon as you see it drop anchor; then wait till morning—the very beginning of dawn. As soon as you can see land look out for Samson—within a hundred yards of you—all the land will look alike to you. Only make the captain head straight for Samson, and just as you think you are going to run ashore— Well, you will see!"

CHAPTER V.

Old Friends.

Next morning I did as the "king" had told me to do. The whole program was carried out just as he had planned it. I made my goodbye in the settlement, as we had arranged, not forgetting to say "Dieu et mon Droit" to Sweeney, and watching with some humorous intent how he would take it. He took it quietly, as a man in a signal box takes a signal, with about as much emotion and with just the same necessary seriousness.

"Tell the boss," he said—of course he meant the "king"—"that we are looking after him. Nothing'll slip through here, if we can help it. Good luck!"

So I went down to the post—to old Tom once more, and the rest of our little crew, who had long since exhausted the attractions of their life ashore and were glad, as I was, to "H'ist Up the John B. Sail."

Down in my cabin I looked over some mail that had been waiting for me at the post office. Amongst it was a crisp, characteristic word from Charlie Webster—for whom the gun will ever be mightier than the pen:

"Tobias escaped—just heard he is on your island—watch out. Will follow in a day or two."

I came out on deck about sunset. We were running along with all our sails drawing like a dream. I looked back at the captain, proud and quiet and happy there at the helm, and nodded a smile to him, which he returned with a flash of his teeth. He loved his boat; he asked nothing better than to watch her behaving just as she was doing. And the other boys seemed quiet and happy too, lying along the sides of the house, ready for the captain's order, but meanwhile contest to look up at the great sails and down again at the sea.

We were a ship and a ship's crew all at peace with one another, and contented with ourselves—rushing and singing and spraying through the water. We were all friends—sea and sails and crew together. I couldn't help thinking that a mutiny would be hard to arrange under such a combination of influences.

Tom was sitting forward plaiting a rope. For all our experiences together he never implied that he was anything more than the ship's cook, with the privilege of waiting upon me in the cabin at my meals. But of course he knew that I had quite another valuation of him, and as our eyes met I beckoned to him to draw closer to me.

"Tom," I said, "I have found my treasure."

"You don't say so, sar."

"Quite true, Tom," I continued; "you shall see my treasure tomorrow; meanwhile read this note." Tom was so much to me that I wanted him to know all about the details of the enterprise we shared together, and in which he risked his life no less than I risked mine.

Tom took out his spectacles from some recess of his trousers and applied himself to Charlie Webster's note, as though it had been the Bible. He read it as slowly, indeed, as if it had been Sanscrit, and then folded it and handed it back to me without a word. But there was quite a young smile in his old eyes.

"'The wonderful works of God,'" he said presently. "I guess, sar, we shall soon be able to ask him what he meant by that expression."

Soon the long, dark shore loomed ahead of us. I had reckoned it out about right. But the captain announced that we were in shoal water.

"How many feet?" I asked, and a boy threw out the lead.

"Sixteen and a half," he said.

"Go ahead," I called out.

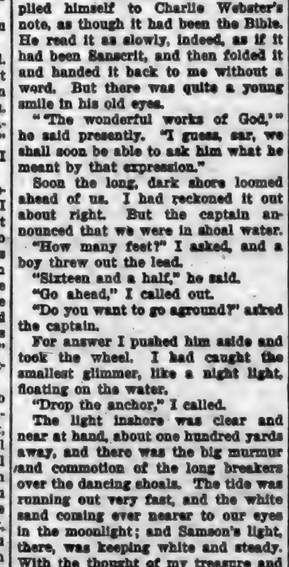
"Do you want to go aground?" asked the captain.

For answer I pushed him aside and took the wheel. I had caught the smallest glimmer, like a night light, floating on the water.

"Drop the anchor," I called.

The light inshore was clear and near at hand, about one hundred yards away, and there was the big murmur and commotion of the long breakers over the dancing shoals. The tide was running out very fast, and the white sand coming ever nearer to our eyes in the moonlight; and Samson's light, there, was keeping white and steady. With the thought of my treasure and the "king" so near by it was hard to resist the temptation to plunge in and follow my heart ashore. But I managed to control the boyish impulse, and presently we were all snug, and some of us snoring below decks, rocked in the long swells of the shoal water that gleamed milkily like an animated moonstone under the stars—old Sailor curled up at my feet, just like old times.

I woke just as dawn was waking too, very still and windless; for the threatening nor'easter had changed its mind, and the world was as quiet as though there weren't a human being in it. As the light grew I scanned the shore to see whether I could detect the entrance of the hidden creek; but, though I swept it up and down again and again, it continued to justify the "king's" boast. There was no sign of an opening anywhere. Nothing but a straight line of brush, with mangroves here and there stepping down in their fantastic way into the water. And yet we were but a hundred yards from the shore. Certainly "Blackbeard"—if the haunt had really been his—had known his business; for an enemy could have sought him all day along this coast and found no clue to his hiding place.



"Drop the Anchor!" I Cried.

But presently, as my eyes kept on seeking, a figure rose, tall and black, near the water's edge, a little to our left, and shot up a long arm by way of signal. It was Samson; and evidently the mouth of the creek was right there in front of us—under our very noses, so to say—and yet it was impossible to make it out. However, at this signal, I stirred up the still sleeping crew, and presently we had the anchors up, and the engine started at the slowest possible speed.

The tide was beginning to run in, so we needed very little way on us. I pointed out Samson to the captain, and, following the "king's" instructions, told him to steer straight for the negro. Samson stood there and called:

"All right, sar. Keep right on. You'll see your way in a minute."

And, sure enough, when we were barely fifty feet away from the shore, and there seemed nothing for it but to run dead aground, low down through the floating mangrove branches we caught sight of a narrow gleam starting inland, and in another moment or two our decks were swept with foliage as the Flamingo rustled in, like a bird to cover, through an opening in the bushes barely twice her beam; and there before us, making through the brush, was a lane of water which immediately began to broaden between palmetto-fringed banks, and was evidently deep enough for a much larger vessel.

"Plenty of water, sar," hallooed Samson from the bank, grinning a huge welcome. "Keep a-going after me," and he started trotting along the creek side.

Samson went trotting along the twisting banks, we cautiously feeling our way after him, for something like a quarter of a mile; and then, coming round a sudden bend, the creek opened out into a sort of basin. On the left bank stood two large palmetto shanties. Samson indicated that there was our anchorage; and then, as we were almost alongside of them, the cheery hallocs of a well-known voice hailed us. It was the "king;" and as I answered his welcome the morning suddenly sang for me—for there, too, was Calypso at his side.

The water ran so deep at the creek's side that we were able to moor the Flamingo right up against the bank, and when I had jumped ashore and greeted my friends, and the "king" had executed a brief characteristic fantasia on the manifest advantages of having a hidden pirate's creek in the family, he unfolded his plans, or rather that portion of them that was necessary at the moment.

CHAPTER VI.

An Old Enemy.

Charlie Webster's laconic note was naturally our chief topic over breakfast. "Tobias escaped—just heard he is on your island. Watch out. Will follow in a day or two." The "king" read it out, when I handed him the note across the table.

"Your friend writes like a true man of action," he added, "like Caesar—and also the electric telegraph. We must send word to Sweeney to be on the lookout for him. I will send Samson the Redoubtable with a message to him this morning. Meanwhile we will smoke and think."

Then for the next hour the "king" thought—aloud; while Calypso and I sat and listened, occasionally throwing in a parenthesis of comment or suggestion. It was evident, we all agreed, that Calypso had been right. It had been Tobias and none other whose evil eye had sent her so breathless back to me, waiting in the shadow of the woods; and it was the same evil eye that had fallen vulture-like on her golden doubloon exposed on Sweeney's counter.

It was clear that there were such coins on the island in somebody's possession. Then, when he had watched Calypso on her way home—and without any doubt been the spectator of our meeting at the edge of the wood though we had been unable to catch sight of him—there would of course be a suspicion in his mind that my quest might at least be approaching success, and that his ancestral millions might be almost in my hands. That there might be some other treasure on the island with which neither he nor his grandfather had any concern would not occur to him, nor would it be likely to trouble him if it did. My presence was enough to prove that the treasure was his—for was it not his treasure that I was after? Logic irrefutable! How was he to know that all the treasure so far discovered was that modest hoard—unearthed, as I heard, in the garden—the present whereabouts of which was known only to Calypso. The "king" had interrupted himself at this point of argument.

"By the way, Calypso, where is it?" he asked unexpectedly, to the sudden confusion of both of us. "Isn't it time you revealed your mysterious Aladdin's cave?"

At the word "cave" the submerged rose in Calypso's cheeks almost came to the surface of their beautiful olive.

"Cave!" she countered manfully, "who said it was a cave?"

"It was merely a figure of speech, which—if I may say so, my dear—might apply with equal fitness, say—to a silk stocking."

And Calypso laughed through to other tide of reassurance.

"No, dad, not that, either. Never mind where it is. It is perfectly safe, I assure you."

"But are you sure, my dear? Wouldn't it be safer, after all, here in the house? How can you be certain that no one but yourself will accidentally discover it?"

"I am absolutely certain that no one will," she answered, with an emphasis on the last three words which sent a thrill through me, for I knew that it was meant for me. "Of course, dad," she added, "if you insist—you shall have it. But seriously I think it is safer where it is, and if I were to fetch it, how can I be sure that no one"—she paused, with a meaning which I, of course, understood—"Tobias, for instance, would see me going—and follow me."

"Isn't It Time You Revealed Your Mysterious Aladdin's Cave?"

"To be sure—to be sure," said the "king." "What do you think, Friend Ulysses?"

"I think it more than likely that she might be followed," I answered, "and I quite agree with Miss Calypso. I certainly wouldn't advise her to visit her treasure just now—with the woods probably full of eyes. In fact," I added, smiling frankly at her, "I could scarcely answer for myself even—for I confess that she has filled me with an overpowering curiosity."

"So be it then," said the "king;" "and now to consider what our friend here graphically speaks of as those eyes in the woods."

The "king" then made a determined descent into the practical. The woods, most probably, were full of eyes. In plain prose, we were almost certainly being watched. Unless—unless, indeed, my bogus departure for Nassau had fooled Tobias as we had hoped. But, even so, with that lure of Calypso's doubloon ever before him, it was too probable that he would not leave the neighborhood without some further investigation—"an investigation," the "king" explained, "which might well take the form of a midnight raid; murdered in our beds, and so forth."

That being so, being in fact almost a certainty—the "king" spoke as though he would be a much disappointed man otherwise—we must look to our garrison. After all, besides ourselves, we had but Samson and Erebus and their dark brethren of doubtful courage, while Tobias probably had command of a round dozen of doughty desperadoes. On the whole, perhaps, it might be best to avail ourselves of the crew of the Flamingo—"under cover of the dark," he repeated with a smile.

While we had been talking Samson had long since been on his way with the word to Sweeney to look out for Webster, and as he had been admonished to hurry back it was scarcely noon when he returned, bringing in exchange a verbal message from Sweeney.

"The pockmarked party," ran the message as delivered by Samson, "had left the harbor in his sloop that morning. Yes, sar!"

"Ha! ha!" laughed the "king," turning to me. "So two can play at that game, says Henry P. Tobias, Jr. But if we haven't fooled him let's make sure that he hasn't fooled us. We'll bring up your crew all the same—what do you think?"

"Under cover of the dark," I assented.

The "king's" instructions to me were that I was not to show my nose outside the house. I must regard myself as a prisoner with the entire freedom of his study—a large, airy room on the second floor, well furnished with all manner of books, old prints, strange dishes in glass cases, cash, guns, pipe racks, curiosities of every kind from various parts of the world.

The walls of the old home, whether mansion or cottage, can be made just as attractive, just as sanitary, through the intelligent use of

Alabastine

Instead of kalsomine or wallpaper

How much better, when you have a new home, to start right than to have to correct errors afterward from former treatment with other materials, when you come to the use of Alabastine, as does nearly every one sooner or later.

Once your walls are Alabastined you can use any material over it should you desire, but having used Alabastine you will have no desire for any other treatment.

Alabastine is so easy to mix and apply — so lasting in its results — so absolutely sanitary — and so generally recognised as the proper decorative material in a class by itself that it is becoming difficult to manufacture fast enough to supply the demand.

Alabastine is a dry powder, put up in five-pound packages, white and beautiful tints, ready to mix and use by the addition of cold water, and with full directions on each package. Every package of genuine Alabastine has cross and circle printed in red.

ONCE A TERM OF REPROACH

"Grass Widow" Used by Teutons to Indicate an Unmarried Mother—Other Possible Origins.

The term "grass widow" very likely originated from the wording of a canon law of the eleventh century, which ordained that a widow should remain "under God's protection and grace" for a full year after her husband's death, and then marry if she pleased. Such women were "widows of grace," and in later parish registers they are described as "grasse widowes." In the time of Sir Thomas More the term "grass widow" was applied to unmarried mothers, and in this sense it was used in most of the Teutonic languages. In modern times the term lost that reproach, and has been applied to the wives of men long absent from home. Another explanation of its origin is found here in the United States. During the days of gold rushes it was common for men to board out their wives until they had made enough to start a home in the West, and this, in the picturesque speech of the time, was termed "putting one's widow out to grass."

WHO NAMED PONT D'ARCOLE?

Only Legend Relied On to Account for Appellation Given Famous Bridge in Paris.

Though it is getting on for nearly a hundred years since the old Pont de la Greve in Paris has been known as the Pont d'Arcole, nobody yet has been able to give chapter and verse for the change. Now that the anniversary of the three days of July, 1830, the 27th, 28th, and 29th, which Paris dubbed Les Trois Glorieuses, has ceased to be kept, it is likely that this age of local history will remain obscure. In the old days the Pont de la Greve was merely a footway for passengers. In the troublous year when Paris rose, the Tuileries palace was sacked, and the king fled to England, a young hothead leading a column of insurgents charged across the bridge with a flag in his hand shouting—"Follow me! and if I fall know that my name is Arcole"—or Darcole. So runs the legend. The famous incident at the Pont d'Arcole when Bonaparte, flag in his hand, heading his grenadiers, beat the Austrians, must have been some reason for giving the bridge the name of Pont d'Arcole a few days later. There is no record of who gave the order for the change. No record at all of anything connected with the incident. It is one of the minor "mysteres de Paris."—Christian Science Monitor.

A Vanished Custom.

"Yes, indeed—I'm positively ashamed to ask the butcher for a nickel's worth of dog meat any more."

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies. This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucus or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic outs this slime and mucus and removes it. A nauceated feeling is sometimes experienced when this mucus is breaking loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appet te returns and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

In Society

The following article appeared in the Decatur, Indiana, Daily News of Saturday, October 18:—

Anticipating the wedding for some time, but not knowing the exact date, the many friends of Forrest Kain, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Kain, of St. Joe, and Miss Bessie Wilder, daughter of Mrs. C. C. Wilder of Monmouth, will be most agreeably surprised to hear that the ceremony took place late this afternoon. Mr. Kain is in the employment of the government at Washington, D. C., arrived here today, and he and Miss Wilder, securing the license, went to the U. B. parsonage at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon, where the Rev. C. J. Miner, employing the ring ceremony, united them in marriage.

This evening, the nearest members of the two families, including the parents and brothers and sisters, with a very few intimate friends, will be at the Wilder home at Monmouth where a buffet luncheon will be served for the newly married couple. Ferns and other potted plants, both foliage and blooming, make a pretty setting for the party, while the handsome wedding cake, as a centerpiece, and ribbon streamer decorations, make pretty and appropriate table decorations.

The bride's costume includes a navy blue tailored suit with georgette blouse. A mole scarf harmonizes prettily with the hat of taupe and dark blue, and the dark blue velvet crown, stitched in taupe make a pretty combination. This costume will also be the bride's traveling suit for their trip to Washington, where they will make their home. They will leave Tuesday evening for that city.

Mr. Kain, who served for nearly two years overseas in the Rainbow Division, was promoted, during the course of his service to the office of Lieutenant. Prior to entering military service, he was engaged in school teaching, and served, among other places, at Spencerville where he was principal of the school. Mrs. Kain has likewise served as a teacher, having taught in the schools of both Adams and Wells counties. She was graduated from the Decatur high school in 1915, and supplemented this with a course at Angola, where she and Mr. Kain, who was also a student there, met.

She is pretty and popular, talented in many ways, possessing a personality just as pleasing as her personal appearance. Mr. Kain is a man of capability and merit, and their union is a source of much pleasure to their friends, who assure them of every good wish.

Obituary

Death has again visited our community and taken from us one of its oldest residents Mrs. Mary A. Scholes, daughter of Jacob and Barbara Swaidner. She was born near Salem, Ohio, July 18, 1831 and died in St. Joe, October 15, 1919, aged 88 years, 2 months and 27 days.

The deceased was united in marriage to Nelson Scholes, September 5, 1852, in Ashland County, Ohio. Mr. Scholes preceded her in death September 19, 1910. To this union were born six children two sons and four daughters. Mrs. Emma Abel, Auburn, Indiana, Mrs. Flora Tustison, St. Joe, Mrs. Ida Williams, Whiting, Indiana, Frank Scholes, St. Joe, J. N. Scholes, Johnstown, Pa., and Elida Scholes deceased. John Scholes son of Nelson Scholes by a former marriage, was so nearly associated with these children as to form one family group and to him the deceased gave all of the care common to motherhood.

Mrs. Scholes united with the Christian Church at Coburn's Corners and was baptized by the late Rev. L. L. Carpenter. During the last few years she had lived and worshipped in St. Joe, but continued her membership with the church at Coburn's Corners until called by death.

The funeral service was conducted in the St. Joe Christian Church October 17, 1919, by Rev. T. A. Manley. Her mortal remains were laid to rest in the Alton cemetery. E. R. Kinsey, director. A mother in Israel has gone but will never be forgotten.

Mrs. Marks Leaves Home

Cindia Marks of Condord township, left her five children, "without a mother's care of which they are sadly in need," states a divorce complaint filed in the circuit court by Parley H. Marks. The couple married April 11, 1903, and lived together until September 29, 1919, when, he says, she left home without any provocation, and without any fault on his part. Immediately prior to their separation, the husband says she abused and cursed him and threatened him with bodily harm. Upon different occasions she attempted to strike him with an axe, he says. She has an ugly temper and disposition the complaint states and continually nagged him. At different times, he says, she falsely accused him of associating with other women.

During their entire married life Mrs. Marks was negligent of her household duties, says her husband and she failed to give proper care to her children. The children are: Carrie Marie, aged fifteen; Irene, aged thirteen; Clarence, aged 12; William, aged eleven and Charles, aged eight. Marks says his wife is not a suitable person to have the custody of the children, and says she has no home for them, while he will maintain a home for them. They are now living with him and all of them are attending the public schools.

A new flivver has come to town and has taken up its abode in the T. A. Manley garage on Widney avenue, pastor of the Christian Church. As is customary for a new driver, the Reverend is enjoying the usual thrilling experiences that must come in order to get acquainted with the disposition of a Ford. It runs backward just as well as forward and will climb trees just as well running backward as forward, such was his experience on Friday. No doubt he will add some new equipment by way of a bumper on the rear end and a special headlight so it will not be necessary to turn around. The new owner stated that he would not be fully experienced until he had climed a few trees, broken over several fence posts and removed the garage from its foundation. If you chance to meet him, run for your life.

OCTOBER

New Designs in One-Piece Dress

The demand for the practical and very smart one-piece dress of serge or tricolette has in no way abated, advises a leading fashion writer. Indeed the new models of this sort of frock are so charming as well as so serviceable that no wardrobe is complete without at least one. Serge seems to have had its day, at least for the early fall and spring, for at this time the newer duvetyns and tricolettes are raging up and down the land.

It is hardly possible to describe the beauty of these one-piece frocks. When one has said they are of either of the two materials mentioned and that they are of the chemise type much has been told, but to appreciate fully the beauty and charm of such a dress one must see it. The trimmed hips prevail in the smartest of the new models. In fact, every dress, of whatever nature, reveals this fashion of adorning the hips. This is done either by so arranging the draperies that they give the desired extended line or by placing fringes, plaits, braid or frills in a decidedly extended effect along the hips and down the sides.

Curious Model Finds Favor.

There is one curious model which has attained a certain following which has waist and skirt cut all in one with no break whatever at the waist line, the whole presenting a perfectly flat back and front. At the hips the skirt is extended in a wide flare, suggesting pockets which stand well away from the body of the gown. Except for the line of buttons down the back or an occasional string belt this gown shows no other trimming. Obviously it is for the very slender, since the curved and more developed figures will not appear to advantage in a gown of such straight up and down effect that the skirt is little wider than the bodice.

Doubtless we shall grow a little tired of the emphasized trimming on the hips, but at this time it is well to recognize the fact that this sort of trimming is a distinct feature in the one-piece gown.

The coat dress simulating jackets or longer coats is ideal when developed in navy blue serge or duvetyn or tricolette. The latter fabric will probably be superseded as the season advances except in those cities where the climate permits lighter weight fabrics than the woolen.

I have observed a very charming coat dress of dark blue serge with a tight, narrow underskirt of the serge, ankle length, and over which there hangs a tunic of the serge somewhat fuller than most we see. The upper part of this dress has a short Eton jacket faced down the front with scarlet broadcloth, and this is toned down with black soutache. The scarlet cloth forms a rather narrow vest and a belt extending all the way around the waist. The sleeves are long and tight, of the coat type, and button at the wrist. This is an ideal morning dress for shopping or other practical street wear. Soft fur collars of fox or lynx are worn with this kind of dress.

French Styles Modified.

The duvetyn frocks are particularly lovely this year. They do not follow closely the French abbreviated sleeves and skirts, though the general idea of the French dresses, uncorseted, loose and scant, has been followed and modified to suit the American wearer. Many of the duvetyns have elaborately embroidered motifs on the skirts. Some have aprons of cloth thickly stitched with contrasting silk in good designs which enhance the beauty of the dress. They all have for the most part the new square cut neck, not nearly so decollete as earlier models were, and the sleeves may be short or long, as preferred. If short, they reach well to the elbow and flare. The longer sleeve is of the most tailored coat type and buttons at the wrist. Some of the makers do not adopt this method of closing a sleeve.

Fringe, ruffles and ribbons are to be reckoned with this fall. As to the fringe, many of the Parisian gowns of the most elaborate materials show it used in the most lavish way. For instance, over a gown of black satin there is placed an overdress of long and very heavy black silk fringe which hangs from the neck to the hem. At the waist the fringe is held in with a string belt ending with long silken tassels. From underneath this belt the long ends of the fringe hang out, and as they flare with every movement of the wearer the effect is distinctly Hawaiian or Samoan, where short skirts of a curious straw fringe are worn.

Two of these fringed silken frocks appeared the other day and were observed by all with intense interest, though the wearers scarcely seemed conscious of the concern they created.

Fringe on Duvetyn Dresses.

The duvetyn dresses, too, are being trimmed with this long fringe, as, for example, one finds a taupe duvetyn with the bodice made entirely of an uncut silken fringe placed over the duvetyn. The long apron tunic repeats a row of the fringe along the edge. Nothing has been more interesting than the continuation of this fringed trimming. It was so exploited two seasons ago that it comes as a slight surprise that it is still famed just now and seemingly more than ever. Undoubtedly we shall see much use of ribbon.

Ever Charming Velvet.

Velvet is the joy of every woman's heart. It used to be that most women waited until their daughters were married or at least fifty years had been reached before they could boast of a velvet gown. In those days a black velvet gown and some "real" lace and pearls were the synonyms of much wealth, therefore it is no wonder that all women longed for a velvet gown. Of course, velvet was frightfully expensive in those long ago times, but nowadays with duvetyn at $20 the yard, and peach bloom and tricolette close followers in this price, velvet seems almost economical. It is much used for the one-piece afternoon frock.

Not so much trimming is used on the velvet dresses. One excellent example is of black chiffon velvet with the draped hips so prevalent. The only trimming used is introduced at the neck in a half collar and on the sleeves in half cuffs of silver cloth embroidered in a beautiful shade of myrtle red. This fashion of making very small collars and cuffs is a lovely one, as charming touches of color can be cleverly used.

The very long overblouse of velvet or plaited satin or georgette is destined to become very popular, as it is a practical mode which all may follow. The new plaid skirts of the fine Scotch woolens are particularly good when topped with a tailored velvet overblouse of some harmonious color contrasting well with the mingled plaids. Everything in Paris reveals plaitings of some sort, bodices, skirts and indeed entire dresses being made of knife plaited or accordion plaited fabrics. The latter plaits are more satisfactory than the wider, as they are put in by machinery and do not come out so persistently as the others do.

Raised Waistlines.

Blue serge frocks show flounced skirts and raised waistlines.

SCRAPS of HUMOR

His Blessing.

A sergeant was so much given to using bad language on the parade ground that some of the men complained and the C. O. interviewed him, and told him not to let it happen again.

The following morning the sergeant was in charge of a very ragged squad, and after keeping silence for a considerable time, he eventually burst out with:

"Bless you, my pretty dears; you know what I mean."—Tit-Bits.

Should Be Rewarded.

"Smith wants a decoration for valor."

"But I thought he never went out to the front."

"No, he didn't; but he says it took no end of courage to turn up at the club every day in uniform."—London Opinion.

A Little Formality.

"Well, if you've had ten years' experience taking care of children, I think you'll do."

"I'll just take a look at the children and see if they'll do."

Edith—Yes, he was entirely too hard to please.

Edna—Gracious! How he must have changed since he proposed to you.

Hard Pressed.

"You seem thoughtful, girlie."

"Yes, papa wishes to know my reasons for wanting to marry Algy."

"Well?"

"I'm trying to think up a few."

BOY AGREED WITH HIS PA.

"You should always take somebody of your size."

"That's right, pa; these little fellows are so short that they can't help hitting below the belt."

The world to questions now doth run,
And makes the people fret,
For every time you answer one
You start another set.

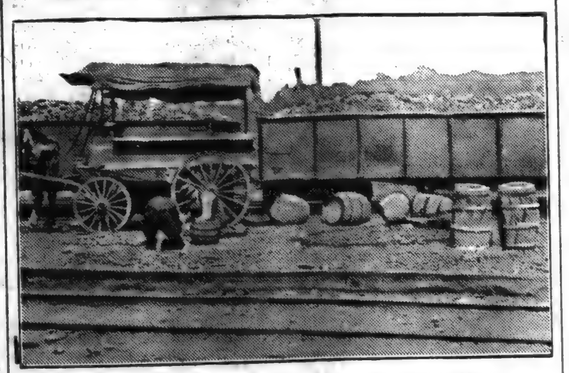
GOOD LOADING IN CARS AND PRECAUTIONS AGAINST DEVELOPMENT OF DISEASE URGED



Huckaters Salvaging Damaged Potatoes in Freight Yard.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Cars of fruit and vegetables are often dumped at large market terminals but persons who witness this proceeding should not conclude that this practice is uneconomic or done to keep up prices, according to men in the bureau of markets, United States department of agriculture. The wholesale dealer is not in a position to resort and repack damaged produce and often enough decay is present to render the produce unsalable in its original container or bulk shipment.

Sometimes hucksters do go over the damaged cars and salvage a limited amount of food. More often, however, the labor cost of such salvage work is greater than the value of the products saved.

Losses May Start on Farm.

There are many causes for loss of perishable foods between the farm field and the market. Some of these causes go back to the time crops are harvested. Take potatoes, for instance, which are injured in digging. Unless these injured potatoes are sorted out and not packed with the good potatoes, rot may develop in the shipment and spread rapidly to other potatoes, especially if the temperature in the car is favorable for rot to develop.

Another source of great loss in perishables is found in lack of care in loading. The packages must be spaced to permit air circulation and also braced to prevent shifting. Temperature can not be controlled in loads packed solid without any air spaces between the containers, while bracing must be carefully done or packages arrive containing only a part of their original contents.

Although care in packing, loading, and bracing cars of potatoes, cabbage, and the less perishable fruits and vegetables is necessary to prevent damage in ordinary freight cars, it is far more necessary for highly perishable products that move to market in refrigerator cars, such as strawberries, peaches, pears, grapes, lettuce, and celery. Such products, even with the best of care, may arrive at city terminals in damaged condition caused by delay in transportation, overripeness, or disease developed in transit because temperatures were not under control while the cars were en route.

Disease in Shipped Products.

In the case of plant diseases developed in transit, there may not have been any indication that the disease was present when the car was loaded, and perhaps the shipper thought that his crop was free from disease. Proper refrigeration—plenty of ice and air circulation—holds diseases in check and unless long delays in transit occur such perishable produce might arrive in good condition. Such shipments, however, often deteriorate rapidly after being unloaded and must be handled quickly and consumed before rot develops.

Through the food products inspection service of the department of agriculture, the facts concerning losses through plant diseases developed in transit are being studied and laboratories have been established at New York and Chicago to work on these diseases. Plant pathologists now report on shipments that develop disease and this information is made available to producers and shippers where the fruit and vegetables were grown, in order that prevention may begin in the field and packing house.

SECURING LABOR IS DIFFICULT PROBLEM

Maintenance of Steady Supply Worries Stock Farmer.

He Is Compelled to Use Temporary Help at Harvest Time Which, in Many Cases, Is Unreliable and Quite Expensive.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the most serious phases of the farm labor problem is the maintenance of a steady supply of labor and the interest of the laborer in farm operations. In both of these matters the farmer who has little or no live stock has a much more difficult problem to solve than the one who maintains the maximum amount of live stock consistent with his farm operations. For example, the farmer who devotes his entire effort to grain production or cotton production is confronted with a keen demand for labor at the most critical period in the crop year. He has the rush during the planting season, which shortly is followed by the tremendous demands of harvest. Between times, especially during the winter, this demand is not so urgent and he is, therefore, compelled to use temporary help (especially at harvest time), which, in many cases, is unreliable and expensive.

The farmer whose operations make possible the distribution of the maximum amount of labor throughout the year is in a much stronger position from every standpoint than the one who is compelled to call in large numbers of temporary helpers at critical times.

Live stock production is a year-round proposition and therefore makes possible such a distribution of labor. Furthermore, live stock are interesting to nearly all human beings. There is much more to interest the average man in watching the growth of the young animals or the fattening of feeders, and much less drudgery, even in feeding operations, than there is in the tilling of the soil and the cultivation of the crops. Beautiful as growing crops unquestionably are, and necessary as they are to the maintenance of live stock, the farm which only has growing crops lacks for most people the vital thing which is necessary to make country life attractive.

Many farmers recognize the appeal which animals have for the average man and cater to this in handling their employees. For example, there are cases where the farm owner gives the laborer a share in the animal produce of the farm, such, for example, as every tenth pig, which becomes the property of the man who takes care of the hogs, or a calf now and then, a lamb, etc.

Where there is a year-round requirement for labor it is also possible to utilize to better advantage the services of married men, and their wives and children can often be useful. Where laborers are not needed on the farm the year around there is not the advantage of this preference for married men.

THRASHING TO SAVE WHEAT

Farmers of Minnesota County Prevented Loss of $77,000 by Using Clean Methods.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Members of the farm bureau of Kittson county, Minnesota, saved $77,000, or about $500 to each thrashing machine, by using tight-bottom racks, canvas under the feeder, cleaning up when required after each setting of the machine during the thrashing season. A conservative estimate of the saving by clean thrashing by this county was 27,500 bushels of wheat, 20,400 bushels of oats, and 10,000 bushels of barley.

GENERAL FARM NOTES

The wise use of cover crops will conserve the fertility of the soil and better its physical condition in many cases.

* * *

In purchasing commercial fertilizer consider the cost of the crop to be grown as well as the price of the fertilizer.

* * *

A good dog is like a good son—he stays at home at night. Kept in good habits, he is a guardian rather than a murderer of sheep.

* * *

Few animals like rye as a steady diet as they do oats or corn. When rye is crushed and mixed with ground oats or corn it makes good horse feed.

Drain tile set over each celery plant blanches it nicely. Paper or boards may be used in cool weather, but are apt to decay the plants in warm weather.

* * *

Clover will contain the proper amount of dry matter to make good silage if allowed to stand until somewhat more than one-half of the blossoms are brown.

* * *

It is said that exposure to weather causes greater destruction to farm implements than using them. Avoid this loss by storing all machinery and tools properly under shelter before winter sets in.

And then I came upon a photograph hanging over the writing desk—a tall, Spanish-looking young woman of remarkable beauty. It needed but one glance to realize that here was Calypso's mother, and as was natural I stood a long time scanning the countenance that was so like the face which, from my first sight of it, had seemed the loveliest in the world. This was a flower that had been the mother of a flower. It was a face more primitive in its beauty, a little less touched with race than the one I loved, but the same fearless natural nobility was in it, and the figure had the same wild grace of pose, the same lithe strength of carriage.

Two or three days went by, but as yet there was no news of either Charlie Webster or Tobias. Nothing further had been heard of the latter in the settlement, and a careful patrolling of the neighborhood revealed no signs of him. Either his sailing away was a bona fide performance or he was lying low in some other part of the island—which of course would not be a difficult thing for him to do, as most of it was wilderness—and as, also, there were one or two coves on the deserted northern side where he could easily bide his time. Between that coast and us, however, lay some ten miles of scrub and mangrove swamps, and it was manifestly out of the question to patrol them too. There was nothing to do but watch and wait.

At last there came a message from Charlie Webster, another of his Caesarian notes: "Sorry delays few days longer. Any news?"

That seemed to decide the "king."

"What do you say, Ulysses," he said, "if we begin digging tomorrow? There are ten of us—with as many guns, four revolvers and plenty of machetes—not counting Calypso, who is an excellent shot herself."

I agreed that nothing would please me better—so an early hour the following morning found us with the whole garrison—excepting Samson, whom it had been thought wise to leave at home as a bodyguard for Calypso—lined up at the old ruined mansion with picks and shovels and machetes, ready to commence operations.

We had worked for a week before we made a clearance of the ground floor. Then at last we came upon a solidly built stone staircase, winding downward. After clearing away the debris with which it was choked to a depth of some twenty or thirty steps, we came to a stout wooden door studded with nails.

"The dungeon at last," said the "king."

"The kitchens, I bet," said I.

After some battering the door gave way with a crash, a moldering breath as of the grave met our nostrils, and a cloud of bats flew in our faces and set the negroes screaming. A huge cavernous blackness was before us. The "king" called for lanterns.

As we raised these above our heads and peered into the darkness, we both gave a laugh.

"'Yo—ho—ho—and a bottle of rum,'" sang the "king."

For all along the walls stood or lay prone on trestles, a silent company of hogsheads, festooned with cobwebs like huge black wings. It was the pirates' wine cellar!

* * * * * * *

Such was our discovery for that day, but there is another matter which I must mention—the fact that somehow the news of our excavation seemed to have got down to the settlement. It is a curious fact, as the "king" observed, that if a man should start to dig for gold in the center of Sahara, with no possible means of communicating with his fellows, on the third day there would not fail to be someone to drop in and remark on the fineness of the weather. So it was with us. As a general thing not once in a twelvemonth did a human being wander into that wilderness where the "king" had made his home. There was nothing to bring them there, and, as I have made clear, the way was not easy. Yet we had hardly begun work when one and another idle nigger strolled in from the settlement and stood grinning his curiosity at our labors.

Toward evening of the third day we came upon a passage leading out of one of the cellars; it had such a promising appearance that we kept at work later than usual, and the sun had set and night was rapidly falling as we turned homeward.

As we came in sight of the house we were struck by the peculiar hush about it, and there were no lights in the windows.

"No lights!" the "king" and I exclaimed together, involuntarily hurrying our steps, with a foreboding of we knew not what in our hearts. As we crossed the lawn the house loomed up dark and still and the door opening onto the loggia was a square of blackness in a gloom of shadows hardly less profound. Not a sound, not a sign of life!

"Calypso!" we both cried out, as we rushed across the loggia. "Calypso! where are you"—but there was no answer; and then I, being ahead of the "king," stumbled over something dark lying across the doorway.

"Good heaven! what is this?" I cried, and bending down I saw that it was Samson.

The "king" struck a match. Yes! it was Samson, poor fellow, with a dagger firmly planted in his heart.

Near by something white caught my eye attached to the lintel of the doorway. It was a piece of paper held there with a sailor's knife. I tore it off in a frenzy, and—the "king" striking another match—we read it together. It bore but a few words, written all in capital letters with a coarse pencil:

"WILL RETURN THE LADY IN EXCHANGE FOR THE TREASURE," and it was signed "H. P. T."

CHAPTER VII.

In Which I Lose My Way.

"The audacity of the fellow!" exclaimed the "king," who was the first to recover.

"But Calypso!" I cried.

The "king" laid his hand on my shoulder reassuringly.

"Don't be afraid for her," he said. "I know my daughter."

"But I love her!" I cried, thus blurting out in my anguish what I had designed to reveal in some tranquil chosen hour.

"I have loved her for twenty years," said the "king," exasperatingly calm. "'Jack Harkaway' can take care of himself."

I was not even astonished at the time.

"But something must be done," I cried. "I will go to the commander at once and rouse the settlement. Give me a lantern," I called to one of the negroes, who by this had come up to us, and were standing around in a terrified group. I waited only for it to be lit, and then, without a word, dashed wildly into the forest.

"Hadn't you better take someone with you?" I heard the "king" call after me, but I was too distraught to reply, plunging headforemost through the tangled darkness—my brain boiling like a cauldron with anger and a thousand fears, and my heart stung, too with wild, unreasoning remorse. After all, it was my doing.

"To think! to think! to think!" I cried aloud—leaving the rest unspoken.

I meant that it had all come of my insensate pursuit of that filthy treasure, when all the time the only treasure I coveted was Calypso herself. Poor old ignorant Tom had been right after all. Nothing good came of such enterprises. There was a curse upon them from the beginning. And then, as I thought of Tobias, my body shook so that I could hardly keep on walking, and next minute my hatred of him so nerved me up that I ran on through the brush like a madman, my clothes clutched at by the devilish vines and torn at every yard.

I fled past the scene of our excavations, looking more haunted than ever in the flashing gleam of the lantern. With an oath I left them behind, as the accursed cause of all this evil; but I cannot have gone by them many yards when suddenly I felt the ground giving way beneath me with a violent jerk. My arms went up in a wild effort to save myself, and then, in a panic of fright, I felt myself shooting downward as one might fall down the shaft of a mine. Vainly I clutched at rocky walls as I sped down in the earth-engulfing darkness. I seemed to be falling forever, and for a moment my head cleared and I had time to think of the crash that was coming at the end of my fall—a crash which, I said to myself, must mean death. It came with sudden crunching pain, a swift tightening round my heart, as though black ropes were being lashed tightly about it, squeezing out my breath; then entire blackness engulfed me and I knew no more.

* * * * * * *

How long I lay there in the darkness I cannot tell. All I remember is suddenly opening my eyes on intense blackness and vaguely wondering where I was. My head seemed entirely detached from my body, of which so far I was unconscious. But presently the realization of it returned, and involuntarily I tried to move—to find with a sort of indifferent mild surprise that it was impossible.

So there I lay, oddly content, in the dark—the pungent smell of the earth my only sensation, and my head uselessly clear.

The remembrance of what had happened began to grow in force and keenness and, of a sudden, the thought of Calypso smote me like a sword! Spurred to desperate effort, I stood up on the instant and leaned against a rocky wall. Miracle of miracles! I could stand. I was not dead, after all. I was not, indeed, so far as I could tell, seriously hurt. Badly bruised, of course—but no bones broken. It seemed incredible, but it was so. The realization made me feel weak again, and I sat down with my back propped up against the rock, and waited for more strength.

Slowly my thoughts fumbled around the situation. Then, as by force of habit, my hand went to my pocket. God be praised! I had matches, and I cried with thankfulness, out of very weakness. But I still sat on in the dark for a while. I felt very tired. After thinking about it for a long time, I took out my precious matchbox, which unconsciously I had been hugging with my hand, and struck a light, looking about me in a dazed fashion. The match burnt down to my fingers, and I threw it away, as the flame stung me. I had seen something of my surroundings, enough to last my tired brain for a minute or two. I was at the bottom of a sort of crevasse, a narrow cleft in the rocks which continued on in a slanting downward chasm into the darkness. It was a natural corridor, with a floor of white sand. The sand had accounted for my coming off without any broken bones.

After another minute or two I struck another match, and lo! another miracle. There was my lantern lying beside me. The glass of it was broken, but that was no matter. As I lit the wick my hopes leapt up with the flame. At the worst I had light.

I swung my lantern aloft, seeking the possibilities of a climb, but everywhere it was sheer, without a ledge or protuberance of any kind to take advantage of, and it was utterly devoid of vegetation—not a sign of a friendly shrub or root to hold by.

I had sense enough to know that I was too tired to think profitably, and drowsiness coming over me told me that an hour or two's sleep would give me the strength I needed to renew with a will and more chances of success my efforts to escape.

Light was too precious to waste, so I blew out my lantern, and, curling up on the sand, almost instantly fell asleep. But before I lapsed into unconsciousness I had clutched hold of one sustaining thought in the darkness—the assurance of Calypso's safety, so confidently announced by her father: "Don't be afraid for her. I know my daughter." Whatever happened to me, she would come out all right. As her brave shape flashed before my mind's eye, down there under the earth, I could have no doubt of that.

My instinct had been right in giving way to my drowsiness, for I woke up from my sleep a new man. How long I had been there, of course, I had no means of knowing; but I fancy I must have slept a good while, for I felt so refreshed and full of determination to tackle my escape in good earnest.

I had hardly relit my lantern when its rays revealed something which it seemed impossible for anyone with eyes, however weary, to have overlooked.

In the right-hand corner of the little cavern, five or six feet above my head, was a dark hole, like the entrance to a tunnel, or, more properly speaking a good-sized burrow—for it was scarcely more than a yard in diameter. It seemed to be something more than a mere cavity in the rock, for, when I flashed my lantern up to it I could see no end. To climb up to it at first seemed difficult; but providentially, I had a stout clasp knife in my pocket, and with this I cut a step or two in the porous rock, and so managed it. Lying flat on my stomach, I looked in.

It was, as I had thought, a narrow natural tunnel, snaking through the rocks—as often happens in those curious fantastic coral formations—for all the world, indeed, as if it had been made ages ago by some monstrous primeval serpent, a giant wormhole, no less, leading—heaven alone knew where.

There was just room to crawl along it on all fours, so I started cautiously making sure I had my precious matches and my jackknife all safe.

I progressed, I should say, for some twenty or thirty yards, when, to my inexpressible relief, I came out, still on all fours, onto a spreading floor; then, standing up, I perceived that I was in a cave of considerable loftiness and some forty feet or so across. It was good to breathe again such comparatively free air; yet, as I looked about and made the circuit of the walls, I saw that I had but exchanged one prison for another. There was this difference, however: whereas there had only been one passageway from the cave I had just left, there were several similar outlets from that in which I now stood. Two or three of them proved to be nothing but alcoves that ran a few yards and then stopped.

But there were two close by each other which seemed to continue on. There was not much choice between them, but as both made in the same direction, so far as I could judge the direction in which I had so far progressed, I decided to take the larger one. It proved to be a passage much like the tunnel I had already traversed, only a little roomier, and therefore it was easier going, and it, too, brought me out, as had the other, on another cavern—but one considerably larger in extent.

I had stumbled on something like a Monte Cristo suite of underground apartments. And here for a moment I released my imagination from her blinders, and allowed her to play around these strange halls. And in one of her suggestions there was some comfort. It was hardly likely that caverns of such extent had waited for me to discover them. They must surely have been known to Teach, or whatever buccaneer it was who had occupied the ruined mansion not so very far above ground.

I set about the more carefully to examine every nook and corner. Two iron staples imbedded in one of the walls, with rusting chains and manacles attached, were melancholy proof of one of the uses to which the place had once been put. Melancholy for certain unhappy souls long since free of all mortal chains, but for me—need I say it?—exceedingly joyous. For if there had been a way to bring prisoners here it was none the less evident that there had been a way to take them out. But how and where! Again I searched every nook and cranny. There was no sign of entrance anywhere.

Then a thought occurred to me. What if the entrance were after the manner of a medieval oubliette—through the ceiling! There was a thought indeed to send one's hopes soaring. I ran in my eagerness through one cavern after another, holding my lantern aloft. That must be the solution. There could be no other way. I sought and sought, but alas! it was a false hope, and I threw myself down in a corner in despair, deciding that the prisoners must have been forced to crawl in as I had—though it was hardly like jailers to put themselves to such inconvenience.

I leaned back against the wall and gazed listlessly upward. Next moment I had bounded to my feet again. Surely I had seen some short, regular lines running up the face of the rock, like a ladder. I raised my lantern. Sure enough, they were iron rounds set in the face of the rock, and they mounted up till I lost them in the obscurity, for the cave here must have been forty feet high. Blessed heaven! I was saved!

THEY TURNED AWAY DAZEDLY

Young Couple in Search of an Apartment Run Into Unusual Landlord.

They were swapping yarns at the athletic club the other night and Frank Garbutt told this one, though he doesn't vouch for its veracity.

"The young husband touched the landlord's doorbell timidly and his wife just as timidly sought his hand, when the door banged open and a fierce, bewhiskered man confronted them.

"H-have you an apartment to rent?" piped the young husband.

"Have you any children?" roared the landlord, running a sinewy hand through his whiskers.

"No," replied the young husband, promptly.

"Any dogs?" blared the landlord.

"Not a one," chirped the young wife.

"Well, then," said the landlord triumphantly, "you can't get in here. We never rent apartments to people who haven't children or dogs."

The door slammed in their faces and they turned away dazedly.

A Look Ahead.

"Can you really tell anything about the future?"

"Oh, yes," said the fortune teller, "I know, for instance, that my landlord ain't going to get his rent next month."

Many Do.

"Do you believe everything you hear?"

"Everything that is scandalous."

He Knew Donkeys.

A teacher was instructing a class in English. She called on a small boy named Jimmy Brown.

"James," said she, "write on the board 'Richard can ride a donkey if he wants to.'"

Jimmy did so to the satisfaction of all concerned.

"Now," continued the teacher, when Jimmy had returned to his place, "can you find a better form for that sentence?"

"Yes, miss. 'Richard can ride the donkey if the donkey wants him to.'"

Organize Fire Fighters Permanently.

The rural fire-fighting companies organized in war time by the farm bureaus of California have proved so successful that they are being organized this year for use in the present fire season. Most of the counties report that the equipment has been overhauled, repaired when necessary, and that the companies have been brought up to full strength and ready for work. In a number of counties the companies have been called out for service.

Last week we failed to mention an item of importance concerning the results of the hunt as put on by the St. Joe Gun Club on Saturday, October 11. The club consists of Harry Kees, Manager of the Standard Oil Co., at Marion; Earl Stoops, Salesman, Marion; John J. Marcus, Chief Clerk, South Bend; Ralph McClellan, Salesman, Auburn; T. B. The day began with a steady rain and continued steadily but the boys had come to hunt and they did so. When they came in four rabbits had been captured. Had the weather been good they sure would have had a fine hunt as the game is plentiful.

TENNESSEE LAMB AND WOOL MARKETING CLUBS NOW IN SUCCESSFUL OPERATION

Sheep Are Prize Mortgage Lifters When Well Managed.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Lamb and wool marketing clubs have been in successful operation in Tennessee for more than 25 years. They were the outcome of unsatisfactory marketing conditions in the lamb-producing sections of Tennessee. The plan originated at Goodletsville, where there is a club with a membership of 50 persons living within a radius of three miles from the shipping stations, and its success has prompted farmers in other sections to organize in a similar manner.

The organization of these clubs is comparatively simple. The officers consist of a president and a secretary-treasurer, who, with three other members, form an executive committee, the chairman of which is the secretary-treasurer. The annual meeting for the election of officers is held early in the spring, that each member may report the number of lambs and the amount of wool that he will have to sell.

Sold to Highest Bidder.

The secretary-treasurer advertises for sealed bids on the lambs owned by the club. The advertisement indicates the number, grade, and quality of the lambs and the date shipment will be made. The lambs are then sold at the shipping point to the highest bidder, the executive committee reserving the privilege of rejecting all bids in case they seem too low. On the shipping date the executive committee is on hand to grade the lambs brought in by each farmer. All lambs not up to the advertised standard are returned to the farmer, who either holds them over for some future shipment or sells them at a sacrifice. This has the beneficial influence of training the owners to deliver only those lambs which will come within the grades advertised by the committee.

The day for the wool sale is advertised, that bidders may be on hand to see the fleeces, which are graded into No. 1, clear; No. 2, slightly burry; No. 3, burry; and No. 4, hard burry. Each grade is weighed, and sealed bids are received by the committee, which also reserves the privilege of rejecting all bids.

All Share Equally.

The farmer who owns a small flock of ewes has the same advantage in marketing his lambs as the large producer. Expenses are made proportionate and all receive the benefit of competitive bids. The results are seen principally in the better prices obtained. It is stated freely that the club members receive from $1 to $2 a hundredweight more for lambs of the same grade and 2 cents per pound more for wool than farmers in the community who have not the benefit of co-operative selling. The members are encouraged to follow uniform methods in breeding and handling their flocks, with the result that the clubs have an established reputation in many of the large markets for the uniformity and high quality of their lambs and wool

COMPLAIN AT PRICE OF ACID PHOSPHATE

Figures Quoted by Manufacturers Are Too High.

Strikes and Car Shortage in Florida and Tennessee Fields Have Combined to Reduce Production and Shipments.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The United States department of agriculture has received numerous complaints regarding the price of acid phosphate as compared with the prices of mixed fertilizers. The price quoted by manufacturers during the spring of 1919 to dealers or individuals ordering 20 tons or more was $24 a ton f. o. b. Baltimore, Philadelphia and Carteret. The price asked for the fall trade is $22.50 a ton.

It will be recalled that the department on June 7 issued a statement to the effect that farmers should be able to obtain mixed fertilizer in the fall of 1919 at prices approximately 30 per cent lower than those which prevailed in the spring. This statement was based upon information that had been obtained from manufacturers, but it was expressly stated that the price of acid phosphate was being further investigated. Obviously, the price of this material has not decreased by 30 per cent, and the department, in letters to manufacturers, has expressed the view that the prices quoted above are too high.

It has also advised all acid phosphate manufacturers that in the future it will require them to base the price of straight acid phosphate, as a separate commodity, on the actual cost of the materials of manufacture and sale, plus a reasonable profit, and that the cost of manufacturing mixed goods must not be prorated on that portion of the acid phosphate which is sold as such.

Since the prices of acid phosphate were indicated to the department by the fertilizer manufacturers, the prices of crude acid phosphate have advanced to such a point that the dry mixers, who buy the crude material, crush, mill, screen, and bag it, complain that they can not handle it with a profit at the price they had agreed to sell it for. Strikes in Florida and car shortages in both the Florida and Tennessee fields have combined to reduce production and shipments. The department has laid the situation fully before the railroad administration and has urged that sufficient cars be made available for fertilizer deliveries in the interest of crop production.

It has also notified the phosphate miners and the acid phosphate manufacturers that the present prices of rock phosphate, or of acid phosphate, must not be advanced without submitting the proposed increases to the department, accompanied by specific data showing any real and unavoidable increase that may have occurred in the costs of production. Such increase in costs, in the opinion of the department, would be the only possible justification for any advance in the prices that prevailed in June. The department holds that a mere shortage of supply in the existing circumstances is not in itself a sufficient justification for increased prices.

GOOD COVER FOR HAYSTACKS

Ample Protection Afforded by Layer of Coarse Grass, Such as Millet, Sudan or Sorghum.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

High price of hay makes it essential that farmers top off their hay stacks with proper covers for protection of the dry forage against weathering. A cheap and simple cover for any stack or rick of hay may be made by spreading a layer, about four inches thick, of some coarse grass such as millet, sudan grass, fine sorghum, or some coarse wild grass over the top of the stack or rick, placing long poles over the hay, and then binding these poles permanently in place by the use of wires weighted down at both ends. Where the hay is stacked out of doors in oblong ricks a satisfactory cover may often be made by using 12-inch boards 1 to 1¼ inches in thickness, cut as long as the rick, which may be wired together and lapped like shingles to form a satisfactory cover over the hay. Some farmers have been successful in using crimped galvanized roofing or corrugated roofing with the edge bent to interlock in the same manner as a protection for hay-ricks.

Old sows farrow heavier pigs than young sows do.

Alfalfa is a great feed for the brood sow in summer and winter.

Alfalfa provides a large amount of nutriment for every kind of stock.

* * *

Horse kindness: Load lightly and drive slowly. Stop in the shade if possible.

Give the colt plenty of room in which to stretch his legs, but better not let him follow into the field.

Fresh air and sunlight combat disease in the stable. Dairy barns should be airy barns. Ventilation is conservation.

Hogs should be supplied with suitable green forage and so managed as to consume as much of it without waste as possible, since forage is by far the cheapest feed that can be used.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

THE OPERA GLASSES.

"Hello, other end," said one end of the opera glasses.

"Hello, other end," answered the end that had been spoken to.

"I can make things look so far, far away," said the end which had spoken first, which we will call Tiny View.

"I can make things look so very near," said the other end, which we will call Big View.

"I can make things look so funny and small," said Tiny View.

"But I can make things look so near and so large," said Big View.

"I like my part better," said Tiny View. "It is more interesting not to be able to see things so near. They look more mysterious at a distance."

"I don't know that I agree with you," said Big View.

"Why not?" asked Tiny View.

"You would hardly expect me to, would you?" asked Big View.

"I don't see why," said Tiny View.

"You wouldn't want to be in my place, would you?" asked Big View.

"Oh, no, certainly not," said Tiny View.

"Well, there you have it," said Big View.

"Have what?" asked Tiny View.

"You like your way because it is your way and because you are used to it," said Big View, "and I like my way because I am used to it. That's the way we are."

"I see," said Tiny View.

"What fun I do have at the theater or at the opera," said Big View.

"I have a good time, too," said Tiny View, "for children like to look through me and they like to say, 'Oh, how funny the stage looks, and the people look so small, and everything looks so far, far away.' It gives them a quite different idea of the stage and the people acting."

"Of course it does," said Big View. "Well, I like the work I have to do. I like to make things seem near at hand, to make them stand out clear and plain."

"But when things are far away, isn't it wrong to make them look near?"

"Children Like to Look."

asked Tiny View. "Isn't that the least bit deceitful?"

"Of course not," said Big View angrily.

"Oh, I didn't mean to annoy you," said Tiny View. "I was only asking a question."

"It is no more deceitful than for you to make them see things far away."

"I suppose that is so," said Tiny View. "I hadn't thought about it that way before."

"You hadn't looked into the matter closely enough," laughed Big View.

"Well," said Tiny View, "we're each rather clever in our own way. You can make things near which aren't and I can make things look far away which aren't so far off at all."

"We're not clever," said Big View.

"Who is clever then, if we aren't?" asked Tiny View.

"The one who made us," said Big View.

"Well, the one who made us must have seen that we were going to do our work properly and were the sort of things he could employ."

"To be sure," agreed Big View. "That is what we do, and what we must always do—our work—properly."

"We do have such a good time," said Tiny View.

"That's why we should do our work well," said Big View. "We should show that we are grateful."

"We'll always be friends, won't we?" asked Tiny View.

"Of course we will," said Big View. "I remember seeing a beautiful dance once," said Tiny View, "and all the little tiny creatures dancing were so lovely."

"I remember that lovely dance," said Big View, "but all the creatures I saw were quite, quite large."

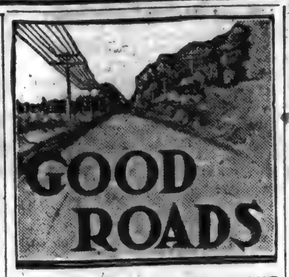
"Ha, ha," said Tiny View, "we were looking at it from different ends, for we are different, aren't we?"

"To be sure," said Big View, "but we're both lucky, for we're taken to theaters and operas and we see the great singers and dancers and actors and actresses and give folks great treats—so they can look at things in two most interesting ways with the aid of their own perfectly good eyes! And also by moving us to focus us just right."

Anxious.

Waiter—All right, sir, all right. You'll get served in time.

Diner—Well, rush it. I want to get through this meal before the prices rise again.



GOOD ROADS

BIG GOOD ROAD BOND ISSUE

Dallas County, Texas, Votes $6,500,000 for Construction of Complete Belt Line.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The largest bond issue ever submitted in any county in Texas and one of the largest voted anywhere in the country was ratified by a big majority recently in Dallas county, Texas. It provides $6,500,000 for a complete belt line around the county, with 12 roads radiating from Dallas to all sections and six intermediate roads connecting the radial highways. The system provides for 332 miles of road, and in addition feeder roads amounting to about one hundred miles will be improved by the decrease in maintenance expenses. Federal aid amounting to $250,000 had been allotted to Dallas county for its highway development, and it is expected that a large number of motortrucks will be assigned to assist in the construction work. The favorable reception of the big bond issue in this county is expected by officials of the bureau of public roads, United States department of agriculture, to have a favorable effect on similar proposals elsewhere. Road building in Texas is at high tide. State highway engineers estimate that more than $20,000,000 worth of roads are now under construction.

WIND HELPS ROAD BUILDERS

When Used in Construction of Highways in New Mexico Experiment Is Successful.

A new method of using the wind in sand-road construction has proved so successful, that, after making a nine-mile experimental stretch in New Mexico, roadmakers in that state have built 80 miles of similar highways. First of all, the grass and weeds are cleared from the right of way, and then a trench is made through the sand to the clay bottom. The loose sand is deposited in stacks ten feet from either side of the cut, and the rest of the work is left to the desert winds. During the spring and fall, the winds sweep away all the sand and widen the clay strip. Then the road is graded and the work finished.

COUNTRY NEEDS MORE ROADS

Improved Highways Influence Every Branch of Economic and Financial Structure.

There is no doubt about it, the country needs more good roads. It has become an economic necessity that our roads be improved because good roads influence every branch and twig of the social, economic and financial structure of the nation.

Good roads decrease the cost of living—bad roads increase it. Good roads save labor—poor roads spend it. A community with good roads has an unlimited trade area, while a community with poor roads has limited trade area.

IGNORANCE PARTNER OF MUD

Motorists Complain That Farmers in Bad Roads Districts Know Nothing About Roads.

As a rule, ignorance accompanies mud. Many motorists in bad roads districts, stopping to ask a farmer information about roads not ten miles away, have found that the farmer had never traveled so far way and could give no directions.

Up to People Interested.

The success of state and national aid to road construction and road improvement will depend upon the interest the people take.

Earth Road Is Foundation.

The earth road is the foundation upon which all other surfaces are placed, and upon which we should depend for the load-carrying capacity.

Water for the Dog.

See to it that the dog has plenty of cold water to drink in hot weather.

LESSON FOR OCTOBER 26

A LESSON IN TRUST.

LESSON TEXT—Matt. 14:22-33.

GOLDEN TEXT—I believe; help thou mine unbelief.—Mark 9:24.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Mark 5:22-24; 35-43; Luke 17:12-23.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Help in the storm.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus comes to the help of his disciples.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—Help when most needed.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—An ever-present helper.

The storm-tossed disciples on the sea at night is an example of the struggling followers of the Lord in the darkness of the present age, as they are tossed by the tempests of the evil one.

I. The Disciples on the Storm-tossed Sea (vv. 22-24).

1. They were sent across the sea by Christ (v. 22). Doubtless his reason for this was to keep them from entanglement in the movements of the people to make him king, for in John 6:14, 15 it is shown that the people were so excited by the feeding of the five thousand that they were about to make him king by force. Though they were somewhat unwilling to go, it was a mercy for him to constrain them.

2. Christ dismissed the multitude (v. 22). This may be taken as typical of his rejection of the nation whose rulers had already rejected him.

3. Christ praying alone in the mountain (v. 23). Temptation to earthly honor and power had come to him, therefore he went to the Father in prayer for relief and strength. The need of prayer is greatest at such times. While his prayer was in part for himself, yet it was for his disciples. According to Mark 6:48, he saw from the mountain top the disciples toiling on the storm-tossed sea. We are never out of his sight as we struggle against the storms of life, and he ever lives to make intercession for us.

II. Jesus Walking on the Sea (vv. 25-27).

1. It was in the fourth watch of the night (v. 25). He did not come to them immediately, but waited till almost dawn. It was, however, the darkest part of the night, and physical danger was great, but their perplexity of mind was greater. They knew that the Lord had sent them, but why should they be in such straits if he sent them? A stormy sea is no evidence that we are not in the Lord's appointed way. The disciples' concern should be to obey the commands of the Lord, being assured that while doing his will he will protect them.

2. The disciples alarmed at his coming (v. 26). It was the coming of their best friend to deliver them from danger. He comes to us today in such ways that sometimes we are affrighted.

3. Jesus' words of comfort and good cheer (v. 27). In the midst of their distress they heard the Master's words, "Be of good cheer; it is I, be not afraid." This changed their fear into joy.

III. Peter's Venture and Failure (vv. 28-33).

As soon as Peter recognized the voice of Jesus he cried, "Bid me come to thee on the water." Jesus said, "Come." Peter obeyed, and for a time he walked upon the waves without sinking. His simple faith linked him with divine power and he was upheld; but as soon as he took his eyes off his Lord and considered the raging sea he began to sink. If we will but keep our eyes on the Lord instead of the waves we can outride the storms of life. When Peter began to sink, he did the sensible thing; he cried to the Lord for help. Jesus reached forth his hand and saved him. He has never lost one who honestly cried for help. When Jesus entered the ship the wind ceased. The people worshiped him as the Son of God. No ship can go down with Jesus on board.

Hath Not Where to Lay His Head.

People are to be pitied who have no home. John Howard Payne in Paris, homeless and miserable, uttered the universal longing of the human heart when in a cold and dreary garret he wrote the words of "Home, Sweet Home." There are many people in the world who are driven from pillar to post, and who can say of no spot on earth, "This is my home." Think particularly of him who had come from his Father's House to this inhospitable earth and who said, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head."

Sublime Sentiment.

"Beware," said Lavater, "of him who hates the laugh of a child." "I love God and little children," was the simple yet sublime sentiment of Richter.—Mrs. Sigourney.

The Heart of the Believer.

The heart of the believer is the home of God. The church of the Lord Jesus is his holy temple. He dwells here by his Holy Spirit, and makes known through the church, to the principalities and the powers in the heavenly places, his manifold wisdom. This is a superlative honor. It brings with a supreme obligation.

One Thing at a Time.

The shortest way to do many things is to do only one thing at a time.—Cecil.

HOW TO AVOID BACKACHE AND NERVOUSNESS

Told by Mrs. Lynch From Own Experience.

Providence, R. I.—"I was all run down in health, was nervous, had headaches, my back ached all the time, I was tired and had no ambition for anything. I had taken a number of medicines which did me no good. One day I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for women, so I tried it. My nervousness and backache and headaches disappeared. I gained in weight and feel fine, so I can honestly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any woman who is suffering as I was."—Mrs. ADELINE B. LYNCH, 100 Plain St., Providence, R. I.

Backache and nervousness are symptoms or nature's warnings, which indicate a functional disturbance or an unhealthy condition which often develops into a more serious ailment.

Women in this condition should not continue to drag along without help, but profit by Mrs. Lynch's experience, and try this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—and for special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Med. Co., Lynn, Mass.

INDIANA NEWS

Indianapolis. — Recommendations that three persons be pardoned, eighteen be paroled, six receive sentence commutations, one a ninety-day parole, and that clemency be refused to thirty-one, are contained in the report of the state board of pardons covering the board's September session and submitted to Governor Goodrich.

Muncie.—"There is only one city in the state of Indiana in which is maintained a well-known 'red light' district, and that is your city, Muncie," declared Dr. W. F. King, assistant secretary of the state board of health, addressing 200 members of the Commercial club at a luncheon. Doctor King was discussing the efforts of federal, state and local authorities to eliminate venereal diseases.

Wabash.—The county commissioners have dropped their investigations of alleged discrepancies on road work in the county, after changes had been ordered and agreed to on the roads in question. The commissioners charged that road contractors were not doing the work according to the plans and specifications. On one road only three inches of gravel was placed, when the plans called for six inches, it is said.

St. Louis, Mo.—Direct appeal to America to meet the problems growing out of the war, just as Americans in the past have faced and safely bridged crises which have confronted the nation, Gov. James P. Goodrich of Indiana addressed the annual convention of the Grain Dealers' National association. Radicalism and class spirit and all that they lead to were denounced in strong terms by the Indiana governor.

Evansville.—Evansville people are now bestirring themselves to lay in their winter's supply of coal, and dealers are unable to fill all orders. Some of the largest manufacturing concerns of the city have not laid in coal, and in the event a strike is called and the western and northern Kentucky mines are not operated, the manufacturing plants of Evansville will run short of fuel. Coal mines in southern Indiana continue to operate part time, the operators being unable to get cars to handle their entire output.

Lawrenceburg.—Meredith J. Sullivan, a tobacco grower, sold a small but extra good crop of tobacco to a local tobacco broker for 50 cents a pound for the crop of about 3,000 pounds. There probably has never been a time in the history of the local tobacco market when both producer and buyer of tobacco were as much at sea as they are now concerning the price range for the 1919 crop. Speculators have already made their appearance in this county and are looking over the various tobacco crops. John W. Clayton, a local tobacco broker, has contracted for 20,000 pounds of tobacco at 25 cents a pound.

Indianapolis.—The official program for the tri-state forestry conference, which is to be held in Indianapolis October 22 and 23 under the direction of the Indiana department of conservation, has been completed and made public by Richard Lieber, Indiana director. Leaders in wood-using industries, state and national officials and scientists and experts from throughout the nation have places on the program. The conference was called by the governors of Indiana, Illinois and Ohio in an effort to arouse the public and wood-using industries to the need of action if our future timber supply is to be assured; to formulate definite and practical working policies of state forestry and to outline a comprehensive legislative program and secure needed legislation. Scarcity of timber is becoming alarming and little is now being done to check its rapid disappearance.

Washington, D. C.—Pensions of $25 have been granted the following Indianians: Mary L. Sears, Anderson; Martha J. Poorman, Saratoga; Esther McElvain, Winchester; Sophia Koch, Laporte; Sarah L. Jones, Twelve Mile; Sina I. Gelmann, Indianapolis; Josephine Hurley, Ewing; Hulda Haycock, Bethlehem; Sarah A. Fauber, Logansport; Theodocia E. St. Clair, Terre Haute; Mary A. McAllister, Tell City; Sarah C. Lank, Greencastle; Phebe A. Hall, Tippecanoe; Bertha A. Gilmore, Frankfort; Laura A. Blackburn, Decatur; Phoebe A. White, Brazil; Edith Connelly, Bedford; Elisabeth Mineka, Columbia City; Margaret J. Richardson, Franklin; Catherine N. Wylie, Bloomington; Louverna Rease, Evansville; Anna M. Diehl, Elkhart. A pension of $30 has been granted Jasper C. Weaver of Elnora, and a pension of $20 has been granted Peter Osmar of Lafayette.

Gary.—Five hundred soldiers of the Sixth division, who have been on guard here, were entrained for Camp Grant, Ill., a few days ago, leaving only the 800 men originally sent from Fort Sheridan, Ill., on patrol duty. This is taken to indicate that the situation here, from the military point of view, is well in hand. While some of the troops were sent away, a shipment of tear-gas shells is coming for use in a possible outbreak, not now expected. The tear-gas shells are deemed useful, inasmuch as "they cause copious flow of tears and hinder sight, but do no permanent injury."

Hammond.—Rigid examinations of aliens who ask for naturalization papers in the federal and superior courts of Lake county will be demanded henceforth, and federal authorities will decline to give applicants full citizenship papers unless fully convinced that they are not technical alien enemies.

Greensburg.—A disease that is puzzling veterinarians has appeared among the hogs on the James A. Burns farm, near Alert. Several of the hogs have died, although all have been vaccinated. Some veterinarians believe the disease is cholera and others declare it is a hog plague. The hogs are first attacked by a sort of locomotor ataxia, it is said.

Wabash.—Farmers of Chester township are of the opinion that clover seed at $28 a bushel is too expensive to be kept in the barn. A report compiled by the county agent shows that nine of every ten farmers in that township keep their clover seed in the house under a lock, while one farmer has kept his clover seed in the vault of the Indiana State bank of North Manchester for the last two years.

Goshen.—The threat has been made by Elkhart county farmers, who have retained legal counsel, that unless the Indiana state board of tax commissioners rescinds its recent order for a 25 per cent flat increase on all farm lands and improvements in Elkhart township, injunction proceedings will be filed against Allen R. Bemendorfer, county auditor, to prevent him from entering the increased assessments on the tax duplicate.

Indianapolis.—Jesse E. Eschbach, chief examiner for the state board of accounts, after a conference with the state board of tax commissioners pointed out that a township assessors' year begins January 1, and that a township assessor entitled to an increase in salary under the new tax law can not call for the increase at once, but must wait until the first of the succeeding calendar year before the increases becomes effective.

East Chicago.—The home of a man who had returned to work in the mills was stoned by a striker. A squad of guards was sent to arrest the stone thrower and when several strikers jeered the guards, they were locked up on charges of insulting the uniform of the United States army. The offense carries a heavy penalty. Gen. Harry B. Smith, commanding the State Guards on strike duty in this district, ordered the companies at Richmond, Newcastle, Evansville and Madison to report here for duty.

Colfax.—Three persons were killed here and a fourth is in a hospital at Lebanon, probably fatally hurt, as the result of a Big Four passenger train hitting the automobile in which they had been traveling. The dead, all members of one family, are: Mrs. Wilbur Hubbard, forty years old; Ruth Hubbard, nine years old; Charles Hubbard, two years old. The injured: Wilbur Hubbard, husband and father. The members of the Hubbard family had been visiting relatives near Darlington and were on the way to their farm home, one mile south of Kirklin.

Indianapolis.—Despite various rumors about the date on which Governor Goodrich will call a special session of the Indiana general assembly, the governor has not yet decided even tentatively when he will call it, he said a few days ago. For some time there has been a rumor that the session would be held soon after January 1 and more recently another rumor had it that December 1 was the newly favored date. As a matter of fact, according to the governor, many things are yet to be observed before a definite date may be decided on and it is not now apparent when the call will be issued.

Indianapolis.—Despite reports to the contrary, Indiana will not lose 1 cent of the federal highway fund available for this state, as a result of the action of the state board of tax commissioners in fixing the state highway fund levy at 3.9 cents. This admission is made by L. H. Wright, director of the state highway commission. The federal law requires that for all money received by the state from the federal fund the state shall provide an equal amount, and Mr. Wright said that the commission will be able to take up every dollar of federal fund money which, if not taken before June 30, 1920, no longer would be available.

Indianapolis.—"One Hundred Per Cent Americanism" was the slogan emphasized by speakers and resolutions before the state convention of the Indiana branch of the American Legion. Speakers denounced bolshevist, red flag and revolutionary movements conducted in the United States by aliens. The convention unanimously chose Vincennes as the meeting place of the Indiana branch of the American Legion in June, 1920, where a "reunion" will be held. Indiana delegates to the national convention of the American Legion at Minneapolis, Minn., were instructed to invite the legion to hold its national convention in Indianapolis in 1920.

Bloomington.—At the final session of the forty-sixth annual Indiana W. C. T. U. state convention, Hammond was selected as the place for the meeting next year. Delegates to the national convention to be held in St. Louis, Mo., next month were chosen.

Lafayette.—Purdue university's dairy products judging team took second place in the contest at the national dairy show at Chicago, in judging butter, cream cheese, milk, ice cream and all dairy products, according to word received here. South Dakota won first. Seven teams were entered in the contest.

If Constipated, Bilious or Headachy, take "Cascarets"

Sick headache, biliousness, coated tongue, or sour, gassy stomach—always trace this to torpid liver; delayed, fermenting food in the bowels.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is re-absorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissues it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret tonight will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep.—Adv.

Special Care of Baby.

That Baby should have a bed of its own all are agreed. Yet it is more reasonable for an infant to sleep with grown-ups than to use a man's medicine in an attempt to regulate the delicate organism of that same infant. Either practice is to be shunned. Neither would be tolerated by specialists in children's diseases.

Your Physician will tell you that Baby's medicine must be prepared with even greater care than Baby's food.

A Baby's stomach when in good health is too often disarranged by improper food. Could you for a moment, then, think of giving to your ailing child anything but a medicine especially prepared for Infants and Children? Don't be deceived.

Make a mental note of this:—It is important, Mothers, that you should remember that to function well, the digestive organs of your Baby must receive special care. No Baby is so abnormal that the desired results may be had from the use of medicines primarily prepared for grown-ups.

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies. This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucus or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic outs this slime and mucus and removes it. A nauceated feeling is sometimes experienced when this mucus is breaking loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appet te return and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Glando Tonic is sold by druggists or may be secured by sending direct to the Gland-Aid Co., Fort Wayne, Indiana.

SPORTING GOSSIP

With the announcement that Eugene "Jack pots" Baker would again be seen in the local lineup, Spencerville's hopes, as a contender for the state basket-ball championship, increased fifty percent. The signing of Baker by Manager Steward, is considered by most fans, the master stroke of the season. He will be remembered by followers of the game and players of the surrounding territory, for his speedy floor work and accurate basket shooting, as a member of the local quintet the season of 1916. For the past two years he has been in the service of Uncle Sam, but has kept in touch with the game. Last season, developing into one of the brilliant players in the A. E. F. Basket-ball League. He will share honors at forward with "Sureshot" Schlatter, star of last season's team. Schlatter is one of the fastest and strongest players the game has ever produced, and under the local management, has developod into a wonderful basket getter. At close range shooting he is unexcelled. Whereas Baker is at his best from long range, opposing guards will find this combination at the forward position difficult to combat with. In addition, Manager Steward has two able substitutes in R. Baker and Hollipeter, two young and brilliant performers.

"Trixie" Vannils will again be seen at Center where his aggressive playing and brainey floorwork has gained him the undisputed right to the pivot position.

The guard end will be ably cared for by "Red" Erick, Zimmerman and "Cedric" Hart. Erick has been a stellar performer at guard for many seasons, and can be relied upon to repeat again this season. He is one of the best floor workers in the game. Zimmerman is a well seasoned player, and will cause opposing forwards endless trouble. "Cedric" Hart, local center for many seasons, will again be seen in uniform, playing the defensive guard position.

Manager Steward is trying hard to sign up a couple more players to strengthen up the center and guard positions which will complete the team for the coming season.

They're Calling Us

Often we tell ourselves how we wish to "learn a little every day," either by reading a few good books, listening to some well informed person talk or in some other way that would take but a few minutes out of each day but our plans too often look to "tomorrow."

Many of us admit to gross ignorance of people of the Bible. Right now the churches of DeKalb County are calling us to become acquainted with these people, the days in which they lived and the things they did. It will cost a little more than a half hour a week—a visit to Sunday School.

Local Sunday Schools are working to increase their memberships and are meeting with success. Going to Sunday School does not mean a straight-jacket religion, for once there one finds the men and women who instruct the classes are picked from the everyday walks of life. A few minutes in Sunday School will be found most refreshing for the mental side of man and the Sunday morning walk will do no harm to the physical side. In fact, the Sabbath atmosphere has a tendency to make one thankful for all the glorious good things ahead and the objects surmounted in the week past. Such a start makes the day and the week better and the first thing one knows he is back at the childhood custom of reading a few chapters from the greatest piece of literature and history man has at his disposal—the Bible. Let's go to Sunday School Sunday.

Obituary

Abner G. Copp, was born Dec 3, 1849. He was one of seven children born to Jacob and Isabel Copp and with the exception of one sister, Mrs. James McKinley of Spencerville, was the only one of the family surviving.

He was united in marriage in 1872 to Minerva Furgeson. To this union were born three children: Aletha, who died in infancy; Clarissa Meese, who died a few years ago; and John, of Detroit. The marriage bond was broken by death in the year of 1881.

He was again united in marriage on Sept. 22, 1884. This time to Miss Alice Boren, and she has been his constant companion and helpmate since that time. To this union were born three children, all of whom survive, Jesse Copp, of New Haven; Mrs. Vera Stout, of Hamilton; and Mrs. Flossie Widney, of Albion.

Beside these, and the wife and sister, there are four grandchildren: Fairfield Meese, of Norfolk, Va.; Fred Meese, of Harrisburg, Pa.; Russel Copp, of Detroit; and Little Miss Vernell, of New Haven.

Bro. Copp, Ab. as he was familiarly known, has known most of the people of this community for a number of years. He having built a large number of the buildings of this town and communiey. But at last his task is finished and on the evening of Oct. 25th., just before reaching the "three score and ten" of life he quietly passed away. Aged 69 years, 10 months, and 21 days.

Bro. Copp was converted and joined the M. P. Church in 1899 under the pastorate of Rev. C. S. Johnson. And tho like many others he has not done all that he could, yet his testimony to his pastor only a few hours before his death was that "it's all right now." He was a good citizen and neighbor, a conscientious workman, and a loyal friend.

He was also a faithful member of Lodge No. 400 Knights of Pythias and also of the Pythian Sisters.

Sunset, and evening star
And one clear call for me,
And may there be no moaning of the Bar
When I put out to Sea.

Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark
And may there be no sadness of farewell
When I embark.

And when from out the bourne of time and place
The flood may bear me far.
I hope to see My Pilot face to face,
When I have crossed the bar.

Funeral services were held from the M. P. Church, Tuesday afternoon, Rev. C. O. Johnson, officiating. Burial in Riverside cemetery.

Card of Thanks

We wish to thank our friends and neighbors for the many acts of kindness, comforting words and floral tributes, in which they helped to lighten this great burden of sorrow in the death of our beloved husband and father.

Mrs. A. Copp and Children.

Resolutions Of Respect

WHEREAS, Death has removed from our midst a highly respected citizen and from our lodge a faithful member in the passing away of Abner Copp; therefore, be it

RESOLVED, That we the members of St. Joe Lodge, No. 400, K. of P., deplore the death of Abner Copp, but bow our heads to the expression of Divine will.

RESOLVED, That the charter of our lodge be draped in mourning for a period of sixty days out of regard for the memory of our departed brother; that these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the lodge, that they be printed in the ST. WHO IS WHO NOW

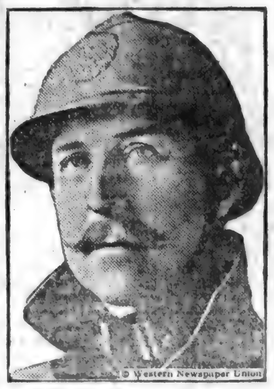
BELGIAN KING WARMLY WELCOMED



Bearing the thanks of their nation to the United States and its people, the king and queen of the Belgians, with Prince Leopold, heir apparent, the first reigning family ever to visit this country, stepped upon American soil a few days ago.

Beginning his mission even before his formal welcome had begun, the soldier king issued a message to the American people. In part it was as follows:

"The king brings to this nation of friends the testimony of the profound sentiment and gratitude of his countrymen for the powerful aid, moral and material, which America gave them in the course of the war. The name of the commission for the relief of Belgium will live eternally in the memory of the Belgians.

"The American people, their splendid army, and their courageous navy powerfully served a great ideal."

Greeted not merely as a king who had chosen war and honor rather than peace and dishonor, King Albert I was welcomed as "a man, with a man's high sense of honor, who trod the Via Dolorosa so by the treading of that way the world might find that treaties are not scraps of paper and that above crown and kingdom, faith and courage must breed, else the banner of a people becomes the much-bespattered badge of infamy."

MARSHALL REPRESENTS PRESIDENT

During the illness of President Wilson, Vice President Thomas R. Marshall represents the president in many matters, though he does not sign any documents which require the signature of the president, nor does he in any way trespass on the prerogatives of the president.

Recently Vice President Marshall received King Albert and Queen Elizabeth of Belgium when they arrived in New York to visit the United States. Mr. Marshall received the distinguished visitors in the name of the president of the United States.

This represents in a general way the sort of service he will continue to do for the president until Mr. Wilson is able to return to his duties. For the time being Vice President Marshall is not scheduled to meet with the cabinet. The business of the general executive departments, it is said, is in excellent shape and the cabinet will probably meet only informally, if at all, during the president's illness. By a law effective January 19, 1886, in case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the president and vice president, the secretary of state, and after him, in the order of the establishment of their departments, other members of the cabinet, shall act as president until the disability of the president is removed or a president shall be elected.

SAYS BONUS MEANS ANOTHER LOAN

Granting an additional bonus to service men would mean another large government bond issue, which the country is in no position to stand at present, Secretary of the Treasury Glass told the special house budget committee a few days ago.

Glass strongly opposed the bonus, claiming a majority of the service men would consider it an affront to their patriotism at a time when the government is sorely in need of funds.

"Today the credit of the United States is imperiled," he said, "by projects initiated in congress to get the soldier vote. I do not believe these young men, if they realized what it is that is proposed in their behalf, would accept a gift made at the expense of their fathers, mothers and sisters and the children that are to come after them in order to give them a holiday.

"I do not anticipate a deficit in the current fiscal year of more than $1,000,000,000, but I say to you in all solemnity that if a prompt and immediate halt is not called to this great peril, there must be another Liberty loan, the proceeds of which are to be given away to the well and strong young men whom you know went out to fight in a spirit of unselfishness, not self-seeking.

"No fallacy is more grotesque than the assumption that by issuing bonds or notes of certificates of indebtedness now we may pass on to future generations the burden of our own extravagance.

"The burden of these issues will have to be met today, not only in interest and sinking fund charges, but in the expansion of credit."

HANSON TAKES LEAGUE STRAW VOTE

The public—at least the traveling public—doesn't care a cooky about the League of Nations, in the opinion of Ole Hanson, former mayor of Seattle, Wash.

Mr. Hanson, who is credited with nipping in the bud the first incipient bolshevist revolution in America, arrived in Chicago a few days ago with the results of several straw votes on the league which he took on trains while traveling to Chicago.

"We took a straw vote on the Santa Fe train between Kansas City and Chicago," he said. "Sixty-five votes were cast against the league and fifty-one in favor of it.

"The people are not interested in the league. They want congress to either vote it up or down and have done with it. What the people want is world peace. I have visited 11 states during the last few days, and I have found they are more interested in the return of $7 shoes and 40-cent butter than in the Fiume question. What the politicians and congressmen need to learn is to 'see America first' and get down to the business of reconstruction."

APPEAL FOR AID FOR RED CROSS

Response Is Urged by President Wilson in Message Dictated Before Illness.

TO BROADEN WELFARE WORK

Plan to Assist Peoples in Eastern Europe; Campaign to Increase Membership Opens November 2d, Closing November 11th.

Washington, D. C.—In a message prepared before his present illness President Wilson makes an appeal for a generous response to the Third Red Cross Roll Call. The president's message reads as follows:

As president of the United States and as president of the American Red Cross I recommend and urge a generous response to the Third Red Cross Roll Call; which opens on November the second with the observance of Red Cross Sunday and appropriately closes on November the eleventh, the first anniversary of the signing of the armistice.

Twenty million adults joined the Red Cross during the war, prompted by a patriotic desire to render service to their country and to the cause for which the United States was engaged in war. Our patriotism should stand the test of peace as well as the test of war, and it is an intelligently patriotic program which the Red Cross proposes, a continuance of service to our soldiers and sailors, who look to it for many things, and a transference to the problems of peace at home of the experience and methods which it acquired during the war.

Stress on Membership.

It is on membership more than money contributions that the stress of the present campaign is laid, for the Red Cross seeks to associate the people in welfare work throughout the land, especially in those communities where neither official nor unofficial provision has been made for adequate public health and social service.

It is in the spirit of democracy that the people should undertake their own welfare activities, and the National Red Cross wisely intends to exert upon community action a stimulating and co-ordinating influence and to place the energies of the organization behind all sound public health and welfare agencies.

The American Red Cross does not purpose indefinite prolongation of its relief work abroad, a policy which would lay an unjust burden upon our own people and tend to undermine the self-reliance of the peoples relieved, but there is a necessary work of completion to be performed before the American Red Cross can honorably withdraw from Europe. The congress of the United States has imposed upon the Red Cross a continuing responsibility abroad by authorizing the secretary of war to transfer to the American Red Cross such surplus army medical supplies and supplementary and dietary foodstuffs now in Europe as shall not be required by the army, to be used by the Red Cross to relieve the distress which continues in certain countries of Europe as a result of the war.

Program Deserves Support.

To finance these operations, to conclude work which was begun during the war, and to carry out some comparatively inexpensive constructive plans for assisting peoples in eastern Europe to develop their own welfare organizations, the American Red Cross requires, in addition to membership fees, a sum of money small in comparison with the gifts poured into its treasury by our generous people during the war.

Both the greater enduring domestic program and the lesser temporary foreign program of the Red Cross deserve enthusiastic support, and I venture to hope that its peace-time membership will exceed rather than fall below its impressive war membership.

WOODROW WILSON.

Unladylike Behavior.

Bernice was in the habit of calling her father on the telephone. On one particular occasion she had lifted up the receiver and had asked for the number wanted. After waiting about a minute the operator told her to hang up because the line was busy. After she hung up she exclaimed to her mother, standing close by: "Oh, mamma, the lady chased me off the phone."

Excuse Recalled.

Robert had finished the evening meal and had politely asked to be excused. As he started to play his mother began serving those still at the table with watermelon. Realizing he had left too soon, Robert ran to his place and as he climbed up in his chair said: "I'd forgotten the watermelon, so excuse me back."

A Mild Call.

"I don't mind you writing gush letters in office hours," explained her employer, "but the management of the building complains that you put so much love in them that they block up the mail chute."

Speeds Building.

Norwegian builders have developed a method of construction for temporary structure in which netting made of wooden rods is fastened to the uprights, bound together with wire, and covered with plaster.

Ball Frocks of Tulle and Lace

It would seem as if all of the lovely things designed for this year's debutante might be labeled after the good old birthday fashions of long ago: "For a Good Little Girl." Certainly the girls of today have earned their right to the most beautiful and the most frivolous of lovely clothes through the faithful, unflagging and untiring war services, observes a fashion writer. Indeed the debutantes of last year deserve a special inning this year. It used to be said one could tell a debutante by her nice, clean little white gloves which she wore throughout the evening, never removing them even for supper; for a debutante of other days was a demure and timid little soul who carefully refrained from "unladylike" behavior, and certainly she never "ate," she only "nibbled" at parties. Nowadays debutantes wear no gloves and do not worry about their finger tips.

New Dance Frocks Are Fairylike.

Some of the new dance frocks are fairylike in their beauty, fashioned of clouds of tulle and filmy lace showing through the stuff. The life of a tulle frock is just about one evening. I know of nothing more arresting than a recent visit to a smart couturiere, where six little dance frocks hung waiting to be freshened for the next "fray." The tulle hung in streamers on some and one had been "melted" by a sudden downpour of rain. Some of the tulle frocks—for the most part of white, as properly the debutante's frock should be—are delightfully combined with a shadow lace. The use of lace is a revival of a bygone day, for it has been many years since the lace trimmed ball gown. This type of frock is rather refreshing after the more sophisticated ones of brocade and tinsel which prospered for a time. Of course satin, white or palest flesh pink, is used as a foundation for the tulle and lace dancing frocks. The satin foundation is tight and narrow and short and the overdraperies are so placed that they form the extended hip seam not only on maturer models but on the most youthful as well. One maker has pailletted an underneath layer of tulle with silver spangles which show with just enough scintillation through the gauzy meshes.

A long-waisted frock of changeable taffeta, a taffeta cape with plaited ruchings and a pink chiffon frock spotted with bows of satin ribbon.

Simplicity the Debutante's Note.

One expects the debutante to be gowned with simplicity, and wise mothers follow this rule in the choice not only of the debuting gown but in the selection of the greater part of the wardrobe as well. The simpler fabrics such as chiffons and georgettes are preferred to the heavier metallic brocade and velvets. The gowns of pastel taffetas are lovely for informal occasions. With these little things with their long slender bodices, pointed in front and fitted with a sash in the back, are worn tiny caps of the pastel silk to match the dress. This is a Parisian fashion just being shown over here and suitable for theatre and restaurant wear. Even in the smaller cities young girls go about nowadays to restaurants and cafes for the dancing, which seems to be more sought than ever. It is for this occasion that the taffeta frocks of the lovely pastel shades and their accompanying caplets are worn.

The favored shade for evening wear in the gay French city for the debutante is emerald green. This is enchantingly combined with silver, and I am sure we can search far and wide before we can find a more beautiful color scheme. Canary yellow is also very much liked this year, but the more pronounced shades are left for older and more sedate people.

Tight Fitting Coats Are In.

The coat suit of the moment most esteemed by the young girl has a tight fitting basque effect with a rippled skirt. For very "dressy" wear duvetyn suits in lighter shades of tan, gray or blue are much liked. All of the brown shades are so well liked this season that they afford distinct relief from the long favored blues. However, all can not wear brown, though in the great variety of shades the dyers have produced I can see no reason why all complexions, hair and eyes cannot be successfully set off with some brown tone. The newer skirts are by no means so narrow, though they are quite short. The vestee of colored broadcloth is seen in some very smart duvetyn frocks, though the suit with the rippled and short waistline does not reproduce these. Much braiding is used, and choker collars which could reach right up to the eyes unless one were afraid of smothering are seen in great numbers. For less formal wear the smart suit of tweed or English cloth with its swell tailored Norfolk jacket with inverted plaits and belted waists is more in favor than ever.

Girls Like Overblouses.

It is to the young girl that the lovely overblouses will appeal the most. Some of these, to be worn with skirts of heavy black or midnight blue, are quite long, reaching to within a foot of the hem. Such an overblouse of sand colored georgette is braided from throat to hem in black and gold threads and held in at the waistline with a string belt braided with black and gold. This is worn over a black satin skirt. A companion frock to this, reproduced in midnight blue serge, has the very long overblouse of black satin embroidered in Chinese motifs in colored threads and suggesting a mandarin's coat. The embroidery is deftly done and not in the least garish or conspicuous.

The newest sport skirts are plaited of plaid and worn with velvet jackets or silken sweaters in dark tones. The sweater is a feature of one's wardrobe which must not be overlooked either by young or old. The silken sweaters with their excellent lines and good service have returned to favor and are preferred for genuine use in the darker shades, browns, blacks and blues. Now and then the debutante exercises her ingenuity and lightens the dark tones by the introduction of some gay and contrasting checks or stripes interwoven in the knitting.

The New Prince of Wales Coat.

A rumor from across the sea tells us that a new coat for the young girl has been copied from one of the Prince of Wales'. Doubtless he will wear such a coat in this country and if is just as well to know that the English girls have adopted it as the preferred winter wrap. The coat in question is quite long with slightly flaring skirts. A wide and rolling collar ended at the waistline with one button to fasten the coat together. It does sound smart and can be charmingly developed in almost every material and trimmed to advantage with a large fur collar.

The same rumor says that the Sam Brown belt, which was so much worn by officers, accustomed men to their waistline and now our new fall suits with the funny little pinched-in waists and flaring coat skirts are an indirect outgrowth of the officers' belted fashion. One of our American officers says that the British stopped the war every day at 4:30 to have tea, and always puttees and Sam Brown belts were carefully removed for this moment of relaxation and refreshment. Who would have thought that our winter suits would still pay tribute to the glorious men who have added a new lustre to England's name? To women much is given, and because of the pleasing origin of the ripple coat with its narrow and pinched waist I am sure it will be proudly and unbiquitously worn.

BILIOUSNESS
Caused by
Acid-Stomach

If people who are bilious are treated according to local symptoms they seldom get very much better. Whatever relief is obtained is usually temporary. Trade biliousness to its source and remove the cause and the chances are that the patient will remain strong and healthy.

Doctors say that more than 70 nonorganic diseases can be traced to an Acid-Stomach. Biliousness is one of them. Indigestion, heartburn, belching, sour stomach, bloat and gas are other signs of acid-stomach. EATONIC, the marvelous modern stomach remedy, brings quick relief from these stomach miseries which lead to a long train of ailments that make life miserable if not corrected.

EATONIC literally absorbs and carries away the excess acid. Makes the stomach strong, cool and comfortable. Helps digestion; improves the appetite and you then get full strength from your food. CHAPTER VII—Continued.

—14—

But alas! they did not begin till some six feet above my head, and the way was sheer. How was I to reach the lowest rung? The rock was too sheer for me to cut steps in, as I had done farther back. I looked about me. Again the luck was with me. In one of the caves I had noticed some broken pieces of fallen rock. They were terribly heavy, but despair lent me strength, and after an hour or two's work, I had managed to roll several of them to the foot of the ladder, and —with an effort of which I would not have believed myself capable—had been able to build them one on top of another against the wall. So, I found myself able to grasp the lowest rung with my hands. Then, fastening the lantern round my neck with my necktie, I prepared to mount.

The climb was not difficult, once I had managed to get my feet on the first rung of the ladder, but there was always the chance that one of the rungs might have rusted loose with time, in which case, of course, it would have given way in my grasp, and I should have been precipitated backward to certain death below.

However, the man who had mortised them had done an honest piece of work, and they proved as firm as on the day they were placed there. Up and up I went, till I must have been forty feet above the floor, and, then, as I neared the foot, instead of coming to a trap door, as I had conjectured, I found that the ladder came to an end at the edge of a narrow ledge, running along the ceiling much as a clerestory runs near the roof of some old churches. On to this I managed to climb. It was barely a yard wide, and the impending roof did not permit of one's standing erect. It was a dizzy situation, and it seemed safest to crawl along on all fours, holding the lantern in front of me. Presently it brought me up sharp in a narrow recess. It had come to an end.

Yes! but imagine my joy! it had come to an end at a low archway rudely cut in the rock. Deep set in the archway was a stout wooden door. My first thought was that I was trapped again, but, to my infinite surprise and gratitude, it proved to be slightly ajar, and a vigorous push sent it grinding back on its hinges. What next? I wondered. At all events, I was no longer lost in the bowels of the earth; step by step, I was coming nearer to the frontiers of humanity.

But I was certainly not prepared for what next met my eyes, as I pushed through the low doorway with my lantern, and looked around. Yes! indeed, man had certainly been here, man, too, very purposeful and businesslike. I was in a sort of low narrow gallery, some forty feet long, to which the arching rock made a crypt-like ceiling. At my first glance, I saw that there was another door at the far end similar to the one I had entered by; and on the left side of the gallery, built of rough stones from the low ceiling to the floor, was a series of compartments, each with locked wooden door. They were strong and grim looking, and might have been taken for prison cells, or family vaults, or possibly wine bins. The massive locks were red with rust, and there was plainly no possibility of opening them.

On the other side of the gallery there was a litter of old chains, and some boards, probably left over from the doors. Yes, and there were two old flintlock guns, and several cutlasses, all eaten away with rust, also a rough seaman's chest open and falling to pieces. At the sight of that, a wild thought flashed through my brain. What if— Good God! What if this were John Teach's treasury—behind those grim doors. I threw myself with all my force against one and then the other. For the moment I forgot that my paramount business was to escape. But I might as well have hurled myself against the solid rock. And, at that moment, I noticed that the place was darker than it had been. My lantern was going out. In a moment or two I should be in the pitch dark, and I had discovered that the door at the end of the gallery was as solid as the others.

I was to be trapped, after all; and I pictured myself slowly dying there of hunger—the pangs of which I was already beginning to feel—and some one, years hence, finding me there, a moldering skeleton—some one who would break open those doors, uncover those gleaming hoards, and moralize on the irony of my end; condemned to die there of starvation, with the treasure I had so long sought on the other side of those unyielding doors. Old Tom's words suddenly flashed over me, and I could feel my hair literally beginning to rise. "There never was a buried treasure yet that didn't claim its victim." Great God!—and I was to be the ghost, and keep guard in this terrible tomb till the next dead man came along to relieve me of my sentry duty!

Frantically I turned up the wick of my lantern at the thought—but it was no use; it was plainly going out. I examined my match box; I had still a dozen or so matches left. And then my eye fell on that shattered chest. There were those boards, too. At all events I could build a fire and make torches of slivers of wood, so long as the wood lasted.

And then I had an idea. Why not make the fire against the door at the end of the gallery, and so burn my way through. Bravo! My spirits rose at the thought, and I set to at once—splitting some small kindling with my knife. In a few minutes I had quite a sprightly little fire going at the bottom of the door; but I saw that I should have to be extravagant with my wood if the fire was to be effective. However, it was neck or nothing; so I piled on beams and boards till my fire roared like a furnace, and presently I had the joy of seeing it begin to take hold of the door—which, after a short time, began to crackle and splutter in a very cheering fashion.

Whatever lay beyond, it was evident that I should soon be able to break my way through the obstacle, and, indeed, so it proved; for, presently, I used one of the boards as a battering ram, and, to my inexpressible joy, it went crashing through, with a shower of sparks, and it was but the work of a few more minutes before the whole door fell flaming down, and I was able to leap through the doorway into the darkness on the other side.

As I stood there, peering ahead, and holding aloft a burning stick—which proved, however, a poor substitute for my lantern—a wonderful sound smote my ears. I could not believe it, and my knees shook beneath me. It was the sound of the sea.

Yes, it was no illusion. It was the sound that the sea makes singing and echoing through hollow caves—the sound I heard that night as I stood at the moonlit door of Calypso's cavern, and saw that vision which my heart nearly broke to remember. Calypso! Oh Calypso! where was she at this moment? Pray God that she was indeed safe, as her father had said. But I had to will her from my mind, to keep from going mad.

And my poor torch had gone out, having, however, given me light enough to see that the door which I had just burnt through let out onto a narrow platform on the side of a rock that went slanting down into a chasm of blackness, through which, as in a great shell, boomed that murmuring of the sea. It had a perilous ugly look, and it was plain that it would be foolhardy to attempt it at the moment without a light; and my fire was dying down. Besides, I was beginning to feel light-headed and worn out, partly from lack of food, no doubt.

As there was no food to be had, I recalled the old French proverb, "He eats who sleeps"—or something to that effect—and I determined to husband my strength once more with a brief rest. However, as I turned to throw some more wood on my fire—preparing to indulge myself with a little campfire cheerfulness as I dosed off—my eyes fell once more on that grim line of locked doors; and my curiosity, and an idea, made me wakeful again. I had burned down one door—why not another? Why not, indeed?

So I raked over my fire to the family vault nearest to me, and presently had it roaring and licking against the stout door. It was, apparently, not so solid as the gallery door had been. At all events, it kindled more easily, and it was not long before I had the satisfaction of battering that down too.

As I did so, I caught sight of something in the interior that made me laugh aloud and behave generally like a madman. Of course, I didn't believe my eyes—but they persisted in declaring, nevertheless, that there in front of me was a great iron-bound oaken chest, to begin with. It might not, of course, contain anything but bones—but it might—! The thing was too absurd. I must have fallen asleep—must be already dreaming! But no! I was laboring with all my strength to open it with one of those rusty cutlasses. It was a tough job, but my strength was as the strength of ten, for the old treasure-hunting lust was upon me, and I had forgotten everything else in the world for the time.

At last, with a great wooden groan, as though its heart were breaking at having to give up its secret at last, it crashed open. I fell on my knees as though I had been struck by lightning, for it was literally brimming over with silver and gold pieces—doubloons and pieces of eight; English and French coins, too—guineas and louis d'or; "all"—as Tobias' manuscript had said—"all good money."

For a while I knelt over it, dazed and blinded, lost; then I slowly plunged my hands into it; and let the pieces pour and pour through them, literally bathing them in gold and silver, as I had read of misers doing.

Then suddenly I broke out into an Irish jig—never having had any notion of doing such a thing before.

In fact I behaved as I have read of men doing, whom a sudden fortune has bereft of reason. For the time, at all events, I was a gibbering madman. Certainly, there was to be no sleep for me that night! But, in the full tide of my frenzy, I suddenly noticed something that brought me up sharp. Out beyond the doorway it was growing light. It was only a dim tremulous suffusion of it, indeed, but it was real daylight—oozing in from somewhere or other—the blessed, blessed, daylight! God be praised!

CHAPTER VIII.

In Which I Understand the Feelings of a Ghost.

So, I surmised, I had been underground a whole day and two nights, and this was the morning of the second day after Calypso's disappearance. What had been happening to her all this time! My flesh crept at the thought, and, with that daylight stealing in like a living presence, and the sound and breath of the sea, my anguish returned a hundredfold.

As I stood on the little rocky platform outside the door through which I had burned my way, and looked down into the glimmering chasm beneath, and heard the fresh voice of the sea huskily rumbling and reverberating about hidden grottoes and channels, all that Calypso was to me came back with the keenness of a sword through my heart. Ah! there was my treasure—as I had known when my eyes first beheld her—compared with which that gold and silver in there, whose gleam had made me momentarily distraught, was but so much dust and ashes. Ardently as I had sought it, what was it compared to one glance of her eyes? What if in the same hour, I had lost my true treasure, and found the false? At the thought, that glittering heap became abhorrent to me, and, without looking back, I sought for some way by which I could descend.

As my eyes grew accustomed to the dim light, I saw that there were some shallow steps cut diagonally in the rock, and down these I had soon made my way, to find myself in a roomy corridor, so much like that in which I had seen Calypso standing in the moonlight, that, for a moment, I dreamed it was the same, and started to run down it, thinking, indeed, that my troubles were over—that in another moment I would emerge through that enchanted door and face the sea.

But alas! instead of a broad shining doorway, and open arms of freedom widespread for me to leap into, I came at last to a mere long narrow slit—through which I could gaze as a man gazes through a prison window at the sky.

The entrance had once been wide and free, but a mass of rock had fallen from above and blocked it up, leaving only a long crack through which the tides passed to and fro.

I was still in my trap; it seemed more terrible than ever, now that I could see freedom so close, her very voice calling to me, singing the morning song of the sea. But in the caverns behind me, I heard another mocking song, and I felt a cold breath on my cheek, for death stood by my side a-grin.

"The treasure!" he whispered, "I need you to guard that. The treasure you have risked all to win—the treasure for which you have lost—your treasure! You cannot escape. Go back and count your gold. 'It is all good money!' Ha! ha! 'It is all good money!'"

The illusion seemed so real to me that I cried aloud "I will not die! I will not die!"—cried it so loud, that anyone in a passing boat might have heard me, and shuddered, wondering what poor ghost it was wailing among the rocks.

But the fright had done me good, and I nerved myself for another effort. If only I could wriggle past that obstruction in the middle, I should be safe. And if I stuck fast midway! But the more I measured the width with my eye, the less the narrowing seemed to be. To be so slightly perceptible, it could hardly be enough to make much difference. Caution whispered that it might be enough to make the difference between life and death. But already my choice of those two august alternatives was so limited as hardly to be called a choice. On the one hand, I could worm my way back through the caves and tunnels through which I had passed, and try my luck again at the other end.

"With half a dozen matches!" sneered a voice that sounded like Tobias'—"Precisely" . . . and the horror of it was more than I dared face again anyway. So there was nothing for it but this aperture, hardly wider than one of those deep stone slits that stood for windows in a Norman castle. It was my last chance, and I meant to take it like a man.

I stood for a moment nerving myself and taking deep breaths, as though I expected to take but few more. Then my left arm extended, I entered sideways, and began to edge myself along. It was easy enough for a yard or two after which it was plain that it was beginning to narrow. Very slightly indeed, but still a little. However, I could still go on, and—I could still go back. I went on—more slowly it is true, yet still I progressed. But the rock was perceptibly closer to me. I had to struggle harder. It was beginning to hug me—very gently—but it was beginning.

I paused to take breath. I could not turn my head to look back, but I judged that I had come over a third of the way. I was coming up to the waist that I had feared, but I could still go on—very slowly, scarce more than an inch at every effort; yet every inch counted, and I had lots of time. My feet and head were free—which was the main thing. Another good push or two, and I should be at the waist—should know my fate.

I gave the good push or two, and suddenly the arms of the rock were around me. Tight and close, this time they hugged me. They held me fast, like a rude lover, and would not let me go. My knees and feet were fast, and the walls on each side pressed my cheeks. My head too was fast. I could not move an inch forward—and it was too late to go back!

Panic swept over me. I felt that my hair must be turning white. Presently I ceased to struggle. But the rocks held me in their giant embrace. There was no need for me to do anything. I could go on resting there—it was very comfortable—till—

And then I felt something touching my feet, running away and then touching them again. O God! It was the incoming tide! It would— And then I prepared myself to die. I suppose I was light-headed, with the strain and the lack of food, for, after the first panic, I found myself dreamily, almost luxuriously, making pictures of how brave men had died in the past—brave women too. I fancied myself in one and another situation. But the picture that persisted was that of the Conciergerie during the French revolution.

Then the picture vanished, as I felt the swish of the tide round my ankles. It would soon be up to my knees—

It was up to my knees—it was creeping past them—and it was making that hollow song in the caves behind me that had seemed so kind to me that very morning, the song it had made to Calypso . . . that far-off night under the moon.

Rooster Ate 496 Kernels.

A storekeeper at Montgomery City has sprung a new one in the guessing game. He took a big rooster and, after letting him fast for a day, put him in his show window with a large pan of corn, the kernels of which had been counted.

He offered a prize to the persons guessing nearest the number of grains the rooster would eat in 20 minutes. The rooster had a ravenous appetite and for five minutes it looked as if there would not be a single kernel left.

But by the time the 20 minutes had elapsed he had curled up in a corner. He had succeeded in putting away 496 grains. A woman whose guess was 495 got the prize.—Kansas City Times.

ARE CARRYING IT TOO FAR

Bathing Costume for Tennis Is the Abbreviating of an Abbreviation.

This is the day of brevity. The names of states and cities are abbreviated, Christian appellations are cut short and initials substituted. The grocer abbreviates "potatoes" to "spuds" and condenses "crackers" to "crax." The butcher writes "PC" when he means "pork chops," and the chemist shortens "water" to "H-2-O." The printer, referring to "a mass of balled-up type," cusses and calls it "pi." Likewise, the sport writers characterize the "knock out" as "KO." The doctor indicates "sod-cac" when he wants "sodium cacodylate."

But abbreviations are not confined to words. The Yanks abbreviated the war. The rising cost of living has abbreviated the purchasing power of a dollar. The airplane has abbreviated space, and electricity has abbreviated time itself. The laundry often abbreviates the size of one's new shirt. Fashion frequently abbreviates costumes.

There is, however, such a thing as abbreviating too much. For in France, a bathing suit is considered sufficient raiment for one who is in the swimming pool, but it is highly objectionable elsewhere. Tennis players clad in bathing suits are carrying the abbreviation habit too far.

They are abbreviating abbreviation!

Earth's Life Zones.

Biologists have divided the entire surface of the earth into life zones, each zone having much the same flora and fauna wherever found. The life zone in a given locality depends upon both latitude and elevation. Thus the Canadian life zone, which has everywhere plants and animals similar to those of Canada, is found in the high Rocky Mountains as far south as southern Colorado and northern New Mexico.

Talent is one thing; tact is everything.

Suzanne Lenglen, the world's tennis champion, was talking to a group of American correspondents at Wimbledon.

"I don't care for golf," she said. "I think tennis is much nicer. I think golf is queer."

"How queer?" said a golfer.

"It lets you cheat so easily if you're inclined that way. My father played golf one day at Nice with a German. As he holed out on the first green the German said to him:

"'How many strokes did you do the hole in?'

"'Seven,' said father.

"'It's my hole, then,' said the German. 'I did it in five.'

"Father didn't say anything, but when the German asked him at the second green how many strokes he had taken he laughed.

"'No, you don't, Herr Sauerkraut,' he said. 'This time it's my turn to ask first.'"

Garden of Eden in Mexico?

A prehistoric race that lived in Mexico centuries before Cortez ever arrived there to crush the power of the Aztec kingdom, was a civilized people who were flooded out of existence by a deluge that swept the valley of Mexico, as relics picked up near the capital city prove, and some writers assert that Mexico was the site of the beginning of man and that it was in this valley that Noah set forth for his 40-day tour of the flooded world.

Many People Poisoned

Scores of people meet death each year by a slow process of poisoning that is going on within our bodies. This poisoning is caused by the liver and kidneys failing to perform their proper function. Poisonous matter accumulates within the body and health declines. The unsightly liver splotches, billiousness, headache and dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, a pain in the back or under the shoulder blade, a tired or achy feeling are some of the most common symptoms of this poisoning. If this poisoning it not expelled and the cause removed the resisting power is finally gone and life pays the penalty. Are you of the heedless class or are you safeguarding your health? If you want health you must keep the liver, kidneys and bowels active. Glando Tonic is what you need to restore this activity and expell the poisons. Keep on the safe side and use a reliable remedy. Glando Tonic is put up in a treatment form and guaranteed to do the work. Ask your druggist for a large $1 treatment. Take it as directed and you will be surprised to know how much poison was stored up within your body. When the liver is inactive a mucus or slime collects within the stomach and bowels which hinders digestion and the assimilation of food. This is called catarrh of the stomach or bowels. Glando Tonic cuts this slime and mucus and removes it. A nauceated feeling is sometimes experienced when this mucus is breaking loose but as soon as it is removed from the bowels, you will feel fine, the complexion clear, the appet te return and you will want to tell others of your wonderful cure.

Honored Their Boys

A special service was held last Sunday in the M. P. Sunday School styled as their Demobilization service of their service flag. The program begun at 9:30 promptly with the singing of America followed by prayer and other patriotic songs. After reading of the service record of each boy represented by the stars, (14 in all,) the superintendent made a few remarks concerning the construction of the flag from week to week in the school, and the great interest that had been taken in it. The flag was suspended in the center of the arch and was so constructed that at a given time the white field of the flag was changed in an instant to "Victory". The lowering of the flag took place at the singing of the Song to the Flag, being lowered very slowly and two young ladies stepped to the platform and proceeded to roll it up. The church was beautifully decorated and the public responded 93 in number in spite of the bad weather.

WISE POLICY TO SELECT SEED FOR TWO YEARS FROM THIS SEASON'S CORN CROP

Save Two Years' Seed From This Kind of Field—There May Be Nothing Like It Next Year.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The 1919 corn crop is a wonderful crop from which to select seed corn. Over most of the country it is well developed, fully matured, hard and sound—just the sort of corn that a fellow can bank on for a good stand and big yields.

But it takes time to select seed corn. You are busy. Some other job is calling you before you finish the one you are at. You guess you will not take the time to select any seed corn to speak of.

All right—it's your business. But think ahead a little. Imagine that it is the spring of 1921. The year 1920, say, was a poor corn year. Frost came early and nearly all of the corn was soft. You haven't any that is fit to plant. The busy spring season is at its busiest. A score of things are calling to be done at once. You have to hitch up the horse or crank the car and start scouring the country for some man who has a crib of old corn. Probably you fail to find him and have to wait while the county agent or somebody "sends down South" and gets you some hard corn to plant. Some waste of time connected with the process, isn't there? After you get it, perhaps it is unadapted to your locality and yields a poor crop of immature corn.

Save for Two Years.

This is one of the reasons why the corn experts of the United States department of agriculture urge farmers to select out of this year's crop enough seed corn to meet their needs for two or three years. No farmer, particularly in the northern portion of the United States, has time not to do it.

Still, the mere saving of time is not the only reason. By getting two or three years' supply of seed corn out of a crop like this, the farmer takes out an insurance policy that he can continue raising a variety of corn that has proved its merits. If he neglects this opportunity of providing himself with a good supply of the right kind of seed, he may have to start over with a variety that he knows nothing about, that may not be adapted to his locality or his land, that may bring with it some disease or insect pest, and that, in any event, he will have to experiment with for several seasons before he knows what it will do for him and what he must do with it.

Where Every Day Counts.

The sowing of seed corn from a crop of the right kind is a matter of importance everywhere, but more particularly so in the northern portion of the country. That is where the vicissitudes of the seasons are most likely to bring about a soft crop. There, also, low vitality means the heaviest handicap. The South, with its long-growing season, might sometimes afford a corn crop that gets away to a slow start, but in the North every day counts from the time the corn is put in the ground until the crop is safely harvested. Anywhere, however, the saving of the right kind of seed has a direct and important bearing on production.

The department of agriculture believes that every farmer can better afford to take the time, however much his labor may seem to be needed elsewhere, to select at least two years' supply of seed corn from this year's crop, than to run the risk of being caught, spring after next, with no suitable corn to plant, with the resultant delay, annoyance, and actual reduction of yield. The day or so that the farmer puts in selecting his seed corn will probably be the most profitable day's work he does in the whole year.

FIREWOOD PREPARED FOR WINTER SUPPLY

Labor Requirements Reduced by Use of Machinery.

Where Co-operative Plan Is Not Feasible Many Farmers Prefer to Hire Work Done Rather Than Buy Individual Rig.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Use of power machinery in preparing firewood will reduce labor requirements to a point where the farmer should be able to get his wood ready to burn without seriously neglecting other work. A great many farmers already have gasoline engines suitable for furnishing the power for wood-sawing machines. The sawing machines themselves are comparatively inexpensive and the labor one saves will be sufficient to pay for it long before it is worn out. One outfit can do the work for several families each year. The purchase of a complete outfit, including an engine to furnish power, may be profitable for a group of farmers or for one who has an opportunity to do custom work for his neighbors.

Where the co-operative plan is not feasible, many farmers prefer to have their wood cut with a hired outfit rather than to purchase an individual rig. The machines are sometimes hired by the day or hour and sometimes by the cord. In cutting poles or heavy wood that has not been put into cordwood, the outfit is usually hired on a time basis. When the saw owner furnishes the fuel for the engine and his own time, $1 or less per hour is usually charged in the eastern part of the country. If the saw is kept busy wood can be cut at the rate of at least two cords per hour. Thus the use of a hired machine for cutting wood will cost the farmer less than 50 cents per cord. In cutting cordwood the outfit is often hired at a fixed rate per cord. Where the saw owner furnishes the fuel and only his own time, the price is usually 35 to 50 cents per cord. If a custom rig has a great deal of sawing to do every year the charges for depreciation, interest, and probable repairs will be considerably less per cord than on the individual outfit. Consequently, the custom outfit can do the work at a price equal to or below the cost of doing it with an individual outfit and still return a profit to the owner.

WASTERS OF SOIL FERTILITY

Gullies Between Corn Rows Act as Channels Which Wash Deep and Do Much Injury.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Gullies are wasters of soil fertility. In many corn-producing sections the rows between the corn sometimes act as channels which soon wash deep and carry away much of the best soil of a field. Although it is not a simple matter to reduce these gullies, it is practical to attempt it. A successful scheme practiced throughout the corn belt by many farmers consists in thrashing settings of grain—where grain follows corn in the crop rotation—at intervals along the gully so that the by-product straw will be deposited in such a manner as to blockade and prevent further soil erosion. Even though wheat and rye straw are valuable for bedding purposes, it is advisable to sacrifice some of the latter as the farmer will eliminate a material source of loss and an eyesore from what probably is otherwise an attractive field.

GENERAL FARM NOTES

All seed corn should be tested.

• • •

A well-filled silo will save feed worries next winter.

• • •

A concrete walk from the house to the barn saves many a kitchen floor scrubbing.

• • •

By using a hay press many farmers are able to store a great quantity of feeds without erecting new buildings.

• • •

A barn without plenty of light is not necessarily a wholly bad barn, but it is a long way from being a good one.

• • •

A half hour spent each day planning the work will shorten the total time needed in which to get the work done.

Highway Improvement

HOW DRAGS MAINTAIN ROADS

Simple and Inexpensive Device Well Adapted for Producing Smooth and Uniform Surface.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The drag is a simple and inexpensive device for maintaining certain types of roads which when wet become rutted under traffic and which become firm on drying out. It is also well adapted for producing a smooth and uniform surface on newly constructed roads in which the material used for surfacing is earth, earthy gravel or some similar material. It is essentially a maintenance implement and its use in construction is distinctly secondary. Roads which are very rocky or very sandy cannot be materially improved by its use.

Properly used at the right time the road drag performs four distinct offices. First, by moving at an angle to the traveled way it tends to produce or preserve a crowned cross section. Second, if used when the material of the surface is not compact and hard, it tends to reduce ruts and other irregularities in the road by moving material from points which are relatively high to those which are relatively low. Third, when used after a rain it accelerates the drying out of the road by spreading out puddles of water and thus increasing the surfaces exposed to evaporation. Fourth, if the surface material is in a slightly plastic state, dragging smears over and partially seals the so-called pores which naturally occur in earthy material, and thus makes the road surface more or less impervious to water. The advantage of this smearing action of the drag will be more readily understood if a sample of ordinary earth is examined under a magnifying glass. Such an examination will show that the earth closely resembles a sponge or honeycomb in structure, and the desirability of closing the open pores will be readily apparent.

If used improperly or at the wrong time, the drag may do actual injury to a road. Dragging a very dry road, for example, serves to increase the quantity of dust and may do additional damage by destroying the seal produced during previous dragging. If, on the other hand, the road is very wet and muddy, the irregularities in the surface are likely to be increased rather than diminished by dragging.

BETTER ROADS OF TOMORROW

They Will Be Built Much Wider and Stronger Than Many We Have Now in Various States.

With the adoption of efficient methods of construction and maintenance for all the roads soon to be built by the various states, and also for those built by the large federal appropriation for interstate roads under the federal aid act, our roads of tomorrow should be of maximum value to everyone. They will be built much wider and stronger than many we have now, and of the most durable materials, for they will have to bear a greatly increased motortruck traffic if the growth in use of such trucks in the last few years is any criterion.

NEED MORE GOOD HIGHWAYS

One of Benefits of War Is Sure to Be Increase in Thoroughly Improved Roads.

One of the benefits of the war is sure to be more good roads in this country, and in other parts of the world where highways have not been generally and thoroughly improved. We used to say "better roads," but now there is a large mileage so good that if the rest were brought up to the best American level, nothing more could reasonably be asked. Many roads in America are quite worthy of comparison with any in Europe. All we need is more of them, and then still more until the country is gridironed and netted with such highways.

Good Roads Available.

When the people of the towns and country unite to build and maintain roads then will good roads be available.

Tractor on Highways.

Avoid running on highways with the tractor in summer unless deep lugs are removed from the wheels or tracks.

Ax Is Best Treatment.

More Guernseys Have Been Imported to United States During Last 33 Years Than Any Other Breed.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Twenty-nine countries each have more than 2,000,000 cattle. The United States has not the greatest number, as many people suppose, but ranks second to India by more than 100,000,000. During the last 33 years Guernseys led by far all other breeds in numbers of purebred cattle imported into this country, and of the five breeds leading the importations, four were distinctive dairy types.

More than 8,750 Guernsey cattle were imported; Jerseys ranged second in numbers, with Durhams, including Shorthorns, third, Holsteins fourth, and Ayrshires fifth. The volume of purebred cattle importations has been extremely variable.

Trend of Industry.

These are a few of many facts about the dairy industry that are brought out in Circular No. 7, recently published by the United States department of agriculture, which shows, chiefly by graphic charts, the trend of the industry in this country and its relation to the world trend.

The circular reports statistics of cattle in the various countries as far back as 1850, when the earliest dependable information was received. Compared with other decades the world has had more cattle in recent years than ever before, although it must be remembered population has increased also. Owing to the wide variations in the quality of herds in the different countries, the circular says, the charts must not be considered an indication of relative meat or dairy resources.

The circular says the general trend of cattle development is: First, work animals; next, raising cattle for commercial beef; and, finally, commercial dairying in addition to the business of meat production.

Throughout the world the cattle industry shows general growth, but less made its greatest advance in regions where pasturage and feeds are more abundant.

The recent trend of cattle development indicates that beef production and dairying are progressing, generally, outside the immediate war area.

Countries which depend largely on imported feeds appear to maintain relatively few cattle in addition to their dairy cows, which have gradually replaced other cattle.

Less Fluctuation in Cows.

Dairy cows have shown less fluctuation in number than total cattle. This condition is noteworthy the world over long periods including adverse conditions, such as disease, drought and war.

European experiences indicate that when a country has reached the practical limit of cattle the land will maintain further increase of milk production is obtained by improving the yield per cow.

It appears logical that the United States can best meet changed world conditions, first, by increasing simultaneously both the number and quality of its cattle; second, by constant attention to economy of production; and third, by maintenance of cattle raising and dairying in conjunction with general farming, thus reducing dependence on purchased feeds.

HOGS ARE HEAVIEST CONSUMERS OF GRAIN

Horses Are Placed Second by Bureau of Crop Estimates.

Mill Feed Is Especially for Cattle and Swine, Which Together Consume 86 Per Cent—Little Forage Eaten by Sheep.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The various proportions of the crops that are fed to the different classes of domestic animals on farms in this country have been determined by the bureau of crop estimates with interesting results. Corn, of course, is fed to hogs much more than to any other class of animals—50 per cent to them, or fully one-half of the quantity fed to all animals. Horses eat 24 per cent, cattle 19 per cent and poultry 5 per cent.

Horses are the chief eaters of oats, their share being 68 per cent, that of cattle 13 per cent, of hogs 11 per cent and of poultry 6 per cent. Barley is chiefly eaten by hogs, whose consumption is 60 per cent of the quantity eaten by all animals, while horses eat 18 per cent, cattle 12 per cent, and poultry 11 per cent. Of the small fraction of the wheat crop fed to animals, poultry gets 59 per cent and hogs 29 per cent. Nearly all the hay goes to cattle and horses, 51 and 45 per cent, respectively.

Rye has been fed to animals as well as used for bread, and more than one-half of this feed has gone to hogs, one-quarter to horses, and one-seventh to poultry. Nearly all the silage is eaten by cattle, and a little is consumed by hogs, horses, sheep, and even by poultry. Mill feed is especially for cattle and swine, which together consume 86 per cent of the whole quantity that is fed, in about equal proportions.

The figures of the bureau indicate that hogs are the principal grain eaters, horses a close second, cattle third, poultry fourth, and that sheep consume a mere trace. Cattle are the greatest forage eaters, and they and horses consume the bulk of it, so that little is eaten by sheep and swine, as fractions of the total consumption by animals.

UNIQUE PLAN IN HARVESTING

Farmers in Nebraska District Get Their Wheat Cut and Shocked in Record Time.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Farmers of the St. Paul district in Nebraska worked out a unique plan for getting their wheat cut and shocked in record time. Articles were written by the county agent and published in the local press to the effect that it would be necessary to build up a local organization to help save the wheat crop. It was decided to have a banker, the secretary of the commercial club, and the county agent take care of the matter, with the agent as chairman.

The agent worked out a plan which was approved by the committee to have all the farmers report by two o'clock each day and list the number of acres already cut and ready to be shocked that evening. A card or chart was placed at the post office at five o'clock each day. This information was telephoned to all the towns in the county, which enabled the committee to distribute the available labor to the best advantage. From 35 to 50 men were sent out each evening to help shock wheat, receiving 50 cents an hour for their labor.

The records were kept in the office of the county agent. Every man going out reported each day and the number of hours worked on each farm. The clerk of the farm-labor bureau made out a total bill when the job was finished and the farmers paid the laborers for their services by one check.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Feeds rich in protein are necessary for the brood sow.

• • •

We can't have profitable live stock without pastures.

• • •

Plant more grasses, peas, vetches and clover for the pig ranges.

• • •

Careful attention should be given to the selection of sows for breeding purposes.

• • •

In the northern locations special attention should be devoted to housing and bedding young pigs.

• • •

Sheep are very low and look like a good investment so long as wool continues above the 50-cent mark.

• • •

There is a surplus of light horses on the farms, but there is still a notable deficiency in heavy, desirable draft horses.

• • •

The man who intends to buy and feed cattle and save himself from loss in the transaction must figure his feed-bill account closely.

PHYSICALLY FIT AT ANY AGE

It isn't age, it's careless living that puts men "down and out." Keep your internal organs in good condition and you will always be physically fit.

The kidneys are the most overworked organs in the human body. When they break down under the strain and the deadly uric acid accumulates and crystallizes look out! These sharp crystals tear and scratch the delicate urinary channels causing excruciating pain and set up irritations which may cause premature degeneration and often do turn into deadly Bright's Disease.

One of the first warnings of sluggish kidney action is pain or stiffness in the small of the back, loss of appetite, indigestion or rheumatism.

Indiana Brevities

Muncie.—"There is only one city in the state of Indiana in which is maintained a well-known 'red light' district, and that is your city, Muncie," declared Dr. W. F. King, assistant secretary of the state board of health, addressing 200 members of the Commercial club at a luncheon. Doctor King was discussing the efforts of federal, state and local authorities to eliminate venereal diseases.

Wabash.—The county commissioners have dropped their investigations of alleged discrepancies on road work in the county, after changes had been ordered and agreed to on the roads in question. The commissioners charged that road contractors were not doing the work according to the plans and specifications. On one road only three inches of gravel was placed, when the plans called for six inches, it is said.

Goshen.—The threat has been made by Elkhart county farmers, who have retained legal counsel, that unless the Indiana state board of tax commissioners rescinds its recent order for a 25 per cent flat increase on all farm lands and improvements in Elkhart township, injunction proceedings will be filed against Allen R. Bemendorfer, county auditor, to prevent him from entering the increased assessments on the tax duplicate.

St. Louis, Mo.—Direct appeal to America to meet the problems growing out of the war, just as Americans in the past have faced and safely bridged crises which have confronted the nation, Gov. James P. Goodrich of Indiana addressed the annual convention of the Grain Dealers' National association. Radicalism and class spirit and all that they lead to were denounced in strong terms by the Indiana governor.

Indianapolis.—The supreme court has granted a stay of execution until January 14, 1920, in the case of the four Lake county bandits sentenced to die in the electric chair at the state prison at Michigan City at sunrise November 1. The men, James H. Parker, Albert G. Batchelor, Thomas M. Batchelor and Dan Tekulja, were sentenced to death in the Lake county circuit court for the murder of Herman Uecker, cashier of the Tolleston State bank in an attempted holdup of the bank June 14.

Colfax.—Three persons were killed here and a fourth is in a hospital at Lebanon, probably fatally hurt, as the result of a Big Four passenger train hitting the automobile in which they had been traveling. The dead, all members of one family, are: Mrs. Wilbur Hubbard, forty years old; Ruth Hubbard, nine years old; Charles Hubbard, two years old. The injured: Wilbur Hubbard, husband and father. The members of the Hubbard family had been visiting relatives near Darlington and were on the way to their farm home, one mile south of Kirklin.

Evansville. — The undertakers of Evansville will collect between $200,000 and $600,000 by the time the last man in Vanderburg county, who served in the army, navy or marine corps during the world war, is dead, if they take advantage of a law under which the state now compensates them for the burial of every former service man. An act passed by the 1917 session of the Indiana legislature provides that the board of county commissioners may allow a sum not exceeding $75 as "a tribute of respect due to the soldier," to the person who conducts the burial of a soldier, sailor or marine or of his wife or widow. Local undertakers already have begun the practice of collecting $50 for burying bodies of dead service men or their wives or widows. The county commissioners have allowed the claims in most instances without protest.

Indianapolis.—Coal supplies in Indianapolis and generally in Indiana are not sufficient to bridge over any prolonged strike of bituminous coal miners, according to railroad officials, coal operators, wholesalers and retailers. It was said that if the strike called for November 1 goes into effect railroads cannot operate more than five days or a week. Factories have an average of not more than fourteen to eighteen days' supply of fuel in Indianapolis and other parts of the state, and the consumer of domestic coal unless he has stored his winter's coal, will find difficulty in obtaining it. The situation in the domestic trade was discussed at a meeting by committees of the Indiana Retail Coal Merchants' association and operators. "A canvass of the factory situation seems to indicate that there is an average supply of fourteen to eighteen days on hand," said Bernard R. Batty of a local coal company. "The railroad situation is more serious than the commercial," he said, "because the railroads have practically no stock except the current supply on cars. Three or four days' stock is the average. In isolated places the railroads have some stock on the ground, but this is exceptional.

Greenfield. — Farmers in Hancock county are going back to wood for the fuel this winter because of the high cost of coal. Less coal is going to the farmers than for many years, local dealers say.

Anderson.—A man and woman are dead and another woman is in a hospital because of injuries received when their automobile was struck by a passenger train here. The dead are: W. W. Dean and Mrs. Emerich of Casey, Ill. Mrs. A. G. Wasson of Indianapolis was injured. The trio had been inspecting oil properties near Albany.

Ft. Wayne.—Resolutions adopted by the Indiana Baptist association, which closed its annual convention here, called for the Americanization and evangelization of the foreigners living in the northern part of the state; urged the necessity of continued vigilance in behalf of prohibition and support of the Anti-Saloon league; approved the peace treaty and the League of Nations covenant, and pledged co-operation in the financial campaign for the broadening of the work of Franklin college.

Washington, D. C.—According to the bureau of labor statistics families with incomes of from $1,200 to $1,500 a year in 56 cities spend more for rent annually than families with that standard of income in Indianapolis. The bureau's investigation shows that the average annual expenditure for rent in Indianapolis among families with incomes ranging from $1,200 to $1,500 is $167,085. The highest average rental found by the bureau among families of the $1,200 to $1,500 class was in Bridgeport, Conn., where the average is $240.58.

Sullivan.—Predicting that within two years horses will sell for the highest price ever known in the United States, due primarily to a general lax interest in specialized breeding of horses the last two years, John Schwab of the animal husbandry department of Purdue university opened his address to the large number of farmers—particularly the horsemen—assembled at the James J. Durham farm during the Sullivan county live stock tour in which a record number of Sullivan county farmers and their families and persons from adjoining counties visited 14 farms to inspect pure-bred cattle, hogs and horses.

Lawrenceburg.—Meredith J. Sullivan, a tobacco grower, sold a small but extra good crop of tobacco to a local tobacco broker for 50 cents a pound for the crop of about 3,000 pounds. There probably has never been a time in the history of the local tobacco market when both producer and buyer of tobacco were as much at sea as they are now concerning the price range for the 1919 crop. Speculators have already made their appearance in this county and are looking over the various tobacco crops. John W. Clayton, a local tobacco broker, has contracted for 20,000 pounds of tobacco at 25 cents a pound.

Indianapolis.—"One Hundred Per Cent Americanism" was the slogan emphasized by speakers and resolutions before the state convention of the Indiana branch of the American Legion. Speakers denounced bolshevist, red flag and revolutionary movements conducted in the United States by aliens. The convention unanimously chose Vincennes as the meeting place of the Indiana branch of the American Legion in June, 1920, where a "reunion" will be held. Indiana delegates to the national convention of the American Legion at Minneapolis Minn., were instructed to invite the legion to hold its national convention in Indianapolis in 1920.

Indianapolis.—Despite reports to the contrary, Indiana will not lose 1 cent of the federal highway fund available for this state, as a result of the action of the state board of tax commissioners in fixing the state highway fund levy at 3.9 cents. This admission is made by L. H. Wright, director of the state highway commission. The federal law requires that for all money received by the state from the federal fund the state shall provide an equal amount, and Mr Wright said that the commission will be able to take up every dollar of federal fund money which, if not taken before June 30, 1920, no longer would be available.

Indianapolis.—More bass are needed for the state fish hatcheries, George N Mannfeld, superintendent of the division of fish and game of the state conservation department, said. Recently Mr. Mannfeld requested Indiana fishermen to send choice specimens of their catches to the hatcheries for breeding purposes. Mr. Mannfeld said that there has been a generous response from many Indiana sportsmen and that a large number of fish had been received. However, the hatcheries are still in need of additional breeders, particularly specimens of the game fish. According to reports received by Mr. Mannfeld fishing is exceptionally good in the northern Indiana lakes at this time.

Washington, D. C.—Charges of fraud and large unlawful expenditures in the nomination and election of Truman Newberry as United States senator from Michigan will be laid before a grand jury at Grand Rapids, Attorney General Palmer announced. Frank C. Dailey of Indianapolis, who prosecuted the Terre Haute and Indianapolis election fraud cases, has been assigned by Palmer to take charge. As the United States district attorney for Indiana he prosecuted the mayor of Terre Haute, the judge of the circuit court, the sheriff and more than 100 others, including high county and city officials. All were convicted and sent to prison. He also procured conviction of the superintendent of police of Indianapolis and more than 30 others.

Wabash.—Farmers of Chester township are of the opinion that clover seed at $28 a bushel is too expensive to be kept in the barn. A report compiled by the county agent shows that nine of every ten farmers in that township keep their clover seed in the house under a lock, while one farmer has kept his clover seed in a bank vault for the last two years.

Columbus.—Columbus and the "blue-sky" committee of the Columbus chamber of commerce will start a country-wide investigation to ascertain whether Bartholomew county people have been swindled in oil stock.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 2

TEMPERANCE LESSON. (World's Temperance Sunday.)

LESSON TEXT—Jer. 35:1-8, 12-14, 18, 19.

GOLDEN TEXT—Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.—I Cor. 10:31.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A true temperance story.

JUNIOR TOPIC—What alcohol does.—Prov. 23:31, 32.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—The clean strong life.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—Our personal responsibility for temperance reform.

I. The Rechabites Tested (vv. 1-5).

In the days of Jehoiakim the Lord charged Jeremiah to bring the Rechabites into the house of the Lord and test them regarding the drinking of wine. This he did in a place where the people might behold them, the aim being to teach Israel by example. The father of the Rechabites had given command that they should not drink wine. Their filial obedience put to shame the Israelites for their lack of obedience. Jonadab, the father of the Rechabites, was only a man, but the one whose commands Israel were disregarding was the Almighty God, their Creator and Savior. It is God's plan that every man be tested. Being a free agent he only can have character through testing. It was for this reason that God placed Adam and Eve in Eden and permitted the devil to test them. While we should be concerned with the removal of temptations from men, we should be more concerned with teaching them their responsibility and showing them how to overcome.

II. The Filial Loyalty of the Rechabites (vv. 6-11).

Though they were out of their own country, in the midst of a foreign people, they refused to drink wine, declaring that they had been true to the instruction of Jonadab all their lives. Obedience to his instructions had been practiced by all men, women and children. It is a fine thing when children keep in memory their fathers and render obedience to their commands.

III. The Loyalty of the Rechabites in Contrast With the Disloyalty of the Israelites (vv. 12-16).

1. The appeal (vv. 13, 14). He made the appeal on the basis of the filial loyalty of the Rechabites. He reminded them that the Rechabites were obedient, though their father was dead long ago. He also reminded them that he had spoken to them in person, rising up early to do so.

2. The ministry of the prophets (vv. 15, 16). When the people failed to render obedience to God he sent to them the prophets, who plead with them to amend their ways by turning away from their idols. Matthew Henry indicates the points of contrast somewhat as follows: (1) The Rechabites were obedient to one who was but a man; the Jews disobeyed the infinite and eternal God. (2) Jonadab was dead long since and could not know of their disloyalty or correct them from it. God is all-wise and lives forever and will punish for disobedience. (3) The Rechabites were never put in mind of their obligations, but God sent his prophets who rose up early to remind them. (4) Jonadab left the charge, but no estate to bear the charge; but God gave the people a goodly land and blessed them in it. (5) God never tied up his people to any hard task like Jonadab did, yet God's people disobeyed him and the Rechabites obeyed their father.

IV. Judgment Upon the Jews for Disobedience (v. 17).

God declared that he would bring judgment upon them according to what he had said. Judgment is determined upon those who disobey and rebel against God.

V. Reward of the Rechabites for Their Loyalty (vv. 18, 19).

Because they had been true to the commands of Jonadab they should have continued representation before God. God has such regard for filial obedience that he lets no act go unrewarded.

God Knows His Own.

The church must keep herself pure. Neither false doctrine, nor false life, is allowable. The searching eyes of God see every corner of his dwelling-place. Nothing is hidden from his search. "The Lord knoweth them that are his, and them that are not his cannot deceive him. So, "let everyone that nameth the name of Christ, depart from iniquity."

The Miracle of Divine Grace.

The miracle of divine grace is too great for our understanding. The most dreadful thing about sin is the terrible feeling that the sinner can never again be as though that sin had never been. —Rev. Reginald J. Campbell in the Churchman.

Power of Prayer.

Prayer is the summing up of the Christian life in a definite act, which is at once inward and outward, the power of which on the character, like that of any other act, is proportioned to its intensity.—Benjamin Jowett.

What We Will and Must.

There is no contending with necessity, and we should be very tender how we censure those that submit to it. 'Tis one thing to be at liberty to do what we will, and another thing to be tied up to what we must.—L'Estrange.

Doesn't Believe This.

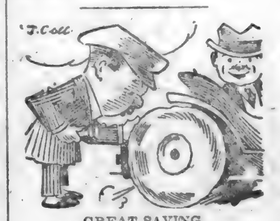
"Do you believe everything he says?"

"I used to, until he tried to tell me the other day that you couldn't lose any more money playing dollar-limit poker than you could playing 10-cent limit."

One on Hubby.

Mr. Wiseman (surveying new draperies in parlor)—My dear, you certainly have wretched taste.

His Wife—Yes, that's what everyone said when I married you.



GREAT SAVING.

"There's one thing I never cease to congratulate myself about."

"What is that?"

"You don't need tires for the steering wheel."

Quite an Art.

There's really quite an art, you know,
In bringing up the young—
We teach the baby first to talk
And then to hold his tongue.

Same Old Tale.

He—And what did your father say when you told him that I said I couldn't live without you?

She—He said he used to tell ma the same rot.

Time to Go.

He—Would you marry a man for his money?

She—I wouldn't marry you for all the money in the world.

So Young.

Percy—I heard that you said I was a goose. I hope you will deny it.

Kitty—I most assuredly will. I merely called you a gosling.

Henpecked.

Jinks—He's a bear on the exchange.

Mrs. Jinks—Well, he's as meek as a lamb at home.

A New Twist to It.

Hoax—As the old saying goes, "In the time of peace—"

Joax—Apply for a pension.

A Continual Struggle.

She—He died without a struggle.

He—Well, he died easier than he lived.

Way to Find Out.

"Have you many close friends here?"

"Can't say. I've never tried to borrow a cent."

A Mixup.

Rodge—Did Blinks get excuses confused?

Podge—Yes; told the boss that he had been detained at the office and his wife that he had been up with the baby.

A Tight Squeeze.

Irena—I just danced with that Mr. Allarms.

Harry—Well, you seem to have pulled through all right.

Irena—Yes; but it was a tight squeeze.

Happy Thought.

Dolly—When one sends a parcel by express why do they always ask the name and address of the sender.

Percy — Why-er-so they'll know where to return it in case it is-er-lost or stolen, doncher know.

Wise Kid.

The New Superintendent (his first visit at this particular school)—Well, children, what shall I talk to you about?

Kid (on the front row)—About five minutes.

An Appropriate Name.

Farmer Korntassel—Waal, it's too bad you received the notice of my little darter's birth too late to put it in the paper. Suay, kin yer think of a good name for her?

Editor of the Bingtown Bugle—Sure; call her Ad. delayed.

Relic of the Past.

"This, I presume, is the portrait of one of your former admirers."

"Don't be foolish, hubby. That is a photograph of yourself when you had hair."

"FIDDLE-FIT"

Keep Liver and Bowels Clean and Active with "Cascarets"

Sick headache, biliousness, coated tongue, sour, gassy stomach—always trace this to torpid liver; delayed, fermenting food in the bowels.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is re-absorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret tonight will have you feeling clear, rosy and as fit as a fiddle by morning. They work while you sleep.—Adv.

Tactful Nephew.

Old Aunt (despondently)—Well, I shall not be a nuisance to you much longer.

Nephew (reassuringly)—Don't talk like that, aunt, you know you will.

HOW THE SQUIRREL HELPS

Uncle Sam Needs Seeds of Douglas Fir and Knows Where to Find Them.

Tree seed can't be bought in large quantities in the market. To restock the huge forests which are demolished every year, Uncle Sam needs the seeds of the Douglas fir, western yellow pine, Engelmann spruce, lodge pole pine, not by the pound, but literally by the ton.

The government needs men, from two to six weeks every fall, to gather seed. When the call goes out, lumberjacks, college men, hoboes and former convicts drift into the camps and work side by side, gathering huge stores of the precious seeds. Through experience they have found that their richest sources are the cunningly hidden squirrel hoards. The squirrel is canny; he always picks the very best of cones for his winter's store.—The Nation's Business.

An Inward Bent.

Rob Wagner, the movie director, said at a Los Angeles picnic:

"Sometimes I have as many as 500 applications a day. The applicants are of all kinds—heiresses, chambermaids, handsome young ex-bartenders and so forth.

"A chambermaid applied yesterday. She was pretty, but she didn't seem to have any individuality, any temperament.

"'What can you do?' I asked her. 'Haven't you got some special talent or inclination—some bent, as they say?'

"The girl blushed a little.

"'Well, Mr. Wagner,' she said, 'I'm a little bit knockkneed.'"

NERVES GAVE OUT

Serious Kidney Trouble Had Made Life Miserable, But Doan's Removed All the Trouble. Hasn't Suffered Since.

"I had such severe pains in my back," says Mrs. Albert Akroyd, 304 W. Indiana Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa., "that they almost doubled me up. Many a day I could not do my housework and at every move it seemed as if my back would break in two. My feet and ankles swelled until I had to wear large-sized slippers and sometimes I couldn't stand up.

Mrs. Akroyd

"I had dizzy spells and dreadful headaches and fiery flashes passed before my eyes. Had a heavy weight been resting on my head, the pain could not have been more distressing. The least noise startled me, I was so nervous. I couldn't control the kidney secretions and the pain in passage was awful.

"It began to look as though my case was beyond the reach of medicine until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. The first box benefited me and four boxes cured all the trouble. I have had no further cause for complaint."

Sworn to before me.

HAS BUST OF HERODOTUS

Antique in Metropolitan Museum of Art Identified as Portrait of Father of History.

Dr. Robinson, director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, in New York, has identified an antique marble bust, which has been in the museum's storeroom for 20 or 30 years, as being a portrait of Herodotus, "the father of history." The marble, which has lain in dust all these years, will now assume an important place of honor in the institution.

There are but five known portraits of Herodotus. The New York portrait-bust was originally found at Benha, in Lower Egypt, and passed into the possession of Emil Brugsch Bey, from whom it was acquired and presented to the Metropolitan Museum of Arts. The recognition was based on the resemblance of the known portraits and the finding of the learned man's name inscribed upon it. As a work of art it was not very highly regarded, but as the sixth known portrait of Herodotus it assumes new dignity. It is also said to be one of the best portraits extant.

Tit For Tat

Family troubles were aired in the court of Justice of the Peace John Zimmer Friday, when Russel Gratz was fined for using profane language and Claren Phillips was put under a peace bond.

Gratz and Phillips live at Spencerville and they served in the same military company overseas. Phillips is employed by Gratz's brother-in-law, Mr. Gorrell. It seems that Gorrell and his wife have had trouble recently and separated with vorce proceedings in view. Gratz took his sister's part, while Phillips defended Gorrell in the controversy. Gratz claimed that Phillips sent word to him that he intended to "kill" him.

Gratz complained to Prosecutor W. W. Ketcham and Phillips was arrested Friday by Special Constable Chas. Davis. Phillips admitted that he had said he was going to give Gratz a "good licking" but he denied that he had threatened to kill him. The justice decreed that Phillips should be put under a peace bond and Phillips deposited $50 in cash for that purpose.

Then Phillips filed a complaint against Gratz. He said that Gratz had called him out of the Gorrell home and swore at him. Gratz denied the charge, but after hearing the evidence the justice decided Gratz was guilty and he fined him $1 and costs, amounting to $11.75

Gratz was recently indicted by the Allen county grand jury on a charge of being a member of a band of automobile thieves.—Star.

Cow Causes Runaway

The following is taken from the Auburn Star of Monday of this week:

"Two, men, two horses, a cow, a wagon and a boulevard light post figured in a runaway in Auburn Monday afternoon on North Main street. There were no casualties reported, however, and the only first aid treatment that had to be applied was to Ray Reasoner's left hand and the cow's knees and legs.

Mr. Reasoner is the tenant on the Leighty farm north of St. Joe and with Clifton Collins came to Auburn to purchase a cow from Chester Hodge, north of Auburn. The deal was made, the cow placed into a wagon with a calf which was also bought and they started for St. Joe.

They had just rounded the corner on North Main and North street when cow fashion the critter decided it would unload right there and it jumped out. The cow was tied in the wagon and when it jumped it struck Mr. Collins and knocked him off the wagon. Mr. Reasoner was also thrown off but he kept hold of one of the lines. The frightened horses dashed down Main street with the wagon and dragging the cow behind on the hard pavement. Mr. Reasoner held onto the lines until the horses nearly hit an automobile and the lines were cutting his hands so badly that he was forced to let them go. The wagon struck a light post in front of the H. R. Culbertson home and smashed it and was finally stopped in front of the Y. M. C. A. The cow was badly hurt abont the knees and legs from being dragged along the pavement. Dr. D. N. Fitch gave it medical aid."

A Big Reunion

Twenty years ago when the inauguration of the International Live Stock Exposition summoned to Chicago live stock breeders and feeders from even the remote recesses of civilization, the leaders of the trade in an international sense, embraced the opportunity to create a new epoch. During the intervening period many of these have passed from this sphere of usefullness, a new generation profiting by their public spiritedness and the seed they sowed has borne abundant fruit. The 1919 International affords an opportunity for a reunion of the survivors and a demonstration of how well they builded at a critical stage of the industry when public interest was revived in opportune manner. Every man, woman and child enjoying the distinction of attending the 1900 International Live Stock Exposition should embrace the opportunity to participate in the Twentieth Anniversary of that event at Chicago during the first week in December.

Mixed Advice

Editors have their troubles. One of these men, who presides over the destinies of a Western newspaper, is mourning the loss of two subscribers. One wrote asking how to raise his twins safely, while the other wanted to know how he might rid his orchard of grasshoppers. The answers went forward by mail but by accident the editor put them into the wrong envelope, so that the man with the twins received the answer:

"Cover them carefully with straw and set fire to it and then the little pests, after jumping in the flames for a few minutes, will be speedily settled." And the man with the grasshoppers was told to "give castor oil and rub their gums with a bone."—Exchange.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

DANGER IN CLASS-MINDED MAN

Gov. J. P. Goodrich of Indiana, in a recent address welcoming returned world war service men, referring to the steel strike said he believed many of the strikers were foreigners who were unacquainted with the American principles of government.

"This is a government of laws and not of men, or it is not a government at all," he said. "And we have to stand for obedience to law and respect for established institutions. You are not going to see the government torn down by impious hands, which have done nothing to build it up. The institutions of our country are challenged as never before. The great danger today is the class-minded man. He would substitute loyalty to a group to loyalty to the nation.

"I believe in collective bargaining and that men have the right to organize to protect their interests. Some of these labor leaders, I believe, do not represent the great body of labor men. I do not believe that W. Z. Foster and John Fitzpatrick do, and I do not believe that they speak for the intelligent workingman of today."

INLAND CITIES COULD BE BOMBED

Chicago and other cities as far inland could be bombed and wrecked by even two enemy aircraft launched from warships 25 miles off the Atlantic coast, and the present coast defense and aircraft service of the United States could not prevent it. That is what Brig. Gen. William Mitchell, director of military aeronautics, told the house military affairs committee recently.

Graphic indication of Mexican border conditions was given by the witness when he said:

"There is now on the Mexican border an efficient and effective force of 400 combat planes, with 800 in reserve for replacement.

"The army has aboit 4,500 planes that could be put to use, but about one-third of these planes are foreign made and there are no extra parts for repairs. Some 400 planes, mostly obsolete and fit for training purposes only are being shipped home from France." The general told of what is being done for the aerial defense of the country by saying:

"The war department's reorganization plan destroys the air service as a service and offers no inducements for officers to remain permanently in it."

U. S. SHIPS TO CARRY U. S. EXPORTS

Ships are the controlling factor in the development of foreign trade. Before the war only 9.7 per cent of our total exports was carried in American bottoms. It is our hope, if our program is completed, to have sufficient ships to move 50 per cent of our total commerce in American bottoms, writes Edward E. Hurley, chairman U. S. shipping board, in Pan-Pacific Magazine.

We want to put the best American initiative behind the operation of the fleet; we want to get rid of red tape and the possibility of stagnation when moving these ships to the ports where they will carry American trade. But a very large part of the task that confronts the nation can be made easy and practicable if such organizations as the National Foreign Trade council will concentrate in a movement to urge American manufacturers to study the export field. We hear a great deal these days, about what is going to happen to American business when Great Britain and the other nations, supposed to have certain advantages over us, get into full swing. We have heard such doleful predictions many times long before the war.

After three months studying the situation in Europe I have not observed any outstanding advantage which they have over us, either from a production point of view, or a labor point of view, or from the character of products manufactured. This is true not merely of manufacturing, but with reference even to shipbuilding.

We needn't worry much about flank movements from our foreign competitors. They will compete fairly. They understand now, better than ever before, the evil of unfair competition. Germany's commercial system reached the point where it became top-heavy.

RADICALISM IN TEACHERS' RANKS

Warning that unless better pay is forthcoming for teachers in American colleges the nation will be face to face with a dangerous radicalism from the centers of higher education was voiced by Herbert Hoover, former federal food administrator, in an address before the Harvard Club of California at a dinner at San Francisco.

"Out of the war and misery of the war has arisen a silhouette of class distinction and class hatred that is not to be obliterated with a few words," Mr. Hoover said. "The development of radicalism in Europe during the last 12 months is beyond anything in history. America is a fertile field and responds quickly to any wind that may blow. This European wind of radicalism is sweeping our way and it is affecting us.

"In our great universities the instructing and faculty staffs are hard hit by the present economic situation, which, in the face of enormous prosperity, returns something like $7 a day to the educator, while the craftsman who repairs his kitchen sink makes more in fewer hours of work.

"America cannot permit this growing sense of injustice to remain with the nation's educators. There is a menace to the nation's safety in discontent in the background of the university faculty work, and every right-thinking citizen must see it."

SCRAPS of HUMOR

HE WANTED TO KNOW.

A party of Americans was being conducted over the ancient abbey in one of our famous old towns. The learned attendant pointed out the ages of the various parts, and referring to one arch in particular, said, "That arch may possibly go back to William the Conqueror."

"Don't you like it?" promptly asked one of the sightseers.

The attendant signified that he did not understand.

"Well, why are you sending it back, anyway?" was the reply. "Don't it suit you?"—London Tit-Bits.

Something.

The College Boy—Dad, I wish you'd spare me a hundred.

His Father—It's outrageous. You're twenty and you've never made anything for yourself.

The College Boy—Beg pardon, sir, but I always make my own cigarettes.

SOMETHING LEARNED EVERY DAY.

Frank—Poor Jones! He has lost all his money in a wild-cat mining company.

Ethel—Mercy! I didn't know you had to mine for wild cats.

At Rehearsal.

"What ails the sailors' chorus, pray?"
For there was quite a hitch.
The manager replied: "Why, sir,
The tars can't get the pitch!"
—Cartoons Magazine.

Then He Said Good Night.

Mr. Cholly Bore (11:45 p. m.)—Don't you know I could sit by your side forever.

Miss Cutting Hints—Well, at the present sitting it looks as though you intended to.

How Mean of Her.

Mr. Shallowpate—Which do you think counts for most in life—money or brains?

Miss Caustique—I see so many people getting along with so little of either that it's hard to say.

Poor Company.

Joax—You shouldn't judge that man by the company that he keeps.

Hoax—Why?

Joax—He's the warden of the penitentiary.

Very Likely.

Jinks—The paper states that Bilson died from a complication of diseases.

Blinks—That's wrong. He died from a complication of doctors. He had six.

TACT OF WIVES.

Mrs. W.—A tactful wife keeps many little household secrets from her husband.

Mrs. B.—Yes; even the fact that she has all the brains.

Epitaph.

Here lies a miser
Who would not repent;
He died lamenting
His breath must be spent.

Running No Chances.

Wifey—You knew I had friends coming to the house this evening. What do you mean by coming home an hour after they've all gone?

Hubby—I wanted to be sure they'd all left.

May Be So.

Miss Knowsitt—He's very rich now, but I hear he started in life as a grave digger.

Miss Kutting—I guess that's the reason why the daughter is so anxious to have the past buried.

Political Gossip.

"I spoke in favor of good roads."

"And what did your opponent say to that?"

"He immediately spoke in favor of better roads. That fellow is a shrewd, dangerous man."

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 9

PETER'S GREAT CONFESSION.

LESSON TEXT—Matt. 16:13-24.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thou are the Christ, the Son of the living God.—Matt. 16:16.
ADDITIONAL MATERIAL—Mark 8:27-38; Luke 9:18-26; John 6:66-69.
PRIMARY AND JUNIOR TOPIC—What Peter confessed.
INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—What it means to confess Christ.
SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—The Messiahship of Jesus.

The time has now come for the King to take account of his ministry.

This confession in some sense marks the turning point in Christ's ministry. Hereafter it is more restricted to his disciples. Two reasons are sufficient why this should be (vv. 1-12): (1) The Pharisees and Sadducees show their attitude towards him in their demand for a sign. His answer is that none shall be given save that of his death and resurrection, as symbolized in the experiences of the Prophet Jonah. (2) The disciples show their inability to understand the spiritual nature of his teaching. When he warned them of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees they understood him to refer to bread, when he meant their doctrine. It was at this crisis when Christ turned from the nation which had rejected him, that Peter made this great confession. It was made in the borders of Caesarea-Philippi, practically Gentile territory.

I. Peter's Confession (vv. 13-16).

Two questions of Christ provoked this confession:

1. The question as to the opinion of the people concerning him.

They recognized him as a teacher or a prophet of more than human authority and power. Today, as then, there is a diversity of opinion among the people as to Jesus Christ. Some think he is only a man; others, that he is a great teacher, but nothing more. Had he been content with this he would not have been molested in Jerusalem, for the Jews willingly acknowledged him as more than a human teacher. It was his persistent claim to be the God-man, the Son of God, that sent him to the cross.

2. The second question involved the personal opinion of the disciples concerning him. To be able to tell what others think of Jesus is not enough; there must be definite, correct, and personal belief in him.

II. The New Body, the Church, Announced (vv. 17-20).

Peter had made a noble confession of Christ, so now Christ confesses him. If we confess Christ he will confess us (Matt. 10:32, 33). Christ declared his intention of bringing into existence a new body to the members of which he will give eternal life, and to whose hands he will entrust the keys of the Kingdom. Peter was to have a distinguished place in this body. The keys entrusted to him were used on the day of Pentecost, and again in the case of Cornelius. Association in this new body cannot be broken by death, for the gates of hades shall not prevail against it. This body, the church, is of a heavenly origin, a heavenly calling, and a heavenly inheritance.

III. The Cross the Way to the Throne (vv. 21-23).

This was, no doubt, startling to the disciples. They did not realize that redemption was to be accomplished through the passion of the cross. So unwelcome was this announcement that Peter cried, "This shall not be unto thee." Peter later saw through this darkness to the glory on the hilltop beyond. A new hope then filled his breast (1 Peter 1:3, 4). Victory through death is yet the stumbling block of many. Many are stumbling over the doctrine of salvation and redemption through the suffering of the cross. All such are under the control of the devil (v. 23). Salvation by blood; the devil hates.

IV. The Cost of Discipleship (vv. 24-27).

To follow Christ means suffering. To follow him is to turn one's back upon the world. Life can only be saved by losing it. If we are going to be Christians we must share Christ's suffering. We cannot go to heaven on flowery beds of ease.

1. There must be denial of self (v. 24). There is a wide difference between self-denial and denial of self. Self-denial is practiced everywhere by all people, but only the disciples of Christ or Christian people deny self. Christ takes the place of self.

2. "Take up his cross." This cross is the suffering and shame which lie in the path of loyalty to God. To do our duty will mean suffering (2 Tim. 3:12).

3. Follow Christ. This means to have the mind of Christ, to do like Christ. All such shall be rewarded when Christ comes in glory.

Christian Character.

One truly Christian life will do more to prove the divine origin of Christianity than many lectures. It is of much greater importance to develop Christian character than to exhibit Christian evidences.—J. M. Gibson.

Our Life in God's Hands.

Happy and strong and brave shall we be—able to endure all things, and to do all things—if we believe that every day, every hour, every moment of our life is in God's hands.—Dr. Van Dyke.

I turned my eyes over the sea—I could move them, at all events; how gloriously it was shining out there! And here was I, helpless, with arms extended, as one crucified. I closed my eyes in anguish, and let my body relax; perhaps I dosed, or perhaps I fainted—but, suddenly, what was that that aroused me, summoned me back to life? It seemed a short, sharp sound of firing! I opened my eyes and looked out to sea, and then I gave a great cry:

"Calypso! Calypso!" I cried. "Calypso!" and it seemed as though a giant's strength were in me—that I could rend the rocks apart. I made a mighty effort, and, whether or not my relaxing had made a readjustment of my position, I found that for some reason I could move forward again, and, with one desperate wriggle, I had my head through the narrow space. To wrench my shoulders and legs after it was comparatively easy, and, in a moment, I was safe on the outer side, where, as I had surmised, the aperture did widen out again. Within a few moments, I was on the edge of the sea, had dived, and was swimming madly toward—

But let me tell what I had seen, as I hung there, so helpless, in that crevice in the rocks.

CHAPTER IX.

Action.

I had seen, close in shore, a two-masted schooner under full sail sweeping by, as if pursued, and three negroes kneeling on deck, with leveled rifles. As I looked, a shot rang out, from my right, where I could not see, and one of the negroes rolled over. Another shot, and the negro next him fell sprawling with his arms over the bulwark.

At that moment, two other negroes emerged from the cabin hatchway, half dragging and half carrying a woman. She was struggling bravely, but in vain. The negroes—evidently acting under orders of a white man, who stood over them with a revolver—were dragging her toward the main mast. Her head was bare, her hair in disorder, and one shoulder from which her dress had been torn in the struggle, gleamed white in the sunlight. Yet her eyes were flashing splendid scornful fires at her captors; and her laughter of defiance came ringing to me over the sea. It was then that I had cried "Calypso!" and wrenched myself free.

The next moment there came dashing in sight a sloop also under full canvas, and at its bow, a huge white man, with a leveled rifle that still smoked. At a glance, I knew him for Charlie Webster. He had been about to fire again, but, as the man dragged Calypso for'ard, he paused, calm as a rock, waiting, with his keen sportsman's eyes on Tobias—for, of course, it was he.

"You—coward!" I heard his voice roar across the rapidly diminishing distance between the two boats, for the sloop was running with power as well as sails.

Meanwhile, the men had lashed Calypso to the mast, and even in my agony my eyes recorded the glory of her beauty as she stood proudly there—the great sails spread above her, and the sea for her background.

"Now, do your worst," cried Tobias, his evil face white as wax in the sunlight.

"Fire, fire—don't be afraid," rang out Calypso's voice, like singing gold. At the same instant, as she called Tobias sprang toward her with raised revolver.

"Another word, and I fire," shouted the voice of the brute.
